There is absolutely no need for this revolutionary legislation, as the President now has the power under the flexible provision of the present tariff law to raise or lower existing rates by 50 percent. Surely no sane person will contend that the present law contains rates that should be lowered by so much as even 25 percent. As I view it much of our present unemployment and low commodity prices are altogether due to imports from abroad and to stimulate importations at this particular time through reciprocal trade agreements would only make matters worse and that is the last thing we should think of doing when we should bend every energy toward recapturing the American market for the American farmer and laboring man.

Mr. Speaker, I assume that under the proposed arrangement we will have a new set-up to be known as the International Trade Authority, with an administrator at its head. It will probably be known as the I.T.A. Let us see how it will operate: First, suitable quarters must be provided, and a permanent bureau of the Government will be moved out of its present quarters and into some fire trap on Sixth Street to make room for the new brain child. Stenographers, messengers, typewriters, filing cabinets, dictaphones, etc., must be provided. These acquired and the new bureau—pardon me, but I had forgotten for the moment that the term bureau is taboo under the new deal—authority, which does not cost so much to operate as does a bureau and will not be associated with increased governmental expenditures, is ready to operate. Now, we are all set for business, and the administrator sends for the Ambassador of Bergentina and the following dialogue takes place:

"ADMINISTRATOR. Mr. Ambassador, we would like very much to stimulate commerce between our countries and the President of the United States is prepared to make you some very substantial concessions in the way of preferential-trade treatment to attain that objective. You need automobiles, farm machinery, railroad equipment, radios, telephones, and what not. These we are prepared to supply in unlimited quantities. We want you to let the bars down so that commerce between us will be stimulated.

"AMBASSADOR. Your objective is most laudable, mi buen amigo, but what about our surpluses? We have more cattle, hogs, sheep, butter, casein, and corn than we know what to do with, and under your detestable Republican tariff law we experience difficulty in selling to you.

"ADMINISTRATOR. Under the new deal all peoples are brothers. We will have the A.A.A. restrict production in the things of which you have a surplus and you can then ship your surpluses into our country in proportion to our reduction, and if we find that the reduction ordered is not sufficient we will make yet greater reductions. What say you?

"AMBASSADOR. Muy bien. Muchas gracias, señor. Adios."

(Exit ambassador.)

(Enter Andrussian Ambassador.)

"AMBASSADOR. Good morning, Drug.

"ADMINISTRATOR. Good morning, Comrade. I cannot express adequately my deep satisfaction in resumption of diplomatic and trade relations between our countries which are daily having more and more in common, but my dear Comrade, we are not getting that volume of business from you that we anticipated when we resumed the relations that were interrupted back yonder. You are rapidly expanding and will need enormous quantities of machinery, railroad equipment, autos, trucks, radios over which you can educate the masses, and soon our domestic production of vodka will catch up with the demand of a people who thirsted for 13 years, and then we will be able to supply your needs along that line. As I said a moment ago, our countries have much in common. Let us enter into closer reciprocal trade relations. We will more than meet you half way as we always have. We will permit you to ship us matches, pulp, and print paper, iron ores, manganese, flax, copper, oils, timber and lumber, furs, etc. What say you, Drug?

"AMBASSADOR. I want to be perfectly frank, Comrade; we cannot buy for cash.

"ADMINISTRATOR. Comrade, let us not talk of such sordid things as money. Under the new deal you will need no money. We will furnish it.

"AMBASSADOR. You are aware that already the American match manufacturer has protested against Andrussian and Hopiganese matches which cost the domestic maker 78 cents per gross to manufacture, but which we can lay down in your country for 38 cents the gross. You are also aware, Comrade, that we can greatly undersell you in lumber, manganese, wheat, oil, pulp and print paper. What will the workers in these lines say to your admitting our products into this country and how will you take care of the tens of thousands of American workers who will be thrown out of employment under our arrangement?

"ADMINISTRATOR. They will have to go into other activities where they can compete. Under the new deal there will be no artificial tariff barriers. Our motto will be, 'Swim or sink.' If they cannot compete with other countries it will be just too bad.

"AMBASSADOR. Comrade, I cannot describe to you the ineffable happiness that will pervade all Andrussia when I send them the glad tidings of the open door in America. This is the greatest step toward universal brotherhood that has yet been taken. It is more than a new deal, it is the dawn of a new era. Only one inspired could have conceived such a glorious program. I must hasten and cable my government the good news. Good day."

(Exit Ambassador.)

"ADMINISTRATOR. Ho-hum, I have done enough business for one day. Guess I'll run over to the International Club for a highball and some bridge."

(Exit Administrator.)

(Next day, same scene.)

"ADMINISTRATOR (to messenger who enters on summons of buzzer). Who is without?

"MESSENGER. You mean without money, sir?

"ADMINISTRATOR. Blazes, no; I mean who is waiting to see me?

"MESSENGER. The Minister from Zneezokia, sir.

"ADMINISTRATOR. Admit him.

"MINISTER. Mr. Administrator, I have long awaited this happy moment when your glorious country should again show its noble heart. Last evening I heard of your doors having been opened to the poor and downtrodden producers of other lands. Truly, none but the generous American would do such a noble act. I have cabled my government to inform our manufacturers of shoes, glassware and crockery, toys, jewelry, and other things that under the new deal the hateful American protective tariff system is a thing of the past. Mr. Administrator, my heart is filled to the overflowing with gratitude and my eyes are suffused with tears of joy. Now, sir, what will you expect from us in return?

"ADMINISTRATOR. We would like to ship to you some of our surplus farm products, such as beef, pork, wheat, and corn."

"MINISTER. But can you sell these products in our market in competition with Russia, Argentina, and Australia? If so, we will be most happy to give you a part of our business, which, unfortunately, is not very great, for we are a frugal and industrious people, as any of the workers in your shoe factories and glass and crockery plants can attest. But I am sure we can work out a satisfactory solution, and to show our gratitude I am today recommending to my government that after we have secured your market we pay you a few thousand dollars on our debt as a token of our appreciation of your having opened your doors to the poor toilers of my country. I shall also recommend to my government that it bestow upon yourself and your magnificent coworkers in the vineyard of internatitonal good will and unrestricted commerce the illustrious order of the Cat and the Fiddle. Shall we consider that a trade treaty has already been negotiated, sir?

"ADMINISTRATOR. You may.

"AMBASSADOR. May Heaven bless you and your great country. Good day."

(Exit Minister.)

(Messenger announces Libyian Ambassador, who enters wreathed in smiles.)

"AMBASSADOR. Ah, mi amigo. I am the happiest of mortals.

"ADMINISTRATOR. Sit down and tell me about it.

"AMBASSADOR. When your government raised the sugar allotment of Libyia you conferred a boon upon my people and, incidentally, you greatly helped your international bankers who own most of our sugar mills and plantations. Under the open-door policy that you have announced, may we not confidently look forward to the entire American sugar market? Surely, we can give you advantages in return that will compensate you for your generosity. Let your cane and sugar-beet growers go into dairying and sheep and livestock.

"ADMINISTRATOR. Mr. Ambassador, we are in a tough spot so far as sugar goes. Such sugar-beet States as Michigan, Minnesota, South Dakota, Utah, Colorado, Wyoming, Nebraska, Idaho, Montana, and California went Democratic in 1932. We have already restricted their 1934 production as much as we dare in order to help you market your sugar. You must realize there is another election just around the corner, and then, too, we must not lose sight of 1936. Understand, I am not unsympathetic, but we must be practical. However, I am satisfied that we can work out something that will be mutually satisfactory. We have already suggested a processing tax on sugar, of which we only produce a small part of our needs, with a view to further reducing the domestic production. Take it from me, señor, we will do everything we can to help you market your sugar crop. Maybe we can take a few million more acres of beet land out of production, but for Heaven's sake, no publicity. For very obvious reasons we have not seen each other.

"AMBASSADOR. Comprendo. Adios, señor."

(Messenger announces ambassador from Hipigon.)

"AMBASSADOR. Mr. Administrator, is it true that under the new deal you will permit our products to come into your country without restriction?

"ADMINISTRATOR. Under the new deal all men are brothers. There is to be no color line, except for the Negro, and he is a domestic problem that we know how to handle. We have a very high regard for your people and we will do everything within our power to meet your wishes, but how about the practical angle? You folks are raising Cain with our domestic manufacturers and they are putting plenty of heat under us these days, but for your confidential information let me assure you that we are not going to baby these birds who cannot go out into the world market and stand on their own two feet. We want to develop a rugged individualism so far as commerce goes and from now on there will be no babying of infant industries.

"AMBASSADOR. Mr. Administrator, you are a great statesman. It is indeed unfortunate for my country that there are not more Americans like you. My government will confer upon you the Order of the Setting Moon as soon as I can communicate with my master. Again I thank you. Good day."

(Ambassador from Evadeland announced.)

"ADMINISTRATOR. Bonjour, Monsieur. We are always happy to see the representative of the country that dragged us into the war, borrowed our money, and had the courage to tell us to go and jump in the ocean when we ask for payment. The people of Evadeland have long been known for their ability to cut corners, and I'll tell the cockeyed world she plays no favorites in failing to pay her debts and obligations. Now, Monsieur, what can we do for you?

"AMBASSADOR. Well, we could use another loan, but I presume that is out of the question until the American people become more reasonable. What I really came to see you about is the California wine industry, which is assuming such proportions as to endanger the wine industry of la belle Evadeland. I am wondering if we could not work out a plan under your Agricultural Adjustment Administration to have the California vineyard acreage planted to wheat, cotton, alfalfa, or some other crop that will not interfere with us. Surely, Monsieur, that is not asking too much. I understand much of that land is peculiarly adapted to the raising of fine cotton and alfalfa and the rest of it is marginal land that should not be used for crops at all. Under my plan it would obviate the necessity of your railroads hauling thousands of cars of grapes and permit them to use their refrigerator cars where they are less needed. We love your country and are proud to have been present at your cradle. We have conferred thousands and thousands of decorations upon your bankers, your molders of public opinion, and to those who rebuilt our devastated areas after the war. Surely it is not asking too much in return that we be permitted to continue to supply you with our choice vintages.

"ADMINISTRATOR. Monsieur, the deuce of it is that your country isn't so hot over here just now, but be patient. I am sure that we will be able to work out something that will be entirely agreeable to you and your government. We have a number of obstacles to overcome, one being that group of Americans who suffer from an exaggerated love of country, also that bunch of damphools who expect you to pay your honest debt to us. As for another loan at this time, I think we'd better let that rest until after the congressional election.

"AMBASSADOR. Mr. Administrator, you are what your countrymen call a 'peach.' I shall remind you of this next winter. Adieu, mon ami, you are a great friend of Evadeland."

(Messenger announces Ambassador from Utopia.)

"AMBASSADOR. Good morning, Mr. Administrator. Is it really true that you have opened your doors to the products of the poor down-trodden farmers of my country? I was told so at the International Club a moment ago.

"ADMINISTRATOR. It is. It is our desire to bring about an era of international good will and unrestricted commerce between the nations of the earth. Of course, it must not be entirely one-sided, and therefore we shall expect certain concessions in return. You produce vast quantities of butter, eggs, poultry, cattle and hogs, grains, and other agricultural crops, and we understand that you have a large surplus in each. We will undertake to effect a substantial curtailment in the domestic production of those products of which you have an exportable surplus and permit you to ship such surpluses to us. In return we would expect to sell you farm machinery, autos, radios, steel, rails and railroad equipment, and some lumber. I know that your country is having financial difficulties, but we will arrange the necessary credit for you through the I.B.A.

"AMBASSADOR (nervously). Would we be expected to eventually pay such obligations? My government would be most reluctant to renege a second time on obligations we owe your government, although I may remind you that necessity knows no law.

"ADMINISTRATOR. That is a bridge we will cross when we come to it. Why borrow trouble unnecessarily?

"AMBASSADOR. I fail to find words to adequately express my feelings. Let us go over to the International Club and properly celebrate this great and momentous occasion. My government will gladly pay for the drinks."

(Exit Administrator and Ambassador.)

My friends, this little sketch may sound unreal and fantastic, but I assure you that it is not. There is hardly a man or woman within the confines of continental United States but will be adversely affected by the enactment of this legislation. It will result in greatly increased importations of commodities of all kinds that we can and should produce at home. In normal times we consume 93 percent of all that we produce. Why all this concern about the 7-percent foreign market, the credit of which is in most instances doubtful?

If we negotiate a trade treaty with Argentina, which is altogether agricultural, we must of necessity give more favorable treatment to her exports of cattle, hogs, beef, butter, corn, and wheat. How can that possibly help agriculture, which is the basic industry of our Nation?

If we enter into reciprocal trade agreements with Japan, Czechoslovakia, and Russia, it will mean the absolute ruination of many American industries which now give employment to millions of Americans who pay taxes, consume American products, and support our institutions. How can that possibly help solve our unemployment problem?

This program of curtailing domestic production, in hope of raising prices of our farm products, without first providing protection against competitive substitutes, can only result in the American farmer being again and again forced to reduce his production until he will finally be driven out of business.

Is there anyone within the sound of my voice who will seriously contend that we will stimulate industry, reduce unemployment, and promote prosperity by buying more abroad and producing less at home? Such reasoning is so fallacious as to make further discussion of the subject needless and unprofitable and a complete waste of time. What is needed is to preserve the American market for the products of American farms and factories in order to keep the wheels of our own industries turning and to provide employment for our own people.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that leave of absence be granted the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DARROW] on account of illness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by inserting an analysis of the veterans' legislation contained in the independent offices appropriation bill, prepared by the Veterans' Administration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following analysis prepared by the Veterans' Administration:

Gen. Frank T. Hines, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, announced today that the Veterans' Administration is taking immediate action to make the veterans' provisions of the Independent Offices Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1935, passed by the Congress over the President's veto, effective in all respects as soon as possible. Primary consideration is being given to those persons who were removed from the rolls by reason of the provisions of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, whose rights to benefits are reestablished by the new law. In all cases where it is possible to restore pension or compensation without the necessity of an administrative review, such action is being taken. Immediate attention is also being given to those groups of cases wherein a review of evidence is required before a determination may be made under the new legislation in order that an adjudication may be accomplished with the least possible delay to the veterans and their dependents.

It is estimated that approximately 330,000 World War veterans, 180,600 Spanish War veterans, and 34,900 dependents of Spanish War veterans will be affected by this legislation. It is further estimated that the increased cost of these changes will be approximately $83,000,000 on an annual basis.

Section 26 of the new law reinstates the former compensation rates for totally blind World War veterans, except where the veteran is being furnished hospital care by the Government and except as to cases involving fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation.

Section 27 provides for the payment of compensation to those persons who on March 19, 1933, had established service connection under section 200 of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and reenacts the provisions of that section as to such cases, except where the person entered the service subsequent to November 11, 1918, where clear and unmistakable evidence discloses that the disease, injury, or disability had inception before or after the period of service, unless there was aggravation, or where the prior service connection had been established by fraud, clear or unmistakable error or misrepresentation, but, as to all cases embraced by these three exceptions, all reasonable doubt is to be resolved in favor of the veteran and the burden of proof is to be upon the Government. The payment is to be at 75 percent of the amount payable in such cases on March 19, 1933.

Section 28 provides for the restoration of the World War rates in effect on March 19, 1933, for service-connected disability, except that reduction is permitted in accordance with regulations pertaining to payment of pension to men in hospitals. It perpetuates the rating schedule in effect on March 19, 1933, under which ratings are based as far as practicable upon the average impairment of earning capacity in civil occupations similar to the occupation of the veteran at time of enlistment. It further provides for service connection in death cases for the widows and children of those veterans who died prior to the enactment of the new act and who, if living, would be in a position to reestablish service connection thereunder.

The limitations as to receipt of pension and salary by Government employees and as to the 50 percent reduction of benefits while any person entitled thereto resides outside the continental limits of the United States are not for application in these cases.

Section 29 amends section 6 of the Economy Act of March 20, 1933, as amended, by adding a proviso authorizing hospitalization or domiciliary care within the limitations existing in Veterans' Administration facilities of any veteran of any war not dishonorably discharged who is suffering from disability, disease, or defect, and who is in need of hospitalization or domiciliary care, and is unable to defray the necessary expense therefor, including transportation to and from the institution. It provides that the statement under oath of the applicant as to his inability to pay for the service sought shall be accepted as sufficient.

Section 30 provides as to those veterans of the Spanish-American War who entered service on or before August 12, 1898, and persons who served in the Boxer rebellion or Philippine insurrection, who were on the rolls March 19, 1933, receiving pension for disability or age by virtue of the new law are entitled to receive not less than 75 percent of the pension being paid them on March 19, 1933, subject to the limitation requiring exemption from Federal income tax and as to Federal employees, the limitation that not more than $6 per month can be paid such employees, if his salary, if single, exceeds $1,000 or, if married, $2,500. The provisions pertaining to payment of pension to men in hospitals as established under Public, No. 2, and the veterans' regulations are applicable to these cases. The benefits of this amendment do not extend to disabilities resulting from willful misconduct. The limitation as to the 50 percent reduction of benefits while any person entitled thereto resides outside the continental limits of the United States is not for application in these cases.

Section 31 reestablishes the provisions of section 213 of the World War Veterans' Act, whereby a person who is injured as a result of training, hospitalization, or medical or surgical treatment or examination is awarded compensation on the same basis as if the condition were incurred in the military or naval service. The application must be made within 2 years after the injury or aggravation or death, or after the passage of the act, whichever is the later date.

Section 32 repeals the last sentence of section 9 of the economy act, which barred persons in receipt of benefits from participating in any determination or decision with respect to claims for benefits.

Section 33 changes the title of payments to be made in service-connected cases of World War veterans from "pension" to "compensation."

Section 34 provides that payments shall be effective from date of passage of the act.

Section 35 provides for the payment of those insurance claims which have been determined to be payable prior to, but in which payment has not commenced on, March 19, 1933.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. ARNOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD]?

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, and personally I shall not object, but may I say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, for example, is considering in executive session very important legislation. I understand that one of the resolutions or bills which is likely to be brought up under suspension of the rules tomorrow is a resolution reported by that committee. I wonder if the gentleman has consulted with the chairman of that committee?

Mr. ARNOLD. I have not consulted with the chairman of the committee. I am making this unanimous-consent request at the suggestion of the majority leader.

Mr. MAPES. As far as I am concerned, I do not feel called upon to object if those in authority desire to meet at that hour.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] to the fact that among the bills to be taken up tomorrow under suspension of the rules is a bill that will cost this Government $10,000,000, a private bill, that ought not to be passed, and we ought to have plenty of time tomorrow to carefully consider that bill on its merits. I feel sure the gentleman will be one of those to help stop that bill when it comes up. We ought to meet in plenty of time, so that we will not be hurried.

Mr. RICH. What bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BLANTON. It is the only $10,000,000 bill that is coming up under suspension.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARNOLD]?

There was no objection.

THE TRUTH ABOUT THE VETERANS' RELIEF LEGISLATION

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the veterans' legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH]?

There was no objection.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, there has been considerable furor evident in the editorials of the big newspapers of the country denouncing Members of Congress who voted to override the Presidential veto and enact the compromise legislation for relief of veterans with war service-connected disabilities and those whose disabilities are presumed to have been incident to their war service.

The actual amount of money involved between the proposals of the President and this compromise legislation is estimated to amount to less than $20,000,000. There is practically no difference in the benefits provided for the Spanish War veterans and the presumptive cases, the main difference being for the direct service-connected cases. However, there is obviously a false impression of the cost and purposes of this veteran relief legislation. This is probably due to the propaganda that has been issued from the White House and carried in a large part of the press throughout the country, so that people back home have been led to believe that a very much larger sum of money was involved and that the Congress was trying to place back on the rolls non-service-connected veterans. There is absolutely no foundation for such propaganda.

There evidently is a complete misunderstanding of the overwhelming vote of the Congress in overriding the Presidential veto, as I have received a number of letters condemning my vote and confusing it with the vote on the bonus bill, which I opposed. It is only fair to remember that the Congress was trying to right a wrong and remedy an injustice done the veterans with war service-connected disabilities whose compensation was cut a year ago by Presidential regulations, and to restore those benefits to the bona fide disabled, particularly in view of the debasing of the dollar to 59 cents and the efforts of Congress to increase the cost of the necessities of life, such as food and clothing, which have gone up approximately 15 percent within the last year.

The inference that the Budget is being unbalanced by the compromise veteran relief legislation is an absurdity when it is considered that the present administration has deliberately unbalanced the Budget by some $8,000,000,000 this year, and more billions are in prospect of being doled out for radical and socialistic experiments in the near future.

I deplore the attacks on the American Legion, which has been most reasonable, in spite of all propaganda to the contrary in the public press, in its advocacy of a fair deal toward the disabled veterans. The compromise legislation omitted entirely any benefits for widows and orphans for World War veterans, which was originally asked for by the Legion, and the Legion at no time this year has asked the Congress to support the bonus bill. It is well to remember in these days of radicalism tending toward a social and economic revolution that the American Legion is a bulwark not only for law and order but for the maintenance of the Federal Constitution and our American ideals and principles of government.

RELIEF AND RECOVERY, BUT NOT REVOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the special order of the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] for 15 minutes.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, my thesis in this address is simply this: I am for relief and recovery, but not for revolution.

By a great majority, in 1932 the voters of the United States intrusted the Democratic Party with the task of lifting our country out of the depression which still casts its shadow over every civilized nation in the world.

On taking office in March 1933, the President outlined a program of relief and recovery for which he asked the support of Congress. In the belief that it was my duty as a citizen, I have given my support to all relief measures proposed by the administration and to a majority of those directed toward recovery.

In the administration's program of recovery, conditions obtaining in the year 1926, when Mr. Coolidge was in power, were set as the objective and standard of recovery. In March of that year I had the honor to address this House on the subject of America's Economic Revolution. I had come fresh from years of service in the great industries of the country, where I had been striving to put into practical application certain social principles in which I believed then and in which I believe now.

My fundamental proposition was that social progress consists of the increasing participation of more and more people in more and more of the good things of life. I believed then, as I do now, that the chief organ of civilization in effectuating this principle is organized industry. I believed then, as I believe now, that the central economic problem of our age is how to achieve a just distribution of wealth and that this just distribution is best made possible by a high wage level, which means, of course, profitable prices for the production of farm labor.

It cannot be denied that in the year 1926 the United States of America had reached a level of economic comfort and a wide-spread distribution of wealth among the masses of men never even dreamed of, let alone achieved by any other society in the history of the world. In that year our Nation's wealth was estimated to be around three hundred and fifty billions. The production of our manufacturing industries reached a total of more than sixty billions, with salaries and wages paid by all branches of industry amounting to the enormous total of forty billions.

Our foreign trade amounted to some nine billions a year. American farmers received an average of a billion dollars a month for the productions of their toil and soil.

In that year many of our great industrial leaders had awakened to the truth that mass consumption is an absolute necessity in a mass-production age. This established the first reason for high wages widely distributed. Perhaps unconsciously there was developing a great Nation-wide movement to cure the evils of the capitalistic system by making more capitalists.

It may be asked why the happy conditions of that year did not perpetuate themselves. My answer to that question is twofold. First, there was spreading over the world, but had not yet cast its blighting shadow over our Nation, a wave of fear caused by the inevitable economic collapse due to the wastage of the World War. And here at home our people failed to develop the moral qualities which are even more necessary to sustain prosperity than to meet adversity. As a result, there set in a rapidly developing moral collapse manifesting itself in every walk of our American life and reaching its supreme expression in the crash of 1929.

Wherever it is practical and in accord with the principles and ideals of our American Constitution and our American life I am in favor of having our Government render assistance in the process of economic recovery. But we must remember that our economic structure was not made. It grew. It is the unconscious complex result of the discipline and toil of countless millions of our people working through a century and a half as individuals and in cooperation. It is a vital organism like a tree or a family. Every vital organism contains within itself the powers necessary for its regeneration and recovery in times of sickness and reaction. The doctor cannot cure, he can only diagnose, stimulate, nourish, and where surgical operation is indicated remove obstruction. After he has done that, unless the patient has within himself a sufficient power of recuperation, he will surely die.

So with our great economic and industrial organization. The giant, the most magnificent and powerful the world has ever seen, lies prostrate. I believe he has within himself still unused mighty energies of recovery. Insofar as the Government acts as the doctor, its activities may be legitimate, but I believe the time is here when the patient is ready to stand up and move out to his duties again. If instead of wrapping him in the grave clothes of hastily conceived theoretical and unworkable legislation, we drive the quacks out of the sick room and loose him and let him go, I am firmly of the faith that we shall see in the early future a real economic recovery.

If the President's program consisted of these two great objectives alone—relief and recovery—there would be small cause for the growing spirit of alarm and anxiety which manifests itself today among all classes in an increasing degree throughout the country.

We are, however, confronted with a third objective, sometimes called "reform", sometimes called "revolution." Because this program of revolution is so wrapped in uncertainty as to its origin, so contradictory in its announced policies and objectives, so unconstitutional and un-American in its plans and purposes, both relief and recovery are in serious danger of a set-back amounting to a national calamity. This program of revolution is not contained in the Democratic nor in the Republican platforms of 1932. It was not dreamed of by the outstanding leaders of the Democratic Party in March 1933, and it is alien to the best thought and leadership of both political parties.

We need to recall exactly what is going on in the world. The objective toward which the civilizing process has moved through the ages is the freedom of man. Not of one man or a few men, but of all men in all nations. After centuries of struggle in most civilized countries man achieved freedom to think, freedom to worship, and recently freedom to vote.

Today in every civilized nation the masses of men are fixing their attention upon one new objective—namely, how to achieve economic freedom. And this objective must be attained if civilization is to endure.

The common enemy of the civilized world today is economic poverty. Even a generation ago, to suggest the possibility of finally eliminating economic poverty would have been a fantastic dream. Not so now. Science has given man dominion over the forces and resources of nature so that our productive capacity is easily equal to the task of furnishing every human being with an abundance of material things. Our problem is no longer the problem of production; it is the problem of distribution.

There has lined up in the world a twofold approach to this problem. In Europe it has been definitely decided by the leading continental countries that this problem cannot be solved except by the sacrifice of religious, intellectual, and political freedom.

Italy, under its great and able dictator, is just now abandoning political government and assuming the form of corporate government.

A dictator rules for the moment in Germany, and who can deny that his proposals for economic freedom involve the complete disappearance of intellectual, religious, and political liberty?

Russia is not and has not been, under the Communists, a political state. The dictatorship of the proletariat scrapped the political state and erected in its place an economic structure. In this process not only has political liberty been destroyed but religion itself is being ruthlessly uprooted. There is no such thing in Russia as freedom of thought and speech, and political liberty is unknown.

The question before the American people is not now a question as between political parties and geographic sections or financial interests. The central question that confronts the American people today is simply this: Can we achieve economic liberty for the masses of men and at the same time preserve in their entirety the political, the spiritual, and the intellectual liberties under which we have become the greatest, most prosperous, and happiest people in the world?

Because I believe this to be the most central and vital problem now before the American people, I am deeply disturbed over the so-called "reform proposals" of mysterious origin, but bearing Executive sanction, which seek to take shape in legislation. In the interest of our common country, I believe it is the duty of the present administration, with the support of both political parties and all sections and interests, to turn away for the present from these grandiose un-American schemes of reform or revolution and confine our attention to the two problems of relief and recovery. When once more our unemployed have been put back to earn a living for themselves, when our farmers have reached a reasonable economic security and our industries and financial institutions have begun to function normally, then, if reform or revolution seems a necessity, the people themselves ought to have the right by their vote, after full education and discussion, to decide what form the new revolution shall take.

The next great alinement of public opinion in this country, in my judgment, will take the form of a contest between American-minded citizens and Russian-minded citizens, Between those who believe that we can become economically free and still retain our American ideals of political freedom and those who believe that we must purchase economic freedom by the sacrifice of every other form of liberty that has blessed the world.

Whatever this alleged revolution may mean, it has demonstrated that it includes at least two great fallacies. First of these fallacies is the attempt to ignore or avoid the struggle for existence by legislative enactment. If this were possible for the human race, it would be the only instance among all vital organisms where the price of progress is not found in continuous struggle.

A second fallacy is the idea that we can substitute the authority of a bureaucracy for the control of personal conscience and the guidance of individual intelligence in the daily life of the people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] has expired.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. EATON. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Members for their very courteous attention.

If we are to stumble on through this fog of uncertainty which is falling like a pall over the Nation, it must be self-evident to every Member of this House that we will soon have to have an entirely different political set-up. The Constitution under which we have prospered will have to be amended or completely destroyed. This House represents the greatest single political achievement in the history of the English-speaking race, namely, the right of the people to govern themselves and to tax themselves. If the American people are now ready to renounce this right, ready to declare that they are incapable of self-government, ready to turn themselves over to the control of a dictatorship or a bureaucracy, then the function of Members of this body must undergo a radical change. It will not be necessary for us to legislate or appropriate moneys or levy taxes. That will be done by the bureaucracy. We will become a sort of attorney for the people. Each Member will have to have an expert in his office to study the thousands of bills handed to us by our rulers, in their effect upon the individual citizen, upon his business, upon his personal liberties. And especially will we have to have experts to deal with the bureaucracy in behalf of individual citizens dissatisfied with the share of the common wealth doled out to them.

I cannot close this hasty sketch of the problems confronting the American people without declaring my invincible belief that our central need today is not economic, not political, urgent as these are. Our central need is moral and intellectual. We must derive from some source a new spiritual concept of the duties as well as the rights and dignities of men, whether they be great or small, rich or poor. If we can achieve this, we shall find an abundant resource of wisdom and character to solve all our problems and to carry our great and glorious country steadily forward in its place of leadership among the nations of the world. [Applause.]

At this point I wish to include a paragraph from an address by Daniel Webster on the one hundredth anniversary of Washington's Birthday:

Other misfortunes may be borne or their effects overcome. If disastrous wars should sweep our commerce from the ocean, another generation may renew it; if it exhaust our Treasury, future industry may replenish it; if it desolate and lay waste our fields, still, under a new cultivation, they will grow green again and ripen to future harvests. It were but a trifle even if the walls of yonder Capitol were to crumble, if its lofty pillars should fall, and its gorgeous decorations be all covered by the dust of the valley. All these may be rebuilt. But who shall reconstruct the fabric of demolished government? Who shall rear again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty? Who shall frame together the skillful architecture which unites national sovereignty with State rights, individual security, and public prosperity? No; if these columns fall, they will be raised not again. Like the Colosseum and the Parthenon, they will be destined to a mournful and a melancholy immortality. Bitterer tears, however, will flow over them than were ever shed over the monuments of Roman or Grecian art; for they will be the monuments of a more glorious edifice than Greece or Rome ever saw—the edifice of constitutional American liberty.

The great civilizations of the past which crumbled into ruin fell because they lacked spiritual and intellectual resources to support their material superstructure. Thus far our beloved country has possessed the wisdom and character among its people to solve every problem and meet every crisis. I believe we now possess the resources of brains and character to solve the problem of economic poverty without laying in the dust the glorious fabric of our political institutions. And believing this, I face the future firm in the faith that the American people will never surrender their liberties to any dictatorship, however specious and alluring its appeal. [Applause.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on tomorrow I am going to take up, under suspension of the rules, the Rankin-Norris resolution to authorize the Federal Power Commission to gather and publish power rates throughout the country.

The startling revelations that are being made today not only in the States of New York and Tennessee but in every other State where the activities of the power interests are being investigated, render it more imperative than ever that this information be made available to the American people.

I do not wish to take up the time of the House today, but time for debate tomorrow will be limited. I have some information I should like to give to the Members of the House; and I, therefore, ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point and to include a short quotation on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman mean by short quotations? How much space will it take in the RECORD?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall read the only quotation I desire to insert, and then I shall not have to insert it by unanimous consent. The gentleman has no objection to my own remarks, has he?

Mr. RICH. Certainly not; we like to hear from the gentleman.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to show, Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the power interests with reference to investigations; and I think I can say without boasting that there is no man in the House more familiar with their activities than I am. I am down there right in the midst of their operations; I have been fighting them for a long time and have fought them successfully.

We read in this morning's Washington Herald that Mr. John T. Mange, president of the Associated Gas & Electric System—carefully counseled the vice president to "limit the number of references so that the people called upon will be as few as possible", adding:

"And for God's sake, leave me out."

And again later on Mange wrote:

"I should avoid expressing opinions or giving advice just as far as I possibly could."

Hopson wrote Mange:

"Please note the testimony of Mr. Carlisle (chairman of the Niagara-Hudson Power Corporation). Undoubtedly, during the coming week some of us will also be summoned to testify and we will be asked questions about what we are doing with respect to the reduction of rates and the like.

ATTITUDE ASKED

"What do you think our attitude should be toward this sort of questioning? Should we express complete ignorance of what is being done by the hydroelectric commission in Canada? Should we get up an elaborate lot of data on all kinds of subjects to spout into the RECORD, as was done by Carlisle?"

They want to keep the people in the dark on the subject of power and light rates; and in order to do so, they propose to express complete ignorance of what is being done by the hydroelectric commission in Canada.

They have also pretended ignorance of the power rates in Canada and elsewhere, rather than give the people the information that would inform them as to what electric power is worth.

You note it is suggested that "we get up an elaborate lot of data on all kinds of subjects to spout into the RECORD, as was done by Carlisle." That is one of the typical methods of procedure they follow in their attempts to keep the people blinded as to the rates they should be charged for electric lights and power.

One farmer up near the city of Madison, in Minnesota, says that in 1924 he and nine other farmers built an electric line. They put in $500 each, making a total of $5,000. They own their own line, take care of it and repair it themselves. They connected with the Ottertail Power Co. and had to sign a contract to pay 10 cents a kilowatt-hour, besides $2.22 per month leakage charge, which made the small amount of power they used cost them more than 25 cents a kilowatt-hour. Add to that the interest on their investment in their line, and it cost them on an average of around 40 cents a kilowatt-hour.

Under the T.V.A. contract a farmer in the Tupelo territory pays 3 cents a kilowatt-hour for the first 50 kilowatt-hours, 2 cents a kilowatt-hour for the next 150 kilowatt-hours, 1 cent a kilowatt-hour for the next 200 kilowatt-hours, and 4 mills a kilowatt-hour for all over 400 kilowatt-hours per month.

Those Minnesota farmers did not have the information as to what electric power is worth and probably were unprotected by their State utilities commission.

I pointed out in my address to the House some time ago that the average consumer of electric energy in Canada uses 350 kilowatt-hours per month, whereas the average consumer in America uses only about 50 kilowatt-hours per month, or about one seventh of the amount used by the Canadian.

In Winnipeg, Canada, 350 kilowatt-hours per month would cost $3.08.

In London, Ontario, Canada, they get their power from Niagara Falls, 125 miles away, and for 350 kilowatt-hours per month they pay $3.99.

In Windsor, Canada, where they get their power from Niagara Falls, 250 miles away, 350 kilowatt-hours per month cost exactly $4.26.

Windsor is right across the river from Detroit, Mich. In Detroit 350 kilowatt-hours per month cost $11.80.

The figures from Winnipeg, London, and Windsor, Canada, are up to date, and show what light and power cost in those places at this time.

In Tacoma, Wash., where they have an exclusive municipal monopoly, these 350 kilowatt-hours per month cost $4.55.

In Seattle, Wash., where they have a municipal plant with private competition to divide the load, these 350 kilowatt-hours per month cost $6.30.

In Tupelo, Miss., and in all the other territory served by the T.V.A. where the yardstick rates are applied, the 350 kilowatt-hours per month will cost exactly $6.

Now, let us see what they cost elsewhere. According to this book, NELA, which, as I said, was issued by the National Electric Light Association in 1931, 350 kilowatt-hours per month for residential lighting in Bisbee, Ariz., would cost $18.40; in Fort Smith, Ark., $24.40; Andalusia, Ala., $27.10; Birmingham, Ala., $24.75; Denver, Colo., $18.10; Danbury, Conn., $16.28; Wilmington, Del., $16.50; Miami, Fla., $29.90; Valdosta, Ga., $12.66; Boise, Idaho, $15.90; Quincy, Ill., $21.75; Indianapolis, Ind., $17.25; Des Moines, Iowa, $12.65; Salina, Kans., $13; Ashland, Ky., $21; Baton Rouge, La., $33; Bangor, Maine, $31.50; Hagerstown, Md., $13.20; Boston, Mass., $26.25; Winona, Minn., $14.70; Bay City, Mich., $13.50; Meridian, Miss., $27.10; Jefferson City, Mo., $10.15; Reno, Nev., $21.50; Scottsbluff, Nebr., $25.38; Butte, Mont., $9; Berlin, N.H., $25.20; Asbury Park, N.J., $19.75; Ithaca, N.Y., $32.30; Raleigh, N.C., $20.75; Columbus, Ohio, $14.50; Tulsa, Okla., $26; Portland, Oreg., $7.89; Pittsburgh, Pa., $12.10; Columbia, S.C., $24; Chattanooga, Tenn., $16.60; San Antonio, Tex., $25.50; Richmond, Va., $22.

Thus it will be seen that, with a few shining exceptions, such as Seattle and Tacoma, Wash., Portland, Oreg., and Butte, Mont., the cost of these 350 kilowatt-hours per month to the small users of electricity runs from two to five and one half times what they will cost under the T.V.A. yardstick.

The contract between the city of Tupelo, Miss., and the Tennessee Valley Authority went into effect some time ago, and I have before me duplicate copies of light and power receipts in that city for the month before this contract went into effect, and for the month succeeding that time. Here are some of the figures:

Under the old contract the monthly light and power bill of R. W. Reed Co., a retail mercantile establishment, was $65.14; the next month it was $23.69.

J. H. Merrit paid $11.26 for the month under the old rate and $4.77 the next month under the T.V.A. rate.

L. W. Trice paid $2.30 under the old rate and 75 cents under the new; Tupelo Journal paid $41.38 under the old and $18.94 under the new; J. H. Ledyard, $5 under the old rate and $1.58 under the new; George Maynard, $9 under the old and $2 under the new. J. C. Penny Co., Inc., paid $84.50 under the old rate and $28.49 under the new. Tupelo Daily News paid $61.50 under the old and $25.01 under the new; Hotel Tupelo paid $145.58 under the old rate and $46.60 under the new. Kroger Grocery & Baking Co. paid $30.18 under the old rate and $14.85 under the new rate.

Some men have asked why we want the information to be compiled under this resolution. We want it for the benefit of the American people. We want it for the benefit of the Federal Power Commission, the Tennessee Valley Authority, and other governmental agencies interested in the prices of electric lights and power.

We want it for the benefit of municipal officials, county officials, and State officials.

We want it for the benefit of Congressmen and Senators, Governors of States, and members of State legislatures who are interested in seeing that their people are given the benefits of this great national resource at rates which the producer can afford to accept and which the consumer can afford to pay.

We also want these rates for the benefit of any private power companies that are doing a legitimate business and are interested in furnishing electric energy at reasonable rates, based upon the cost of production.

We want it for the public generally, and there is no reason on earth why they should not have it.

CAMP MERRITT MERITS ALL

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a copy of the bill H.R. 8139.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I include bill H.R. 8139, having for its purpose the establishment of Camp Merritt as a national shrine. Every Member of Congress should rally to its support. It was America's leading military cantonment during the World War. It is enshrined in the hearts of veterans. Let us preserve its hallowed site in New Jersey just beyond the Palisades. Now is the time.

The bill referred to is as follows:

H.R. 8139

A bill to provide for the establishment of a national monument on the site of Camp Merritt, N.J.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to acquire, on behalf of the United States, such portion of the site of Camp Merritt, N.J., as, in his judgment, may be necessary and suitable for the establishment of a national park or monument, which shall be a public national memorial to the members of the American Expeditionary Forces who occupied such camp during the World War. If practicable, the property so acquired shall include the site on which a memorial monument has been erected and the land adjacent to such monument. In the event the Secretary is unable to purchase a portion of the site of such camp at a reasonable price, he is authorized and directed to acquire such property by condemnation in the manner provided by law. The Director of the Office of National Parks, Buildings, and Reservations, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall have the supervision, management, and control of such national park or monument, which shall be known as the "Camp Merritt National Monument", and shall maintain and preserve it for the benefit and enjoyment of the people of the United States.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to mark with monuments, tablets, or otherwise, historical points of interest within the boundaries of the Camp Merritt National Monument.

SEC. 3. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

S. 2686

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair lays before the House the following communication from the Senate:

Ordered, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 2686) to provide a penalty for the presentation of a false written instrument relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of any department or agency of the Federal Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the request of the Senate will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

PRIMO TIBURZIO

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H.R. 881, entitled "An act for the relief of Primo Tiburzio', with a Senate amendment, and agree to the Senate amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, can the gentleman from New York tell me what the number of this bill is on the Private Calendar?

Mr. BLACK. It is a House bill which just passed the Senate. The Senate amended the bill by cutting the amount from $1,500 to $1,000.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

CHARLES J. EISENHAUER

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2639) entitled "An act for the relief of Charles J. Eisenhauer", with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after "pay", insert ", out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Private Calendar, beginning at the star.

C. A. DICKSON

The Clerk called the first bill on the Private Calendar, H.R. 916, for the relief of C. A. Dickson.

WE INVITE MEMBERS TO SIGN FRAZIER BILL MOTION

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit, I wish to call attention to the petition on the Speaker's desk, for the Frazier-Lemke bill, which now has the signatures of 127 Congressmen. One hundred and forty-five names are necessary to bring the motion before the House to discharge the Committee on Agriculture from further consideration of this bill.

JOHN A. SIMPSON STRONG ADVOCATE OF FRAZIER BILL

This is the bill our revered farm leader, the late John A. Simpson, national president Farmers' Union, fought for so valiantly and so courageously. He has now gone over the horizon into the great beyond; his spirit speaks to us today to carry on. He was diligent and eternally vigilant on the public platform and on the radio with masterly addresses, well delivered and listened to by millions of our fellow citizens. I remember so well the last meeting he addressed in the large caucus room of the old House Office Building on February 21, 1934, just a few days before his death. He came with his good wife, Mrs. John A. Simpson, and daughter, Miss Mildred Simpson, and his address was heard by a great number of the Members of the House and Senate and friends who listened with great interest to the proceedings of that evening.

JOHN BOSCH, MINNESOTA FARM LEADER, SUPPORTS FRAZIER BILL

During the spring of 1933 I called the Members of the House from North Dakota and Minnesota together in my office at 535 old House Office Building, and John A. Simpson spoke to us at that time in his convincing manner, concerning farm legislation. John Bosch, of Atwater, Minn., national vice president Farmers' Holiday and Minnesota president Farmers' Holiday, is one of our sturdy, dependable Minnesota farm fighters. He has given time and effort for years in favor of the Frazier bill and other farm legislation of interest to agricultural America. I am happy to say that I joined with them and voted exactly as they counseled in that conference.

I have great admiration for their leadership, and I recently attended an inspiring conference in the Continental Hotel, which was attended by Mr. Simpson, Milo Reno, and others.

LOW INTEREST RATE NECESSARY FOR REVIVAL OF BUSINESS

Why leave the Frazier bill lying on the Speaker's desk? Why not complete the 145 signatures at once? Why not give farmers low-interest rates? I have only one fault to find with the Frazier bill and that is the interest rate is too high at 1½-percent interest and 1½-percent amortization. If I had my way about it I would make it a total of not more than 1-percent interest and 1-percent amortization. There is no good reason that can be advanced why the farmers should not have money at the same rate given banks who are receiving money at the rate of a fraction of 1-percent interest to cover the bare cost of the transaction.

I have risen on this floor many times urging Members to support the Frazier bill. I do so once more today, and ask your attendance at our conference in the main caucus room of the old House Office Building, Wednesday, April 4, at 8 o'clock in the evening.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the account of C. A. Dickson, postmaster at Cleburne, Tex., in the sum of $72.45, and to certify such credit to the Comptroller General. Such sum represents the amount of United States postal funds lost by reason of the failure of the Home National Bank and the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Cleburne, Tex., and charged in the account of the said postmaster as a balance due the United States after the payment of final dividends in respect of such deposits.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JAMES T. WEBSTER AND MARY A. WEBSTER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 939, for the relief of James T. Webster and Mary A. Webster.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill provides for reimbursement to these parties for attorneys' fees in contesting a condemnation suit by the Government for a post-office site. The report of the acting head of the Public Land Division has this to say:

If bills of this character are to be presented to Congress, we would have the same situation in behalf of an owner such as the owner at Beaver Falls. In many instances, probably, it would be embarrassing for Congressmen to refuse to introduce a bill in behalf of influential constituents. So it all results in the question as to whether or not we will initiate in this case a most unwholesome and unwise custom.

Mr. Speaker, in view of this, I object to the bill.

MANUEL MERRITT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 998, for the relief of Manuel Merritt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there is a recommendation from the Department respecting the House bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman object to the consideration of the Senate bill?

Mr. BLANTON. Is the Senate bill identical with the House bill in amount?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a difference of 10 cents.

Mr. BLANTON. Then the Senate bill carries out the recommendation of the Department.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $40.20 to Manuel Merritt in payment of amount of loss sustained in postal funds by the failure and closing of the First National Bank of Roff, Okla.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. This bill exemplifies the necessity of getting a report from the Department. It shows how accurate the departments are and how closely they study these bills. When this bill was presented to the Department for report it showed that the House bill was for $40.30, while only $40.20 was involved. The Department recommended that the 10 cents be taken off. The Senate has seen fit to correct the bill. I call this to the attention of my colleagues to show that our departments watch even small, insignificant amounts in their recommendations and reports.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

MILES THOMAS BARRETT

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 205, the bill (H.R. 5709) for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a similar Senate bill on the Speaker's desk.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1484

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to pay Miles Thomas Barrett, of Bridgeville, Pa., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for his service in the United States Army as a sergeant in the Corps of Engineers for the period of May 3, 1918, to August 19, 1918, both dates inclusive, the sum of $175: Provided, That his service in the United States Army during the period in question is hereby made honorable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

ANNIE I. HISSEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1158, for the relief of Annie I. Hissey.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Maryland if he would be willing to accept an amendment providing $5,000 instead of $10,000?

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not insist on that amendment. Ten thousand dollars is a very small sum for the death of a man.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The gentleman will realize that we have not been granting $10,000 on these claims, and we want to treat them all alike.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I agree if that is the limit.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the limit on a death claim.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he will consent to the usual attorney's fee amendment, which this bill does not include?

Mr. PALMISANO. I accept the gentleman's suggestion.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby appropriated, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 to Annie I. Hissey in full for all claims she may have against the Government on account of the death of her husband, William Hissey, who was fatally injured in the city of Washington, D.C., on the 6th day of January 1932, resulting from a driver of a United States Government truck negligently running into and upon William Hissey while he was attempting to cross the street at the intersection of Thirteenth Street, I Street, and Potomac Avenue SE.

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment changing the amount from $10,000 to $5,000, and also an amendment with respect to attorneys' fees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. PALMISANO: Line 6, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000", and at the end of line 14 insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GLENNA F. KELLEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1197, for the relief of Glenna F. Kelley.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General is authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Glenna F. Kelley, postmaster at Goreville, Ill., in the sum of $48.34. Such sum represents the amount of a deficit in the accounts of the said Glenna F. Kelley, caused by the loss by said Glenna F. Kelley of postal funds deposited in the First National Bank of Goreville, Ill., which failed December 30, 1930.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROBERT TURNER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1207, for the relief of Robert Turner.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the only objection I have is to the word "bodily", in line 7, page 1. If that word is stricken out, I shall have no objection to the bill.

Mr. BLACK. I accept that amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, we also ought to have the usual clauses that this is in full settlement of all claims against the Government and the usual attorney's fee provision.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. That is true.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why this bill has not been passed before. It dates back to 1921.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman will have to ask the gentleman who was chairman of the committee back in 1921.

Mr. TRUAX. Has it been objected to heretofore?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. TRUAX. I object, Mr. Speaker.

FREDERICK W. PETER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1208, for the relief of Frederick W. Peter.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] a question. The relief requested in this bill is based on the same accident as in the bill the gentleman just objected to. If one bill is good, the other is good, or if one is bad, the other is bad. The only difference is that with respect to the one to which the gentleman objected, in my opinion, the amount carried in the bill is more proportionate to the injury sustained than this particular one. I did not object to the preceding bill, and I only reserved the right to object to this one because it seemed to me the amount ought to be cut down. Perhaps the gentleman from Ohio might want to withdraw his objection to the previous bill and let it go through.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] I shall object to this bill also.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

NELLIE REAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1209, for the relief of Nellie Reay.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay Nellie Reay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $13.42 in full and final settlement of all claims against the Government for work performed as a charwoman in the custodian service of the post office and courthouse at Trenton, N.J., from November 1 to November 7, 1929.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 6, strike out "$13.42" and insert in lieu thereof "$12.95."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AGNES M. ALLSOP

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1210, for the relief of Agnes M. Allsop.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is the author of the bill here?

Mr. POWERS. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. As our friend knows, this bill will establish a precedent that will cause several thousand claims to be filed against the Government of the United States, and eventually will cost us many millions of dollars. Whenever you go back to the year 1913 and place parties under the jurisdiction of the Employees' Compensation Commission you open up a Pandora's box that will cause thousands of new claims to be filed against the Government. We have prevented these bills from coming up here year after year because they would cost the Government millions of dollars.

For this reason I object, Mr. Speaker.

R. GILBERTSEN

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 1211) for the relief of R. Gilbertsen.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of R. Gilbertsen, postmaster at Glenburn, N.Dak., in the sum of $250.30 due the United States on account of the loss of postal funds resulting from the failure of the Glenburn State Bank of Glenburn, N.Dak: Provided, That the said R. Gilbertsen shall assign to the United States any and all claims he may have to dividends arising from the liquidation of said bank.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MARIE TOENBERG

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 1212) for the relief of Marie Toenberg.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of Marie Toenberg, postmaster at Alexander, N.Dak., in the sum of $239.89, due the United States on account of the loss of postal funds resulting from the failure of the First National Bank of Alexander, Alexander, N.Dak.: Provided, That the said Marie Toenberg shall assign to the United States any and all claims she may have to dividends arising from the liquidation of said bank.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MINNIE D. HINES

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 6390) for the relief of Minnie D. Hines.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DUNCAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a worthy claim. A number of bills of this kind have been passed. This woman is not a professional bondswoman in any sense of the word. I personally have known her for many years. She was like a lot of other people who were influenced to sign a bond for a bootlegger. She offered a reward for his arrest. She offered $500 reward. It was determined by the court that she was not able to pay the $7,000 claimed, and the court permitted her to pay $4,000. She had to mortgage her property to do that, and the property is now being threatened with foreclosure. The prisoner was returned, and I am informed she paid the expenses of bringing him back. He served 2 years in the penitentiary following that and was fined $1,000 by the court.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The only objection I have is this: I understand that the signer of this bond, the person for whom relief is sought, received $700 for signing the bond.

Mr. DUNCAN of Missouri. I notice that in a letter from the Attorney General.

Mr. HOLLISTER. It does seem to me, if that is so, that this $700 should be subtracted from what she gets from the Government.

Mr. DUNCAN of Missouri. I did not have any knowledge of that, but the report says she received no fee for executing the bond. If that is the gentleman's only objection, I would be willing to have that deducted from the amount.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I have no objection if that is deducted.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, in answer to the statement made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN], the amount of the sum due under the bond has already been reduced from $7,000 to $4,000. The fact that the woman received $700 is ample proof that she was in the business of putting up bonds.

Mr. DUNCAN of Missouri. I know personally that she was not. She may have done it this time. I have no knowledge about that. I was informed that she had not done it, but the letter of the Attorney General shows that she did.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The reason I shall object to the bill is a matter of policy. When anyone signs a bond it is his duty to produce the prisoner.

Mr. DUNCAN of Missouri. She did offer a reward and paid the expenses of having him produced.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Despite that fact, I object.

JOHN EVANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6626, for the relief of John Evans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object and I shall object unless the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DUNCAN] cares to make some statement.

Mr. DUNCAN. The same condition exists with respect to this as to the other, except there was no compensation paid for the signing of the bond. I believe the record so states. It is the same kind of a bond. The prisoner was apprehended and brought back and, I believe, served 30 days in jail. It was not an important case. He paid $2,000 on the bond.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, the conditions are the same. The bond was given in good faith and was accepted by the court in good faith. They did not produce the prisoner. The court was delayed. I object.

J. B. HUDSON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7230, for the relief of J. B. Hudson.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The War Department recommends that Hudson be paid $157.80. It was ascertained that the damage to the car amounted to only $92.20. If the author of the bill will accept that amendment I have no objection.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Of course, if the gentleman insists, I shall have to accept, but I call attention to the fact that there were two boards of Army officers who passed on this matter. The second board which found the exact cost also held that Hudson was not liable for the damage, and that it should not have been deducted from his pay at all.

Mr. TRUAX. Is this a similar case to the horse case the gentleman had 2 or 3 weeks ago?

Mr. RAMSPECK. No.

Mr. TRUAX. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250 to J. B. Hudson, said sum representing deduction in pay while a sergeant in the United States Army.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

PORTER BROS. & BIFFLE ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7279, for the relief of Porter Bros. & Biffle and certain other citizens.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I will not object, with the understanding that the bill may be amended to clarify the language.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Porter Bros. & Biffle, a copartnership composed of H. L. Porter, L. A. Porter, and J. W. Biffle; Spradling & Porter Bros., a copartnership composed of Royal Spradling, H. L. Porter, and L. A. Porter; Henry Price, Royal Spradling, J. L. Keith, W. T. Brummett; Price & Florence, a copartnership composed of Henry Price and Buster Florence; J. B. O'Harro and estate of G. J. Keith, their heirs, legal representatives, executors, administrators, and assigns, and statutes of limitations being waived, are hereby authorized to enter suit in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas for the amount alleged to be due to said claimants from the United States by reason of the alleged neglect and alleged wrongdoing of officials and inspectors of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry, in the dipping of tick-infested cattle in Texas and Oklahoma, which said cattle were shipped to Oklahoma in the year 1919.

SEC. 2. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon said United States District Court for the Northern District of Texas to hear and determine all such claims without the intervention of a jury. The action in said court may be presented by a single petition making the United States party defendant, and shall set forth all the facts upon which the claimants base their claims, and the petition may be verified by the agent or attorney of said claimants; official letters, reports, and public records, or certified copies thereof, may be used as evidence, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine said suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found due from the United States to the said claimants by reason of the alleged negligence and erroneous certification, upon the same principles and under the same measures of liability as in like cases between private parties, and the Government hereby waives its immunity from suit. And said claimants and the United States of America shall have all rights of appeal or writ of error or other remedy as in similar cases between private persons or corporations: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of said court, and upon such notice it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That such suit shall be begun within 6 months of the date of the approval of this act.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 4, after the word "neglect", strike out the balance of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following words: "of the inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, in certifying as clean of splenetic fever and ticks cattle shipped from Texas and Oklahoma in the year 1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BOSTON STORE CO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7292, for the relief of the Boston Store Co., a corporation, Chicago, Ill.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the author of this bill is present and desires to offer an explanation of the bill. I want to say, however, that this bill is for the relief of the Boston Store Co. in the sum of $6,246 for a claim that dates back to August 16, 1921. This bill was presented, evidently, to the greatest Secretary of the Treasury since Alexander Hamilton, Mr. Andrew Mellon, and he disallowed this bill. The claimant had overpaid the Government $19,000 on income taxes for the year 1920, and the Treasury sent the claimant a check for that amount, less the amount of this claim, the claim having been once allowed. To let this bill pass unobjected to, in my judgment, would be sanctioning the infamous methods of the Treasury Department for the past 12 or 13 years in refunding between four and a half and five billion dollars to the rich income-tax payers.

The Boston Store Co. is one of the mammoth chain systems. They have stores all over the United States of America. They have a big store in Columbus, Ohio, and they have one in my home town, Bucyrus. We all know those big chain stores are draining the country of all of its cash resources every Saturday night.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRUAX. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. That same store is the firm which says it will sell shoes made in Massachusetts, and they sell the people of Chicago shoes with paper soles, do they not? That is how they make their money.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman mean they are perpetrating a fraud on the public?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Well, I object.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman reserve his objection until I make a statement?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will reserve the objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed twice before in this House. This bill has been approved by all of the departments. Notwithstanding what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] states, it is one of the very few houses or firms that has overpaid its income tax to the Government, or paid more than it actually owed, and they received a return of $19,000. So it shows they must be pretty honest people. I do not know whether the same concern has any other stores outside of Chicago. There are many other stores by the name of "The Boston Store", but I doubt very much whether this firm has any other interests outside of the store in the city of Chicago. They have been in business for over 50 years and have a splendid reputation. If they sometimes sell shoes that are not so good, as has been claimed, it is due to the manufacturer in the gentleman's district or in the district of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. Upon what authority does the gentleman from Illinois make the statement that they overpaid their income taxes compared to what they should honestly have paid?

Mr. SABATH. Upon the report of the Revenue Department, which examined their books and returned to them $19,000 as an overpayment.

Mr. TRUAX. In what year?

Mr. SABATH. I do not recall the year.

Mr. TRUAX. Was it during the regime of Mr. Mellon?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know who was then in power, whether it was Mellon or not; but I think it was long before Mr. Mellon came into control of the Treasury.

Mr. TRUAX. This claim originated in 1920, and Mellon took office in 1921, did he not?

Mr. SABATH. I think the gentleman is right on that point. Of course, we say many things sometimes in jest that are repeated and have a serious effect. I want to say, in justice to this concern, that it has as good a reputation as any in the United States. They are not people who have many chain stores. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] knows my stand on chain stores. I have been trying to put them out of business for many years.

Mr. TRUAX. By handing them more money?

Mr. SABATH. No, no; not handing them more money. The only thing I would hand them is a wallop.

Mr. TRUAX. A wallop of $6,000?

Mr. SABATH. Not at all. They paid this money to the Government that they should not have paid. The report shows clearly that they bought in good faith and paid for merchandise which turned out to be worthless, which could not be used or sold. I know that neither the gentleman from Ohio nor any other Member desires that the Government retain this money. The merchandise was not as represented; it could not be sold or utilized.

This bill has twice passed the House, but due to conditions in the Senate, and I presume because I do not stand so well over there, the bill did not pass that body.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. What became of the cots? Where are they now?

Mr. SABATH. Most of them were so damaged that they had to be thrown away; they could not be sold.

Mr. KRAMER. Were they given to Wolshinsky in Chicago?

Mr. SABATH. I do not know any such firm.

I doubt very much if these cots were sold to anybody, as they were eaten up by rust, and the condition was such that I do not see how they could have been used. This information comes to me from investigation that has been made.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is, Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

ROYCE WELLS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7387, for the relief of Royce Wells.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Royce Wells the sum of $2,500 in full settlement for personal injury sustained by reason of the explosion of a bomb under the direction of the war-loan organization of the eighth Federal Reserve district in connection with a Victory-loan drive at De Soto, Mo.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$2,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,500."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "by", insert "Royce Wells by".

At the end of the bill add the customary attorney fee amendment, as follows: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUBCONTRACTORS ON THE POST OFFICE AT LAS VEGAS, NEV.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3900, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

EDNA B. WYLIE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1362, for the relief of Edna B. Wylie.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Edna B. Wylie, postmaster of Derby, Iowa, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $21.97, being the amount of postal funds lost in the failure of the First National Bank of Derby, Iowa, on or about February 10, 1928.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$21.97" and insert in lieu thereof "$22.90."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

W. C. GARBER

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1418, for the relief of W. C. Garber.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. C. Garber, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $112.44, under an agreement by which the Government exercised an option to rent certain property to be used as a landing field, although the project was abandoned by the Government, and this sum as accrued rental recommended by the Department of Commerce for payment.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, insert the customary attorney fee proviso as follows: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: Page 1, line 6, after the figures insert the words "in full settlement of all claims against the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WILLARD F. HOLTEEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1486, for the relief of Willard F. Holteen.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection to permit an explanation?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Certainly.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I think if the gentleman will give careful consideration to the reports that have been made by the War Department he will see that this claim has had the approval of the Secretary of War.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I so understand.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The only objection has come from an auditor of the Department on a technical question as to whether the goods belonging to this second lieutenant, who was then doing service in France, were destroyed prior to or following the destruction of Government property which was destroyed in the same fire. It seems to me that such a position is so technical that it should be brushed aside. I hope the gentleman from Washington will see the justice of the claim made by this soldier, who lost his property through no fault of his own.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I am objecting as a matter of carrying out the policy that the Government should not be an insurer of the personal property of soldiers and sailors.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The gentleman realizes that we have bills of this nature on the Private Calendar running as high as $6,000 and $7,000 for the loss of personal property of Army officers while the property was on Government premises. All such bills have been objected to.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I understand the principle that the gentleman has in mind, but I think if the gentleman will examine this case carefully, as I have sought to do, through the records of the War Department and otherwise, he will find that it comes in a different class than those to which he has referred, for the reason that under the law of 1918 there could be a recovery by the claimant if he lost his property while trying to save Government property. The fact is that when the alarm was sounded that the barracks were on fire, the claimant, Lieutenant Holteen, hurried to answer the alarm, and engaged in an effort to stop the fire. His personal property was in the barracks and destroyed by the flames. If he had thought only of his own property and had gone to save it, he might have been able to do so and thereby saved himself this loss. The strange part of the law under which the auditor of the War Department refused to pay the claim, or at least the interpretation he gave to it, was this, if when Lieutenant Holteen went to save the Government property, if his own property was not already destroyed, he could recover under the law. Thus, the whole question, under the ruling of the auditor, centered around the fact of whether claimant's property was destroyed while he was protecting Government property. Those who were on the field at the time of the fire reported favorably on his claim, but an auditor in Washington said that he believed the lieutenant's property had already been destroyed when he sought to save the Government property, and, therefore, there could be no recovery.

I feel that even though this may be a close case from a technical standpoint, yet as the veteran whole-heartedly and courageously assisted in the effort to put out the fire, he should not be tied down by a technical interpretation of an auditor in Washington as against those who were on the field at the time of the fire and who knew the facts of the case.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Under the act of July 1918 the burden of proof was on the officer to show that he came within the act.

Mr. WOLVERTON. That may be true.

Mr. GRISWOLD. In this particular case he did not show that he came within the act. That is why the auditor disallowed the claim. The disallowance was due to his failure to bring himself under the provisions of the act.

Mr. WOLVERTON. For the gentleman's information I wish to say that Lieutenant Holteen satisfied the officers in France that he was entitled to recover for his loss of property and he has satisfied the Secretary of War that he is entitled to this relief.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The War Department and the officers always recommend these bills. The mere fact that their recommendation comes in makes no difference.

Mr. WOLVERTON. The gentleman has, then, had a different experience than I have had. It has been my experience that departments of Government seldom recommend payment of claims without any ifs or buts. The fact that the War Department, through the Secretary of War, has done so in this case emphasizes the merit of the claim.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. They do it all the time, I may say for the gentleman's information.

Mr. WOLVERTON. I wish the gentleman would take into consideration the welfare of this veteran, who was engaged in his Government's service in France, and give him the benefit of the doubt in a close case, and that is what this amounts to. This is a close case in the construction of an act, and I would like to see the gentleman accept the construction that has been adopted by the Secretary of War, rather than that of an auditor.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that this bill be passed over without prejudice, to be called up on the next day the Private Calendar is called.

The motion was agreed to.

IRVIN PENDLETON

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1893, for the relief of Irvin Pendleton.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill would set the same new precedent as the one I mentioned awhile ago. It seeks to set aside the statute of limitation in the Employees' Compensation Act, and, if passed, would establish a precedent which eventually would cost the Government many millions of dollars. For there are thousands of such claims now existing in all parts of the United States; and if we passed this bill, they would be filed immediately against the Government and we would have no excuse, then, for not allowing them all. For the above reason, Mr. Speaker, I object to this bill, just as I did when the other one was called a while ago.

WILLIAM L. JENKINS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1939, for the relief of William L. Jenkins.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one that goes back to 1916, therefore I object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve the objection?

Mr. TRUAX. I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DITTER] introduced. I wonder if the gentleman would be willing to pass this bill over without prejudice, with the right to call it up on the next day the Private Calendar is called.

Mr. TRUAX. I am willing to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. It is passed without prejudice automatically and remains on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANCHARD. With the understanding that it will come up first on the next day the Private Calendar is considered.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There is another bill ahead of this one.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will retain its place on the Private Calendar.

A. H. POWELL

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1943, for the relief of A. H. Powell.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States is authorized and directed to credit to A. H. Powell, special disbursing agent, Bureau of Industrial Alcohol, United States Treasury Department, New Orleans, La., the sum of $144, under certificate of settlement no. G–27718–T, dated August 26, 1932, New Orleans industrial alcohol account, symbol no. 14907, supplemental from October 1, 1931, to April 1, 1932, under bond of March 26, 1928, such credit to become effective immediately after the passage of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GEORGE JEFFCOAT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2026, for the relief of George Jeffcoat.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOBBINS). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated and in full settlement against the Government, the sum of $10,000 to George Jeffcoat, husband of Mary Alma Jeffcoat, on account of the death of the said Mary Alma Jeffcoat, who was killed by one S. S. Sligh, Jr. (a Federal officer, known as a Federal prohibition officer, in Government service, while on duty), on December 21, 1931, while driving an automobile on a public street in the town of New Brookland, Lexington County, S.C.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, at the beginning of the line, insert the words "of all claims", and after the word "Government", insert the words "of the United States"; and page 1, line 7, strike out "$10,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$5,000"; and on page 2, line 3, strike out the period after "Carolina", insert a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

JOHN S. CATHCART

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2054, for the relief of John S. Cathcart.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John S. Cathcart, of Hartsville, S.C., the sum of $89.50 for money expended for the Post Office Department.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, there is a slight discrepancy between the amount carried in the bill and the amount set out in the report, and for the purpose of correcting that I offer an amendment striking out "$89.50" and inserting in lieu thereof "$87.80."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANCHARD: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$89.50" and insert in lieu thereof "$87.80."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EDWARD V. BRYANT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2169, for the relief of Edward V. Bryant.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of this bill for an explanation.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, as the gentleman probably recalls, the Lever Act was one of the bills passed during the hysteria of 1917. It was a so-called "antiprofiteering law." A special prosecutor was appointed, a gentleman I know very well, as he is from my own home city and a very energetic and able lawyer. Every indictment under that act resulted in a conviction. When the first case was tried it was appealed and went to the circuit court of appeals, and there the act was held unconstitutional, but subsequent prosecutions came along and nearly all the defendants in these subsequent cases pleaded guilty and paid their fines, with a proviso and an understanding with the special district attorney that in the event the Lever Act was finally declared to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States the fines would be repaid. This stipulation was entered into between the attorneys for the Government and these varicus defendants.

The Lever Act was declared unconstitutional, as the gentleman recalls, but these fines had been covered into the Treasury. So the defendants then went into the Court of Claims, and received awards from the Court of Claims in the amounts they had paid as fines. The Government appealed from that decision, and it was held that the Court of Claims did not have jurisdiction to make these awards.

So the only relief these defendants have is through acts of Congress. We have passed four or five or perhaps six similar bills refunding Lever fines. I do not know that there are that many, but everyone that has come before Congress has been passed. I know several of my own personal knowledge.

Mr. TRUAX. Has the gentleman any knowledge of the approximate total amount of fines that was paid on account of indictments under the Lever Act?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I have those figures in my office. I do not think they amounted to much more than $50,000.

Mr. BLACK. It was more than that, because the House passed a bill back in 1924 granting the return of a considerable amount of money. The bill was known as the "Leavitt bill."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I do not remember that, but I know the circumstances in this particular case. If the gentleman would like to have me go into the details of the Bryant case, I shall be pleased to do so.

Mr. TRUAX. I may say to the gentleman that it is not necessary, but I think it is a very bad policy to establish in this Congress that we will go back 15 or 20 years and refund fines that have been paid into the Treasury, because there is no question but that during the prohibition era fines amounting to thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars were paid into the Federal Treasury on account of acts that would not be considered violations of the law today. They were technical violations.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman, of course, can make the distinction that this was an unconstitutional law and so declared by the Supreme Court. The fine in the Bryant case was paid with an express agreement on the part of the Government that if the Supreme Court of the United States finally held the law to be unconstitutional, the fines would be returned. In some cases the district attorney actually held the money in escrow, in the bank or in his own office, and in such cases the money was turned back.

Mr. TRUAX. Was the money paid under protest?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It was paid under protest and under a stipulation which I believe is set out in the report.

Mr. BLACK. It is also set out in the bill.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I did not realize this bill was coming up today, or I would have brought my file with me.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay to Edward V. Bryant, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,400, the amount of a fine paid by Edward V. Bryant in pursuance of a judgment entered upon a plea nolo contendere under certain provisions of the so-called "Lever Act" previous to the time that the Supreme Court of the United States held such provisions void, the said plea and said payment being made under a stipulation as follows: "In consideration that the Attorney General and his court shall accept the plea nolo contendere which I hereby tender to the above-entitled indictment, I do hereby waive any and all fines which the court may see fit to impose upon me upon such plea, except in the event that the so-called 'Lever Act' under which said indictment is found shall be declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States and that no prosecution could be sustained upon the facts stated in said indictment."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ROBERT TURNER

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to H.R. 1207, Calendar No. 230 on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object, is this one of the bills which the gentleman asked me to withdraw my objection to?

Mr. POWERS. That is correct.

Mr. TRUAX. I shall not object to the reconsideration of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, what bill is it?

Mr. POWERS. It is a bill for the relief of Robert Turner.

Mr. BLANTON. Does it affect the Employees' Compensation Commission?

Mr. POWERS. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to returning to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. TRUAX. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. POWERS. I believe the gentleman from Ohio is not fully cognizant of the facts in this case. This bill provides for the payment of the sum of $1,500 for the relief of Robert Turner, of Burlington, N.J. Mr. Turner sustained an injury in a collision with an automobile of the United States Army on or about October 28, 1921.

A board of officers found that the collision was due to the carelessness and negligence of the driver of the Government car, which at the time was being used in the Government service, and that Mr. Turner was without fault in the matter.

Frankly, I think this is a just claim and it is not an excessive one. I should be most happy if the gentleman from Ohio would not object to it.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. Certainly.

Mr. TRUAX. Did the Secretary of War recommend the payment of this claim?

Mr. POWERS. From the committee report he evidently did.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POWERS. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. To what extent was this man injured?

Mr. POWERS. He had one rib broken, injuries to his head, and a broken arm.

Mr. DUNN. Was he employed by the Government?

Mr. POWERS. No; he was a civilian, a highly respected citizen of my district.

Mr. DUNN. I do not see why he should not be given compensation.

Mr. POWERS. The original claim was for $5,000, but it has been cut down to $1,500. It does seem that this claim is just, fair, and reasonable.

Mr. DUNN. I think it is the duty of the Federal Government to pay such claims, especially if the man could not find work.

Mr. POWERS. And the employee of the Federal Government was absolutely responsible for the injury.

Mr. TRUAX. In the report of the Secretary of War he says that it appears that the negligence of the driver of the Government car was the proximate cause of Mr. Turner's injuries. I therefore withdraw my objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I have an amendment, which I will offer later.

There being no further objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Robert Turner, of the city of Burlington, N.J., the sum of $5,000 for bodily injuries sustained by him on Friday, October 28, 1921, when an automobile in which he was riding was in collision with an automobile of the United States Army, the said automobile being one of a fleet of motor cars traveling toward the city of Philadelphia in charge of Captain Hatfield, of Camp Holabird, Md.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,500."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "for", strike out the word "bodily" and insert "all."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider the vote was laid on the table.

FREDERICK W. PETER

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 231, H.R. 1208, for the relief of Frederick W. Peter. This is what might be termed a companion bill to the bill just passed. I mean that the beneficiary, Mr. Peter, was a companion of Mr. Turner at the time the accident occurred. I would appreciate very much if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRUAX] and those on that side and on my own side would register no objection to this.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] had some objection to this particular bill.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, as far as I can make out from the record, it seems that the injury to this man was not nearly as severe as was the injury to the other man and that there should be a cutting down of the amount because of that. I suggest that the amount be cut down from $1,500 to $1,000.

Mr. POWERS. That amendment is acceptable.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Frederick W. Peter, of the city of Burlington, N.J., the sum of $5,000 for bodily injuries sustained by him on Friday, October 28, 1921, when an automobile in which he was riding was in collision with an automobile of the United States Army, the said automobile being one of a fleet of motor cars traveling toward the city of Philadelphia, in charge of Captain Hatfield, of Camp Holabird, Md.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 7, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,500."

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out "$1,500" and insert ing in lieu thereof "$1,000."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: Strike out "$1,500" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,000."

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "bodily" in line 7 and insert in lieu thereof the word "all."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: Line 7, strike out "bodily" and insert "all."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: Line 7, after the figures "$1,000", insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Also the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HOLLISTER: At the end of the bill strike out the period, insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

TO PAY SUBCONTRACTORS, LAS VEGAS, NEV.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to the bill (H.R. 3900) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay certain subcontractors for material and labor furnished in the construction of the post office at Las Vegas, Nev., Calendar No. 242.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to returning to the bill but do reserve the right to object to its consideration after returning to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, this is a most unusual case. A contractor bid on the construction of a new post-office building at Las Vegas, Nev., was awarded the bid, and gave what appeared to be a good and sufficient bond. It was approved by the attorneys for the Government. Complaints were made later on to the Government that the contractor was not paying his material men and his laborers, and it was found that he was unable to proceed on account of lack of finances. His bondsmen denied that they had authorized the use of their names. There was no responsibility running to the contractor. These men are almost entirely poor men, largely laborers and small contractors. The amount involved in each case is comparatively small. This is recommended by the Treasury Department.

Mr. McFARLANE. Did they put this gentleman in the penitentiary, where he belonged?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. The case was tried in the State of Texas, and he was acquitted.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, in the Seventy-second Congress a bill was introduced and voted on on the floor of the House, known as the "Goss bill", which would have corrected all such defects as this. They exist in many instances where the Government actually sets a premium on the kind of contracts entered into here—it invites them. The Goss bill would have cured those defects. Congress saw fit to defeat the Goss bill, and in view of that fact I object to the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I imagine that if the gentleman from Nevada had been here he would have voted for the Goss bill.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. GRISWOLD. In view of the fact that Congress has taken that attitude, I think it would be poor policy to go back and grant something in favor of one particular case.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. This case is that of the Plains Construction Co., of Pampa, Tex. That is a long distance from Las Vegas, but they made the lowest bid. The sufferers in this case are entirely innocent. They had faith in the Government.

They had faith in the fact that the contractor's bond had been approved by the Government attorneys. For that reason, I think an injustice to a number of poor people has been done, through no fault of their own. Their work went into this post office. Their material went into the post office. It was actually used. When the new contract was let they took it up where the other contractor left off. The laborers and the small-material men received absolutely nothing. The work was done on the post office and the materials went into the post office. The Treasury Department has recommended the payment of these sums.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. DUNN. Did those laborers receive any compensation at all for the services rendered?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. None whatever.

Mr. GRISWOLD. The Post Office Department may have recommended this, but they recommended against the passage of the Goss bill that would have prevented such things as this, and therefore I must object.

NOANK SHIPYARD, INC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2194, for the relief of the Noank Shipyard, Inc.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will have no objection to the bill before us if there is an amendment allowed on line 7, striking out the provision "with interest at 4 percent per annum from March 1, 1928", and inserting in lieu thereof "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. We have passed a great many bills today without allowing any interest, and I agree with the gentleman that we should not start a new precedent. It is not customary for the Government to allow interest. I imagine we have passed 20 bills today without allowing interest, and I suggest we follow that uniform practice.

Mr. BLANTON. The President vetoed a bill the other day and sent it back because interest was allowed.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. And on a Liberty bond.

Mr. BLANTON. That was the only reason he vetoed it.

Mr. BAKEWELL. I offer no objection to the amendment. I will accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a similar Senate bill (S. 2324) will be considered.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the Noank Shipyard, Inc., of Noank, Conn., the sum of $1,700, with interest at 4 percent per annum from March 1, 1928, to complete the payment to the said Noank Shipyard, Inc., of a bill for repairs, which it completed under contract no. W-971-qm-247, dated January 7, 1928, of Quartermaster Department on Army mine planter Brigadier General Absalom Baird, which sum represents a penalty of $100 per day for 17 days' alleged delay in delivery of said steamship Baird after completion of repairs, said delay being due to causes partly attributable to acts of Government agents and wholly beyond the control of the contractor.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: On line 7, after the figures, strike out the words "with interest at 4 percent per annum from March 1, 1928", and insert in lieu thereof "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment, to insert the usual attorney's fee amendment at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK of New York: At the end of line 5, on page 2, insert the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment.

In behalf of the committee, I should like to say the reason the usual attorney's fee amendment is not on some of these bills is because a great number of the bills are copies of old bills that have been heretofore reported by the House. It seems the Printing Office keeps the type on these old reports set up; and if we put on the attorney's fee amendment when we report the bill and insist on it going into the report, it means that the Government Printing Office would have to break down the type and set it up again. It saves a great deal of expense to the Government Printing Office. That is the reason you will not find the attorney's fee amendment on these old bills.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is poor economy, because we follow the practice of adding them here in the House.

Mr. BLACK. But it does not require breaking down these old forms.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Do I understand it is the practice of the committee that on new bills to include the attorney's fee amendment?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; it is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

CAPT. J. O. FARIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2321, for the relief of Capt. J. O. Faria.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order and ask unanimous consent to speak for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. FISH. Reserving the right to object, on what subject?

Mr. FOULKES. I am going to talk on a subject that has attracted some attention lately; that is, the criticism that has been offered against certain members of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BLACK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I must object to that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the author of the bill if he can offer some good excuse for giving additional compensation to this gentleman, because in the report I see he accepted in full settlement $1,200?

Mr. KLEBERG. Of course, my colleague understands that this bill is purely a bill for the purpose of giving a man who is bedridden, because of his accident, an opportunity to have his case reviewed. Of course, the Employees' Compensation Commission, at such time as the case comes up, will have full possession of all of the data and unquestionably the compensation which has been advanced to this man will be taken into consideration.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It will be offset against any award that may be made?

Mr. KLEBERG. Of course. I might suggest in further explanation, and I think my colleague is entitled to it, in this particular instance we have a case where apparently we have both justice and humanitarian interests behind it. This old deep-sea pilot has been in bed ever since this more or less insignificant accident.

He has a complete family of dependents to support. He has one daughter-in-law who is an interior decorator, but she has a baby 27 months old and has had nothing at all to do. This old fellow is lying there on his bed, but up to the time he was injured he had always done his part. He is a real old sea dog, one of the real kind of men you hear about. This old fellow is lying there helpless. All in the world he is asking is an opportunity to present his case to the Federal Employees Compensation Commission, that they may look into it and see if he is not entitled to assistance.

Mr. HOLLISTER. On the face of things this claimant has been settled with in full. I observe that the attorney who undertook to represent him in making this settlement was an employee of the Shipping Board, although this fact was not known to Captain Faria. I assume the claimant was not advised of this, but that he was humbugged and fooled into making this statement.

Mr. KLEBERG. I may say this, that the settlement was made by the old sea dog's wife. She was humbugged into making this statement on his behalf.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I am inclined to think that justice demands that we give this man his chance to present his case to the Compensation Commission; so, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is authorized and directed to extend to Capt. J. O. Faria, formerly employed by the United States Shipping Board as master of the steamship Commack, the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, and afterward amendd by an act of February 12, 1927, compensation hereunder to be based on an employee totally and permanently disabled and to commence from and after the passage of this act.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is hereby authorized to consider and determine the claim of Capt. J. O. Faria, on account of injuries sustained by him while employed by the United States Shipping Board as master of the steamship Commack, in the year 1925, in the same manner and to the same extent as if said Capt. J. O. Faria had made application for the benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, within the 1-year period required by sections 17 and 20 thereof: Provided, That no benefits shall accrue prior to the approval of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SABATH). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, if our friend expects to defend the Rex Tugwells here in 5 minutes, he has got another guess coming; it will take him 3 weeks.

Mr. FOULKES. I assure the Speaker I shall take but 5 minutes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Regardless of whether his remarks will suit us or not, the gentleman should be allowed to speak for 5 minutes.

C. K. MORRIS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2322, for the relief of C. K. Morris.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Texas wish to make any explanation? I am frank to say that on the face of things I can see no reason why this bill should be passed, but I shall be pleased to reserve my objection to permit the gentleman to make an explanation of the bill.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make this explanation; and, after a reexamination of the facts involved in this case, I personally request that the amount be cut from $1,000 to $600. I do this because the actual facts show that the combination of personal injury and damage to the automobile involved in this case would be more than covered by the $1,000 asked for by the bill. For this reason I am asking a reduction of $400.

In addition, may I say to the gentleman from New York that three elements were involved in this accident: First, a one-eyed man; second, the city had this street in a torn-up condition; and, third, the operator of the Government truck, as well as the injured party, was forced out of the existing channel of traffic on the street.

As a matter of fact, the surrounding circumstances show that if there were real fault involved, the fault was on the part of the driver of the Government vehicle in not coming to a stop and permitting to pass this other vehicle driven by Mr. Morris, which had the right-of-way.

As I said at the outset, the facts and circumstances show that the amount should be changed from $1,000 to $600, the latter figure representing the actual damage. I do not want anything more for this claimant than that to which he is entitled.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The gentleman deserves commendation for his willingness to reduce the figure.

Mr. KLEBERG. I make the suggestion myself.

Mr. HOLLISTER. The thing which worries me particularly with respect to this bill is not so much the question of contributory negligence, which does appear to some extent, but the question of whether the Government employee at the time of the accident was acting within the scope of his employment. Unless the gentleman from Texas can show me that the Government employee was acting within the scope of his employment at the time this accident occurred I shall feel constrained to object.

Mr. KLEBERG. May I ask the gentleman whether this Government employee was driving Government equipment?

Mr. HOLLISTER. He was.

Mr. KLEBERG. When Government equipment goes out on a public highway, is not the Government charged with responsibility for the conduct of those operating it?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I should doubt the application of that doctrine in all circumstances.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. Certainly.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If someone stole the gentleman's car, the gentleman would not be charged with the responsibility of an accident.

Mr. KLEBERG. This was not a case of theft. My colleague must admit that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But if he took a Government truck without authority—was not that what happened?

Mr. KLEBERG. No; not exactly. This man was returning with an empty truck during working hours. At the time he was not actually engaged on duty, but he was in reality engaged in making a part of a trip that involved a part of his duties when this accident occurred. If the gentleman will read the report, the gentleman will see this fact clearly set out.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I read the report very carefully. Apparently he was required to turn in his truck and he did not do so. In the meanwhile he got drunk and was out driving with a truck that had been turned over to him earlier in the day. I am afraid the gentleman cannot show me that this was within the scope of his employment.

Mr. KLEBERG. May I suggest that my contention that the Government is liable in this case is due to the fact that this agent, and I so consider him, when he is called on to turn in Government equipment, up to the time that he has fulfilled the duty of turning back the truck, is engaged on business of the Government. Whether or not he turned the truck back on time happened to be his own individual responsibility, but he was called upon to take the truck back and store it after returning from the last trip, and during this period he got drunk. Of course, the Government is not responsible for the fact that he got off the wagon and the truck too, as it were, but at the same time the truck was in his charge at the particular moment of the accident.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I may say to the gentleman I will have to object under the present showing. The bill may be passed over and can be taken up on the next Private Calendar day. In the meantime, the gentleman may submit cases to show that under circumstances of this kind there would be liability with respect to a private corporation, and if the gentleman can do so, I shall not object.

Mr. KLEBERG. May I say in conclusion, with reference to the Government's liability, that it was not possible, of course, for the man to be reimbursed by the particular department of which he complains, namely, the War Department. The gentleman would not expect the War Department to incriminate itself or to admit negligence.

Mr. HOLLISTER. My impression of most of these reports I get from the departments is that they are very fair in the conclusions they reach with reference to the liability or nonliability which would attach to the Government if it were a private corporation. Everything else being equal, I am disposed to follow these recommendations unless there is a showing that the recommendation is wrong. We have here the surveying officers' recommendations and a reviewing board upholding the surveying officers.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, while our friends are getting together on this proposition, we should have a few minutes' intermission. Our friend from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES] has something on his system that he wants to get rid of, and I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to proceed for 5 minutes out of order and that we have permission to answer the gentleman for 5 minutes if his remarks need answering. In the meantime these gentlemen may adjust their differences. The gentleman from Michigan has used only 2 minutes in speaking on this floor since he has been a Member of this House. By unanimous consent, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. EATON] was allowed to speak for 15 minutes today, and I think that it is only just that we give 5 minutes to our colleague from Michigan.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object. One speech always produces another.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I insist on my request. We sit here and work hard on every Private Calendar, and we ought to have an intermission for 5 minutes once in a while, and the gentleman from Michigan is entitled to speak for 5 minutes.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on what does the gentleman wish to speak? We have a Private Calendar day very seldom, and we should get through with this calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. His subject should be immaterial. He has the right to speak. We have been working very assiduously on the Private Calendar.

Mr. MILLARD. I know the gentleman has, and I am not criticizing him.

Mr. BLANTON. We are trying to have a few minutes' recess here to allow our friend 5 minutes. Every new Member of this House should be shown this consideration and given 5 minutes on this floor occasionally.

Mr. HOLLISTER. As I understand it, by consent on both sides there will be an adjournment in probably not more than an hour from now. I suggest that we continue the work on the Private Calendar, and when we have finished then the gentlemen who wish to speak by unanimous consent may be allowed to proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES] has used only 2 minutes in speaking from this floor since he has been a Member of this House, and he asks unanimous consent to now use 5 minutes. I believe in fair play to all Members—new and old ones alike.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Under the circumstances, I shall object.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum. We will take a 20-minute recess anyway, while the roll is being called.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is hardly fair.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES], a new Member here, cannot have 5 minutes, when he has used only 2 minutes heretofore in all his service, then we will have a 20-minute recess, as it will take that long to call the roll.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. There are a great many gentlemen sitting around here who are interested in the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. There are a few Members here who have private bills on this calendar, and they are so impatient to pass them that they cannot sit here and listen to their Michigan colleague make a 5-minute address. Under these circumstances their private bills may wait for 20 minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Is it the understanding that this is to be a debate, with 5 minutes to be allowed the gentleman from Michigan and 5 minutes allowed the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES] wants only 5 minutes. I do not know what he will say. If his remarks should need answering, that would require 5 minutes, which would be 10 minutes at the most.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I am willing to concede 10 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. But I shall object to any more requests for time.

Mr. BLANTON. We older Members get time whenever we want it. The new Members have the same rights we enjoy. I insist that our colleague from Michigan should be allowed 5 minutes to speak out of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. I object.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I would object to any more of these requests being made.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum. No one will accomplish anything by denying 5 minutes to our colleague from Michigan. And I serve notice now that the gentleman will have to keep a quorum here all afternoon.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my point of no quorum and renew my request that the gentleman from Michigan be allowed to address the House for 5 minutes. Inasmuch as he has used only 2 minutes since he has been a Member, he should have 5 minutes to address the House.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason in the world why the House should be held up in this way. If the gentleman from Texas is willing to delay the House for three quarters of an hour, I see no reason why I should wait for 10 minutes. I do not see why the gentleman will not wait an hour until we finish considering the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. My request is to accommodate one of our new colleagues.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman withdraw the motion to adjourn?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SABATH). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Did the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. BLANTON. I did.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the point of no quorum has been withdrawn.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his request, I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES] be permitted to proceed for 5 minutes and that I may have 5 minutes to answer the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] withdraw his motion to adjourn?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not withdraw the motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOLLISTER) there were—ayes 16, noes 47.

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently, there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

THE MISSION OF ODDFELLOWSHIP

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include therein an address delivered at the Grand Encampment of the I.O.O.F. of Maryland, on March 20, by Congressman WILBURN CARTWRIGHT. I think it appropriate to state that Congressman CARTWRIGHT is at this time Grand-Master-elect of the I.O.O.F. of the State of Oklahoma. Congressman CARTWRIGHT'S membership in the order of Odd Fellows covers a period of 21 years, he having been initiated by Tupelo Lodge No. 333 on April 26, 1913, and later became a member of McAlester Lodge No. 388. His work in the interest of Odd Fellowship merits the enviable position he holds in the order today. Simultaneous with the progress he is making in the I.O.O.F. he has been progressing likewise as a Member of this House, being a member of numerous committees. He was recently elevated to the chairmanship of the very important Committee on Roads, in which capacity he now serves.

The address Mr. CARTWRIGHT delivered in Baltimore on March 20 is as follows:

My friends, I always feel when I am in a gathering of Odd Fellows that I am mingling with men and women who have an adequate conception of the duties and responsibilities of life; those who realize that in this day and generation it is not sufficient for a man merely to so live and act that he may escape the doors of the penitentiary; and at each succeeding eventide congratulate himself that on that day at least society through the law laid no heavy hand upon his shoulder and banished him for his misdeeds from its presence. Rather, that I am in the presence of those who know and realize that the welfare of every individual is closely wrapped up and identified with the welfare of every other individual with whom he associates; that no man, no matter how broad his shoulders and how undaunted his courage, can stem single-handed the adverse currents that beset him.

The other day in one of the smaller cities in the southern part of our State, one of those weary, disreputable-looking fellows who come into town along the railroad track and leave it by the same route—drifting upon the street of life without thought of anchor or hope of harbor, ragged, dirty, disreputable-looking, and hungry—walked up to the door of a house and rapped. Now, it chanced that in that house there lived a woman, a good woman, one of those, nevertheless, found even in Oklahoma, whose kindness is flaunted in the face of the unfortunate; who do good merely to be seen and known of men; who have no charity in their heart, no sympathy in their soul; who care nothing for the unfortunate and do nothing for them except as driven under the lash of public sentiment.

This woman opened the door, looked the poor fellow over from head to foot, heard his request for something to eat, and tried to freeze him with a look, and said, "Stand there, sir." She then went back into the pantry and in a minute returned with the hardest and driest piece of bread the house afforded. Just a great dry hunk, 2 weeks old, and she handed the poor fellow a chunk with these words, "Not for my sake, not for thy sake, but for the Lord's sake, do I give you this bread." Now, it happened that the poor unfortunate was one of those fellows who—well educated, intelligent, but for some reason, lacking stability, common sense, or other essential—was wholly unable to successfully fight the battle of life. Without moving he reached out his hand, took the bread, straightened up, and in the same tone of voice replied, "Madam, not for my sake, nor for thy sake, but for the Lord's sake, put some butter on that bread."

And I am quite certain that when I am mingling with Odd Fellows and their families and associates I am associating with those who are in a sense the butter upon the bread of humanity—those who are doing their part to alleviate the conditions of those with whom they come in contact; whose endeavor it is to make the world a better and brighter place in which to live.

We are assembled here under the banner of a great fraternity; an organization that has withstood the waves that have beat upon it for more than a century; and it has withstood all tests. Odd Fellowship teaches loyalty to God and service to our fellow man, and the wonderful strides which our fraternity has made during the 114 years of its existence is based upon its broad principles of the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Throughout the world, whenever Odd Fellowship has gained a foothold, our members are imbued with the same principle of helpfulness and service which has made it play a leading part in the history of the affairs of the world, and it has become one of the greatest forces for the uplift and betterment of mankind.

Our fraternity has been tested for more than a century under the most trying circumstances, and the tenacity of its structure has withstood all tests. During the great Civil War, when family ties were broken, social bonds destroyed, and when one State was arrayed against another, Odd Fellowship knew no division; and when that fratricidal strife was over, the brethren of the South came back into the councils of the order and united with the brethren of the North—went forward hand in hand to complete the unfinished work which they had laid down before the great struggle. No greater tribute to our teachings or example of our principles has ever been known in all the world's history.

Our order seeks to elevate human character. Every brother who enters our portals pledges himself to reflect in his daily life the very essence of good citizenship and the embodiment of all that makes for his own happiness and the happiness of those about him. He who lives up to the teachings of Odd Fellowship to its full meaning will spread rays of sunshine over the earth, and his deeds will live as hallowed memories long after he has crossed the "silent river."

The work of our fraternity extends far beyond the confines of any community or any city. There are located in the Odd Fellow home of this State, as the wards of this great fraternity, brothers and sisters of our order who have in their day shouldered each other's burdens, but now because of sickness or adversity they are no longer able to bear up under the load. They are tonight, through your generosity, able to find repose and care and rest beneath the sheltering roofs of the homes of our order, safe from worldly dangers, where they can pass the closing years of their life in contentment and peace.

How essential that, as the days of usefulness and helpfulness come to us all, we do our part in life's work, not depending upon what we believe is ours, but remembering that we are our brother's keeper in all that pertains to this life; doing and practicing those immortal virtues which contribute so largely toward smoothing the troubles and softening the asperities of life.

We believe that Odd Fellowship is destined by an all-wise and all-powerful God to have no small part in breaking down the selfishness of the world and bringing man to a realization that all men are brothers.

It is an historic fact that wherever calamities have befallen our country Odd Fellowship has been among the first to render aid in relieving suffering and distress.

At the time of the Galveston flood; at the time of the San Francisco earthquake; when Florida was devastated and hundreds of homes wrecked by the storm; when the great Father of Waters arose to such enormous heights that he swept all before him—in all these great calamities, and true to our traditions, Odd Fellowship responded to the call of humanity.

Retrospect of the past history of American Odd Fellowship shows that our labors have not been in vain and that Odd Fellowship is entitled to live and spread its beneficent influence over the earth. And yet has the fraternity reached the zenith of its spreading the doctrine of love and power? Or is it to go on and on spreading the doctrines of love and brotherhood and making itself a vital force in the community?

In this, what we might call the vital crisis of our Nation, when our country's heritage as a law-abiding land is being belittled and even thrust aside under the trend of the times, what is going to be the position of our fraternity? Never in the history of our Nation have we been beset with a greater or more complex problem than this growing lawlessness that is sweeping from one end of the country to the other. The problem is appalling, and it will require the cooperation of our millions lest, through lawlessness, the Nation gradually disintegrate and decay. In which side of the scales will the weight of 2,500,000 Odd Fellows and Rebekahs be thrown?

This growing lack of respect for the laws of the country and for home and family may bring about a reign of chaos which will permeate the entire country and even undermine the very foundations of the Republic.

Whatever may be our personal feelings upon the great problem of the day, whatever may be our ideas upon the propriety of any particular law or the enforcement thereof, as Odd Fellows, constituting one fiftieth of the entire population of the United States, there can be but one pathway for us to follow, and that is an observance of the laws by ourselves and a discouragement of the violation on the part of others.

Our duty is plain, the pathway is clear, and, as Odd Fellows, representing the best spirit of American manhood and womanhood, we cannot afford to waiver.

Duty, our obligations, our heritage of over a century—all are forcing us irresistibly along the pathway of absolute support of the supreme law of the land. God helping us, we can do no other.

Odd Fellowship undoubtedly faces the most challenging test in its history. It is of vital importance that we seriously consider the contribution that every member may make for "the good of the order." Never were the demands for constructive effort and intelligent devotion as great as today. Never before was it as incumbent upon every member to restate loyalty and exemplify fraternal obligation by consistent life and unimpeachable character. But these must now be reinforced by a growing consciousness of the responsibilities that Odd Fellowship faces in the world of today, where, if ever the problems are to be solved and a way of deliverance discovered, it must be by the application of these undying principles of friendship, love, and truth, not interpreted in any exclusive sense but in the most comprehensive meaning of these euphonious terms, so that they may "be not unmeaning words upon our lips but the sentiment of our hearts and the practice of our lives." Friendship, interpreted in the realm of world relationship; love as the spirit that must cast our fear and eradicate the prejudices and antipathies of race and clan and resuscitate the devitalized institutions that substitute the form for the spirit and power of neighborliness and religion; truth, that cardinal virtue which is the rock foundation upon which we must rebuild the world.

Odd Fellowship is a character-building institution. Its chief mission is the education of the human race in the grand principles that tend to make men more social and humane. Let us refrain from trampling it in the dirt of mercenary considerations, by approaching its altars with any unworthy motive or selfish purpose. Equally important is it that we refrain from a perfunctory exercise of its impressive ritual and ceremony but rather invest these with all the fervor of a sincere and consistent life. Our membership falls into three groupings, illustrated by the men in the stone quarry. In answer to the question, "What are you doing here?" one replied, "Cutting stone." Another answered, "Earning $4 a day." But a third responded, with a gleam of noble aspiration, "I am building a cathedral." Odd Fellows may reduce their activities to the merest routine and go through the motions with slight comprehension of their meaning. Others there are who allow the mercenary thoughts to deprive them of the joy of disinterested and unselfish service. But there are thousands of our membership who interpret Odd Fellowship in its dignified and immortal task of building—the erection of a noble structure, incorporating humanity as the temple of God.

Let us not weaken because of the difficulty of what appear as evil days. We are here to help transform apparent defeat into ultimate, lasting victory. With prophetic vision, we may see, not the desolate darkness of a hopeless night, but the gray dawn of a new day. Two travelers were camped in the Pyrenees. In the early dawn they were rudely awakened by terrific wind; trees being torn from their roots, and rocks hurtling down the mountain side. Their tent was blown down, and in the general havoc, one cried out in terror, "Surly this is the end of the world!" But his comrade, an experienced mountaineer, who had traveled that way before, said, "No, this is not the end of the world; this is how the day breaks in the Pyrenees!"

Odd Fellowship faces the testing experiences of the daybreak. The craven heart may resign himself to the worst, and fall out of the ranks in despair and defeat; but his courageous brother, with vision, and in the spirit of endurance, will march forward with the mighty host, who, "according to His promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Angela Morgan has nobly written:

"To be alive in such an age,
With every year a lightning page,
Turned in the world's great wonder-book,
Whereon the leading nations look!
Where men speak strong for brotherhood,
For peace and universal good.
To be alive in such an age!
To live in it! To give in it!
Rise, Soul, from thy despairing knees,
What if thy lips have drunk the lees?
The passion of a larger claim
Will put thy puny grief to shame.
Fling forth thy sorrow to the wind,
And link thy hope with humankind;
Breathe the world-thought, do the world-deed,
Think highly of thy brother's need.
Give thanks with all thy flaming heart,
Crave but to have in it a part—
Give thanks and clasp thy heritage—
To be alive in such an age!"

THE IMPENDING ISSUE

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a speech by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH], delivered last night over the radio from station WRC.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

Through the courtesy of the Evening Star, of Washington, and through the facilities furnished by the National Broadcasting Co., I am afforded an opportunity to bring before this great radio audience a situation which, I am sure, warrants the thoughtful consideration of every citizen. The thing I have in mind, is, I believe, of such vast importance, so fundamental in character, so vital to the future life of the Nation, that I say to you quite frankly I approach its discussion with hesitancy as to my ability to portray it correctly. That this thing needs discussion, frank and open, must be my excuse for this venture.

For a little more than a year things have been happening here at Washington with bewildering rapidity. Since the advent of the new administration on March 4, 1933, at a time difficult and critical, the Congress, upon the recommendation of the President, has passed a large number of measures calculated and intended to overcome the depression from which the whole Nation has been suffering. During the extra session of the Congress last spring, and thus far during the regular session this winter, scarce a week has gone by without passage of some extraordinary measure. I think it is fair to say that the average citizen has found it exceedingly difficult to keep himself thoroughly informed concerning this rapidly piled-up legislative record. Indeed, I doubt if most of us Members of Congress have been able to keep pace with it. Practically all of these measures are important, many of them novel, and some of them revolutionary. Hungry for relief and willing to try almost anything, the country has accepted them and has given to them and to the administration a sympathetic and optimistic support. Generally speaking, captious criticism has been stilled. Those who have been doubtful as to the wisdom and efficacy of some of these measures have refrained from attacking them and have been hoping very earnestly that their doubts might vanish.

Seldom, if ever, has there been a more tolerant spirit abroad in America with respect to the efforts of a President and his administration. And this is as it should be, for no one will deny that the new administration was confronted with extraordinarily difficult problems when it took office on March 4 last and that it was entitled to a generous degree of support in its efforts to overcome these difficulties. That support has been sought, and in large measure gained, in a vast publicity program in the press, on the screen, and over the radio. Every effort has been put forth to rivet the attention of the public upon this great so-called "recovery program" and to assure the public that it was making rapid progress. I am sure you will agree with me that there has never been anything like it in the way of organized propaganda. We have been enduring it, first, because we have been longing for recovery, we have been anxious for the President to succeed, and have been more than willing to join in support of his efforts. And, second, we have endured it because we have been looking upon all these extraordinary measures as being merely temporary—set up to meet the emergency and to be abandoned the instant the emergency has passed. Nearly all of us, having this thought in mind, have been willing to submit in large measure to the extraordinary restrictions imposed upon us by this program, confident that the day would soon come, with the passage of the emergency, when we would be left free once more to order our lives and pursue our happiness as of old.

I do not intend upon this occasion to discuss with you the efficiency of the several measures which, in the aggregate, represent the recovery program. I shall not discuss their merits as emergency measures. I shall not attempt to measure the progress the country has made since their enactment. There is grave division of opinion about them, but I doubt if any person can reach an absolutely accurate conclusion. What I want to bring to your attention is not the present condition of the country, not its immediate prospects with respect to this depression, but, rather, its future. I make bold to talk about the future because in recent weeks it has become perfectly apparent that these emergency measures are not intended to be merely temporary. Through the utterances of the President and of many of his closest advisers we now know absolutely that it is the intention of the sponsors of these measures to make them a vital element in the permanent policy of the United States, emergency or no emergency. In his message at the opening of the Congress last January the President made this reasonably clear. His more recent utterances and those of his lieutenants leave no doubt whatsoever. The issue involved stands before us in definite outline. Shall these emergency measures be continued indefinitely upon the statute books? Shall the philosophy which underlies them become permanent in the political philosophy of the United States? We cannot ignore or avoid this question. It stands squarely in our path. We shall have to answer it. To illustrate better what I mean, let me remind you that the more important of these emergency measures expire by their own limitations in June of 1935, a little over 1 year from now. I have in mind especially the National Industrial Recovery Act and the Agricultural Adjustment Act, those two measures which, taken together, represent the new philosophy of government which it is sought to impose upon us and our children.

It is to be assumed that as the month of June in the year 1935 approaches the administration will exert its power to the utmost in an effort to persuade Congress to reenact upon a permanent basis the general principles of N.R.A. and of A.A.A., together with such other measures as may fit into the general scheme. I anticipate that every Member of that Congress will have to face the issue during the winter and spring of 1935. Indeed, unless I am very much mistaken, we shall all have to face it in the congressional campaign of next autumn. Now, what is the nature of the issue itself? There is nothing very complicated about it, certainly nothing mysterious. We can be specific in our analysis of it. For a little over 140 years the American Nation has maintained, without substantial change, a certain form of government. Its form and its functions are outlined in the Constitution of the United States. And, what is more important, some of the very vital relations of the citizen to his Government are expressed in the Constitution, notably in the Bill of Rights. Jealous of our privileges as free men, we have delegated to the National Government certain carefully specified powers, and, at the same time, we have reserved to the States, and to ourselves, the people, all those powers which are not specifically delegated to the Federal Government. It is this reservation in favor of the people that spells liberty of the traditional American kind. It is this reservation which guarantees to us local self-government and the right of the States to order their domestic affairs through the exercise of their police powers. It is in the localities, the towns, the villages, the cities, the counties, and the States that our people practice self-government, and thereby maintain their ability unatrophied to carry on a representative democracy. Let us never forget that our opportunities and abilities to govern ourselves are not conferred upon us by the Federal Government in Washington.

We possess these abilities and enjoy these opportunities as a result of that reservation of power in favor of the people which is found in the tenth amendment of the Constitution. The success of our experiment has been extraordinary. We have grown and thrived. Generally speaking, our Federal Government has performed efficiently those functions which are clearly national in character, and the people of the States and smaller communities have performed their functions in local government likewise. And it is in the performance of the latter, especially, that there has been kept alive amongst the people the spirit of liberty. I have said we have lived for more than 140 years in this Federal Union of States. I wonder how many of you realize that the Government of the United States is today the oldest government upon the face of the earth. By that I mean that it has existed longer, without substantial change in form, than the present-day government of any other nation. Let us glance at the list for a moment. Since Washington was inaugurated in the year 1789, the French nation has experienced three republican governments, with variations, and two imperial governments. The Spanish nation has seen several changes in its government, resulting recently in the overthrow of their monarchy and the establishment of a republic. The German nation, welded together by Bismarck as late as 1870 has but recently expelled the Hohenzollerns, tried a republic, and is now trying Hitler. The Italian nation, welded together about 1850 by Cavour, finally set up a constitutional monarchy 60 years after Washington took office, and today we see Mussolini the dictator of that ancient kingdom. What was formerly the Austro-Hungarian Empire is now divided into three or more nations, and the Hapsburgs are gone. From Russia the Romanoffs have disappeared and we see the communistic soviets in their place. Commander Perry, of the United States Navy, reached the shores of Japan in 1850 and found the Shogunate. Shortly after that the Japanese established a responsible parliamentary form of government. China, which had for centuries lived under an imperial government, has in recent years expelled the Manchu dynasty and is now struggling to establish a republic. And even in Great Britain, from whom we have inherited so many of our concepts of liberty, we find as late as 1911 the House of Lords deprived of its equal legislative power with the House of Commons and relegated to a secondary position—a distinct and substantial change in the British parliamentary structure.

While all these changes have been going on in practically all the nations of the earth during this 140-year period, the Government of the United States has stood alone, unchallenged, substantial, secure. I mention this historical fact to answer in part the suggestion that we hear so often these days that the old American system has outlived its usefulness, that it has failed, and that something new must be erected upon its ruins. Let me say to you that a government that has weathered storms as severe as those of the Civil War must have been founded upon human truths, and, that being so, it should not be discarded in haste. And yet it is now propsed to do that very thing. When it is done the whole picture of American life will be transformed into something never dreamed of by any respectable number of people prior to 1933. Instead of a Federal union of States we shall have, in effect, an imperial government centered here at Washington, with its tentacles reaching out into the smallest community and creeping into the very homes of the people. To all intents and purposes the States will be reduced to provinces, for the powers which they now enjoy in regulating their home affairs and, within reason, the daily conduct of their citizens, will have been taken over by the new national government. This transformation is to be achieved in order that the people may be regimented and made obedient to whatever economic plan is deemed to be good for them by the Washington bureaucracy. We may anticipate a series of 4-year plans under such a system, each one corresponding to a presidential term with its consequent change in the bureaucracy. Russia furnishes something of an analogy in this respect, for we learn that the soviets are now embarked upon their second 5-year plan. Remember when we speak of economic planning we really mean that the Government is going to do the planning for us in the last analysis. We can get a pretty clear idea of some of the details of this thing by observing the regulations now being imposed upon industry and agriculture under N.R.A. and A.A.A. Many of you have seen them in operation.

An industry is told that it must not produce more than a certain quantity of goods, and that quantity is divided, presumably, amongst the members of the industry in proportion to what is regarded as their normal capacity. Then every person in the industry is put upon a quota system and told, moreover, that he must not charge less than a certain amount for the goods which he produces. Furthermore, in many instances he is told that he must not add a new machine in his factory, lest the amount of his production be increased or its unit cost decreased. If he disobeys the code, he finds that the code has the force of law, and that he may be haled into a Federal court and punished for daring to produce more or charge less than the Government permits. This system is being rapidly extended over the whole industrial and business field. It has reached down to toll bridges, clothes-pressing establishments, barber shops, beauty shops, and the undertaking business, all of them enclosed in the straitjacket devised for them by superior authority. The same thing is true under A.A.A. as it affects agriculture. The farmer is urged to plant a smaller acreage of a certain crop. He is told that if he signs a contract to reduce his acreage in that crop he will be paid a bonus on the remainder, or that his excess lands will be rented from him for cash. And he is not permitted to plant that excess acreage in any other crop which may be sold for cash. That land must lie idle. It is interesting to note how this thing proceeds. It starts with an appeal for voluntary cooperation. It moves along step by step. The first step is generally pretty short, but having been taken, it practically compels the taking of a second and longer step. The second step leads to the third, and so on to the end of the journey, at which we find the farmer subjected to outright compulsion at the hands of the Government, which threatens him with confiscatory taxation backed up by criminal prosecution if he should dare disobey.

As an example of this, I call your attention to the so-called "cotton control bill" which is just now passing the Congress, and which will be signed, undoubtedly, by the President; for the fact is the President has already recommended its passage in a letter to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives. That bill provides that the total number of bales of cotton which may be marketed in the United States in the 1934 crop year shall not exceed 10,000,000, as contrasted with something like 13,000,000 bales last year. The Secretary of Agriculture is to allot to each cotton-growing State its proportionate share of the 10,000,000 bales. Inside of each State, there is to be allotted to each county its proportionate number of bales, and inside of each county there is to be allotted to each cotton farmer the number of bales which he may produce and sell from his farm. The bill then goes on to provide that should any cotton farmer sell more bales than allowed to him under this quota system, he shall be taxed upon those excess bales an amount equal to 75 percent of the market value of cotton at the time—a confiscatory tax. Moreover, if he disobeys or attempts to evade the tax and sell his extra bales, he may be prosecuted criminally in the Federal courts. There is where we are going in the field of agriculture. The farmer is to be told how many acres he may plant and how many bushels he may sell. He may be left in possession of his land, but its management will pass to the bureaucracy. To put it briefly, the Government will decide how a man shall be permitted to earn his living, whether it be in a dry-cleaning establishment in Jacksonville or on a wheat farm in Kansas. You and I might not be disturbed about this thing if we were absolutely certain that it was temporary. But that is not the case. It is proposed that this philosophy of governmental control and regimentation shall become a part of the permanent policy of the United States.

The President himself has said we will not go back. He has indicated that he intends to build a new system upon the ruins of the old, and we know from his utterances and those of his advisors publicly made, and with the greatest frankness, that they expect and intend to do this very thing. Mind you, I am not criticizing their motives or their sincerity. They are devoted to this philosophy of regimentation. They believe in it. They are convinced that the race would be happier if it proceeded en masse along the highway of life guided by the superior wisdom of government. And let me say this: Let us not place sole responsibility for these proposals upon the so-called "brain trust", whoever may be its members. Those men are here in Washington under appointment from the President. He keeps them here. He consults with them. They help draft the legislation which is sent to the Congress from time to time, intended to put these things into effect. They are members of his team. He is their captain and leader. It is the President's program. Surely, in view of the combination of events rapidly unfolding before our very eyes, there can be no doubt whatsoever that we are face to face with a tremendous issue. What is to be done about this program which seeks the abandonment of the American conception of liberty under a constitution, which challenges the tenth amendment by putting the Federal Government in the possession of complete authority over those matters which that amendment reserves to the States and the people; which spells the end of the Federal Union of States; which sets up a government, imperial in character, ruled by a huge bureaucracy, and controlling the daily lives of millions of people—tells them, in fact, how they shall earn their living? If this program is to become permanent, if this new philosophy is to prevail, then, indeed, our children will exist as subjects in a land where their forefathers have lived as masters. I cannot believe that the American people, having tasted liberty for a century and a half, will lightly surrender it.

C. K. MORRIS

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLLISTER. What is the order of business?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio had the floor at the time the point of no quorum was made.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I may say that when the point of no quorum was made I was discussing with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG] a bill to which I had reserved an objection. I wish to repeat to the gentleman from Texas that if he would care to have this bill passed over, to be taken up by unanimous consent as no. 3 at the next call of the Private Calendar, during which time he may secure more information with respect to the claim, I shall have no objection.

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be placed as no. 3 on the Private Calendar pending such time as additional evidence may be developed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HARRY L. HABERKORN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2337, for the relief of Harry L. Haberkorn.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand, this is a bill for the payment of the salary of a clerk of a Member-elect, who was not seated in the beginning of the Congress. There was an election contest, and as a result the Member who was out succeeded to the position, and this bill is for payment of clerk hire during the time the Congressman was not seated.

Mr. KLEBERG. That is correct.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman know whether the other clerk was paid in full during this time?

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not know just what settlement was made with reference to the secretary of Mr. McCloskey, who was only seated by a certificate pending an election contest. I do know, however, that Congressman Wurzbach was seated as a result of the election contest and his compensation dated as of March 4, 1929, to March 4, 1930. I also know that the claimant under this bill, Mr. Haberkorn, had been secretary to Congressman Wurzbach for a good many years prior to the particular election in which the contest arose.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Was he secretary, acting in the capacity of a Congressman?

Mr. KLEBERG. He was secretary to Congressman Wurzbach.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. In other words, Wurzbach was the Congressman, and then McCloskey ran against him, and then there was a question of whether or not McCloskey was elected?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes; and, if I may continue, the constituency of the Fourteenth Congressional District, in large part, during the pendency of this contest, called upon this man Haberkorn, who never did anything other than act as secretary to Congressman Wurzbach. The gentleman, of course, will see by the report and the sworn statement of Mr. Haberkorn that he continued the work just as though there had never been any contest.

Mr. BLACK. There is another thing that should be mentioned about this case. The Wurzbach contest was a little unusual, because prior to the seating of the other gentleman a special committee of Congress investigated the election—not a regular elections committee—and it was quite evident after the first day of the hearing held by the special committee that ultimately Mr. Wurzbach would be seated, because there was enough uncovered in the way of fraud in the first 2 or 3 days of the hearing to show that the other man could never keep his seat, although he had the certificate of election. It was clear that Wurzbach would be called upon to act as Congressman and his clerk would be called upon to act as clerk.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. What period of time did this man serve for which he wants compensation?

Mr. KLEBERG. For March, April, May, June, July, August, September, October, November, December, January, and until February 9, 1930.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Would he not be willing to accept $200 a month for 12 months, making $2,400?

Mr. KLEBERG. I think a fairer situation would be—because I happen to know, being the Congressman that represents that district—that the secretary who undertakes that job is entitled to at least $250 a month.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. But there has been a duplication of payment.

Mr. KLEBERG. Not through the fault of this man. My colleague may force me to accept the reduction, but I know that this man has been one of the most faithful secretaries that a Congressman ever had. He delivered the goods. I would not want to ask him to accept a reduction for the sake of passing the bill.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. The reason the reduction is necessary is because there has been a duplication of payment. Would not the gentleman accept $2,500?

Mr. KLEBERG. Would not the gentleman make it $2,750?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. All right. I will agree to $2,750.

Mr. KLEBERG. I will accept that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman think it wise to accept legislation of this character?

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not know what angle the gentleman refers to, but it is not unusual to pass a bill of this character. As a matter of fact, I will say that there have been cases on record of this kind. There was the case resulting in the decision of Comptroller Warwick (27 Comp. Dec. 766).

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEBERG. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. My colleague from Texas is a Democrat?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And Mr. Wurzbach was a partisan Republican?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And Mr. Haberkorn is a partisan Republican, and my Democratic friend now is working very hard to remunerate a Republican secretary for a Republican Congressman. [Laughter.]

Mr. KLEBERG. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have always held that meritorious effort deserves just reward.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I commend the gentleman from Texas for the attitude he has taken. There is a little doubt in the Warwick case, and this will clear up any doubt. I believe that when we do establish this precedent, it is a proper one for cases of this character.

Mr. KLEBERG. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Harry L. Haberkorn, San Antonio, Tex., the sum of $3,445 for services actually performed as a clerk to Harry M. Wurzbach from March 4, 1929, to February 9, 1930, both dates inclusive, said Wurzbach having been declared by the House of Representatives duly elected as a Representative from the Fourteenth Congressional District of Texas in the Seventy-first Congress for the term commencing March 4, 1929.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the figures insert: "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States", and on page 2, line 3, at the end of the line strike out the period, insert a colon and the following:

"Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ZIONCHECK: Page 1, line 6, strike out "$3,445" and insert in lieu "$2,750."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read a third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

EMERSON C. SALISBURY

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2414, for the relief of Emerson C. Salisbury.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Emerson C. Salisbury, of Leavenworth, Kans., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,500, as full compensation for damages to his property on December 11, 1931, when three Federal prisoners escaped from the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., and barricaded themselves in the house which was bombarded by the posse seeking the escaped prisoners: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

MRS. GEORGE LOGAN ET AL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2416, for the relief of Mrs. George Logan and her minor children, Lewis and Barbara Logan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, this is a meritorious case. This is a widow with two children, and she is not trained very well to help herself. Her husband died as a result of an injury incurred in aiding a companion guard. He was stabbed in a prison escape. If there ever was a meritorious case, I think this is. I have thought more of this than of any bill that I have introduced in the 5 years that I have been in Congress.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. There is a statement in the report that the application was filed before the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, but was rejected for the reason that the death occurred 6 years after the injury.

A 6-year period elapsed between the time of the injury and the time of death?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Yes.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is there anything to prove that the injury caused the death?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. All the doctors so testified, and that is the finding of the subcommittee. The doctors' testimony is that death was the direct result of that stabbing. I saw this man and talked to him a little while before he died. I knew him casually. He said to me, as his dying statement, that there was no question but that his failing health was because of the stabbing, 6 years before, in going to the rescue of another guard.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice, with the right to call it up on the next call of the Private Calendar.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. This woman has two small children.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. If she had 16 children, that would not make any difference in the case.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. No; but the evidence supports the fact that the death was the result of the injury he received.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over to come up at the next call of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN CLAIMANTS BECAUSE OF DAMAGE INFLICTED BY ESCAPING PRISONERS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2418, for the relief of certain claimants at Leavenworth, Kans., occasioned through damage to property inflicted by escaping prisoners.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to settle and adjust the claim of Elizabeth Phillips, in the amount of $55; Joseph M. Kressin, in the amount of $63.80; Joseph Verlinde, in the amount of $4.95, all arising through damages to personal property occasioned by the escape of seven prisoners from the United States penitentiary at Leavenworth, Kans., on December 11, 1931. There is hereby appropriated the sum of $123.75, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the payment of these claims.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ANNA H. JONES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2433, for the relief of Anna H. Jones.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold his objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Yes.

Mr. LUDLOW. I hope the gentleman will not press his objection. This is a meritorious case. The beneficiary is a very worthy old lady, living in my district, 66 years of age, ill, and in financial straits. This service man was an orphan from the time he was 7 years old.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. He was not related to the beneficiary?

Mr. LUDLOW. They were brother and sister. They were orphans, and she served in loco parentis. She was a mother to this boy from the time he was 7 years of age until he entered the Marine Corps. She was very good to him. She brought him up. Her circumstances became adverse, and after he was in the Marine Corps she was the one dependent upon him. He contributed to her support. The only reason in the world why she has not been able to get this 6 months' gratuity is that the law at the time of his death was such that it required he should designate the beneficiary. He simply neglected to do that, although testimony shows he intended to provide for her always. If the law had been as it is now, there would not be any question about it; she would get the gratuity.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Did he have any legal responsibility to support her?

Mr. LUDLOW. I do not know about the legal responsibility. The fact remains that she was in such condition that she had to have support. He supported her out of his income. The fact that he was supporting her establishes the legal responsibility. I think it is absolutely meritorious. I hope the gentleman will not press his objection.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of the act of June 4, 1920 (41 Stat. 824; 34 U.S.C. 943), to settle, adjust, and certify the claim of Anna H. Jones as a person standing in loco parentis to the late Marine Gunner Walter G. Jones, United States Marine Corps, for the sum of $1,110 as 6 months' death gratuity.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I desire again to prefer a unanimous-consent request. Our colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES], since he has been a Member of this Congress has used only 2 minutes of time. He now wants to speak for 5 minutes. I do not know what the gentleman is going to speak about. I may not agree with one single word the gentleman says, but as a new Member of this Congress, this is his public forum. I hope my colleagues will let the gentleman speak for 5 minutes. We may all disagree with what he will say, but we have no right to censor what he is going to say. And he should have the right to speak. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FOULKES] may proceed for 5 minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, then I make a point of no quorum. We will use another 20 minutes calling the roll. We ought to keep a quorum here if we are going to deny to one of our colleagues the right to speak 5 minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that we adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is always in order. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Texas insist on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; for I think we should allow the gentleman from Michigan to speak for 5 minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Wait until we finish the Private Calendar.

Mr. BLANTON. No; I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HOLLISTER. If the gentleman wants to spend the whole afternoon calling the Members of the House back and forth, that is his responsibility.

Mr. BLANTON. I am fighting for equal rights to all Members here.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why we should be bulldozed by the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is not a quorum present. The Chair will count.

Mr. BLANTON (interrupting the count). It is evident that we have no quorum, Mr. Speaker. We have an honest Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently there is not a quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were ayes 22 and noes 24.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. The House should either be called or should adjourn, Mr. Speaker, for we cannot proceed until we get a quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The vote was taken on a motion for a call of the House. The House refuses to order the call.

Mr. BLANTON. But the Chair had announced there was not a quorum present. It should force an automatic call of the House if we do not want to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An automatic roll call follows only where a quorum fails to vote on a question requiring a quorum. A motion for a call of the House does not require a quorum for its adoption, so an automatic roll call does not follow.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum. The Chair had stated that evidently there was no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. The House must get a quorum before it can proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MAPES. I suggest the gentleman from Texas consult the Parliamentarian to find out what to do next.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Texas does not have to do that. The gentleman from Texas has been here long enough to know how to proceed on his own motion.

Mr. MAPES. I can tell the gentleman what to do.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman from Texas does not want to adjourn. I am willing to rest on our oars as long as is the gentleman from Michigan.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Of course, a motion to adjourn is always in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there are but two alternatives: One is to adjourn, and I am not in favor of adjourning. Therefore, I do not make such a motion. The other alternative is that when the House finds itself without a quorum it must get a quorum before it can proceed. I make the point of order that if the House remain in session there must be a quorum present.

Mr. HOLLISTER. There is a third alternative, Mr. Speaker, and that is to give the gentleman from Texas his way.

Mr. BLANTON. I am fighting for the rights of a new Member. That is the paramount question just now. No Member here will gain anything by denying him his rights.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Has the gentleman from Michigan asked the gentleman from Texas to do this?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The gentleman does not act like it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Michigan has asked me to do it; and he is entitled to speak 5 minutes. If he had been granted this time, we could have considered and passed on over a dozen bills during this interim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing the House can do until a motion is made.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I have several important bills that will come up shortly, but unless we can agree I am willing that the House adjourn until such time as the House may be able to proceed in an orderly manner to take up these bills. Unless we can reach an agreement, I shall move that the House adjourn.

Perhaps the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his request.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Chair having announced that a quorum was not present, no business can be transacted until a quorum is obtained.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A motion to adjourn is always in order.

Mr. MAPES. Certainly; and that is the only motion that is in order at the present time.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no business has been transacted since there was a vote on that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was a vote on a motion for a call of the House, which is intervening business. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The motion to adjourn was rejected.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 43, noes 47.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present; and I submit that the vote is automatic. This is not a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This motion does not require a quorum for its adoption.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we either must have a call of the House or else we must adjourn. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. My recollection is that in this situation a motion to adjourn must be supported by a majority of those present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman cite the precedent or the rule upon which he relies?

Mr. MAPES. I have not the rules before me; but my recollection is that after a motion to adjourn has been voted down other business must intervene before a motion to adjourn can again be submitted by the Chair, unless the motion is supported by a majority of those present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is true when the House is proceeding under the automatic roll-call rule, but we are not proceeding under that rule.

The vote now is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the House must have a quorum before it can proceed with any business. The House has found itself without a quorum, and it must have one before it can proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House. Let us do something on this Private Calendar and stop this nonsense.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Two hundred and sixty Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

On motion of Mr. BLACK, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that the House is in no frame of mind to do business today. I am sorry, because there are a lot of bills on the Private Calendar which are of great interest to the Members who have introduced these bills, but if we are going to continue in this way I think the better thing to do is to adjourn, and I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. McSWAIN. Will the gentleman withhold the motion?

Mr. CULLEN. I withhold it.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, certain members of the Committee on Military Affairs, to wit, the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ROGERS], the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. JAMES], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARTER], the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GOSS], the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MONTET], and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] are detained attending hearings on important matters before that committee, and for this reason were not present at the roll call.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to Mr. BURCH (at the request of Mr. BLAND), on account of death in family.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on April 2, 1934, present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 7478. An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act so as to include cattle and other products as basic agricultural commodities, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, the majority leader asked me to move, at the end of this afternoon's proceedings, for a recess until this evening on the Private Calendar. The gentleman from New York is now making a motion to adjourn and I wanted my position in the matter understood in the RECORD. It is apparent to me that the Committee on Claims can make no progress on these bills. We are not getting a good reception this afternoon.

Mr. MAPES. A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLACK. It is unfair to the committee and unfair to the Members.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and, a division being demanded, there were—ayes 74, noes 62.

Mr. COOPER of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering tellers. All those in favor of ordering tellers will rise and stand until counted.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a sufficient number have risen.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Tellers have been ordered, and the Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULLEN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The House again divided, and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 75, noes 70.

So the motion to adjourn was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 48 minutes p.m.), in accordance with its previous order, the House adjourned until Wednesday, April 4, 1934, at 11 o'clock a.m.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate numerous telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of New Orleans, La., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "Fletcher-Rayburn stock exchange bill" in its present form, and favoring a less drastic bill, which were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Emmet Evans, of Stanberry, Mo., praying for the prompt passage of legislation providing payment of the so-called "soldiers' bonus", which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented the petition of Local Union No. 705, United Mine Workers of America, Girard, Kans., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 2926) to equalize the bargaining power of employers and employees, to encourage the amicable settlement of disputes between employers and employees, to create a National Labor Board, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

THE WORLD COURT

Mr. HEBERT presented the following resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the State of Rhode Island, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, ETC.,
IN GENERAL ASSEMBLY,
January Session, A.D. 1934.

Resolution approving ratification of World Court treaties (approved Mar. 22, 1934)

Whereas the United States of America was the first Government to urge the establishment of an international court for the settlement of controversies between nations;

Presidents McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, and Wilson successively exerted their efforts toward the formation of such a Court;

The Permanent Court of International Justice was established by a treaty, dated December 16, 1920, which has been ratified by 49 nations;

President Harding and President Coolidge each urged that the United States adhere to this Court;

The Senate on January 27, 1926, by a vote of 76 to 17, gave its advice and consent to our adherence to the Court, subject to five reservations;

A treaty accepting all our reservations, the treaty establishing the Court, and a treaty revising its statute were signed on December 9, 1929, by order of President Hoover;

The Democratic and the Republican Party platforms in 1932 reiterated their approval of our adhering to the Court;

The Court, of which John Bassett Moore and Charles Evans Hughes were judges, and Frank B. Kellogg now is a judge, has adjudicated and settled some 46 international controversies and disputed questions, many of which threatened disastrous conflicts;

For nearly 4 years the three treaties signed by the United States have been pending in the Senate, awaiting its advice and consent to ratification;

Postponement of ratification lays us open to charges of insincerity in our foreign policy and withholds from the Court that prestige which our adherence would give it, when it is to our own constant and immediate interest to strengthen this tribunal by every means in our power;

Prompt ratification—the reaffirmation of our faith in judicial process as the primary substitute for war—would be of instant and immeasurable encouragement to a world striving, in the face of threats of wars which would ruin it, to emerge from the worst depression in history: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the General Assembly of Rhode Island express its earnest hope that the United States Senate will give its advice and consent to ratification of the three treaties at the earliest possible moment; and that copies of this resolution be sent to the Senators from Rhode Island, with the request that this resolution be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

STATE OF RHODE ISLAND,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
Providence, March 28, 1934.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the original resolution, entitled "Resolution approving ratification of World Court treaties", passed by the general assembly and approved by the Governor on the 22d day of March, A.D. 1934.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of the State of Rhode Island this 28th day of March, in the year 1934.

[SEAL] LOUIS W. CAPPELLI,
Secretary of State.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7835, the revenue bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

OPERATIONS OF RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION—AMENDMENT

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3085) relating to the operations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

BRANCH BANKS IN TERRITORIES AND POSSESSIONS

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3287) to authorize national banks situated in a Territory or possession of the United States to establish branches, and I submit a report (No. 592) thereon. I ask unanimous consent that the bill and report may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, Senate bill No. 3287 (with the accompanying report) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any national banking association legally established and situated in a Territory or possession of the United States may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, establish and operate new branches at any point in the Territory or possession within which such association is situated.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, submitted the following report (No. 592), to accompany S. 3287:

The Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 3237) to authorize national banks situated in a Territory or possession of the United States to establish branches, having had the same under consideration, report the same with the recommendation that it pass without amendment.

In connection with certain national banks already established, and to be established, in the Territories and possessions of the United States, it is deemed essential from the point of view of economical and profitable operation that such banks should, under certain circumstances, establish and operate branches in the Territory or possession in which they are situated. At the present time there is no power to establish and operate such branches. National banks situated in States are authorized by section 5155 of the National Bank Act, as amended, to establish and operate branches in the State in which such banks are situated, provided that State banks in such State are affirmatively given such power by State law.

The word "State", as used in section 5155, however, probably does not include the Territories or possessions of the United States and the proposed bill is designed to permit national banks legally established and situated in a Territory or possession of the United States to establish and operate branches, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, in such Territory or possession.

PURCHASE OF VEHICLES FROM EMERGENCY RECOVERY FUNDS

Mr. DICKINSON submitted a resolution (S.Res. 217), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas under date of April 4, 1934, an Executive order was made overruling the decision of Comptroller General J. R. McCarl, wherein the Secretary of the Interior, Harold Ickes, was denied the right to purchase passenger-carrying vehicles out of emergency recovery funds under the National Recovery Act; and

Whereas it is of public interest to know whether the National Recovery Act supersedes other statutes controlling Federal expenditures: Therefore be it

Resolved, That Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes and Comptroller General J. R. McCarl be requested to furnish the Senate with all correspondence, contracts, and memoranda in connection with such transactions, together with a copy of the Executive order made in connection therewith.

FEDERAL GOLD-HOARDING LEGISLATION

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, on March 15, 1934, the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] caused to be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a newspaper report of the decision of Judge John R. King, of the Court of Common Pleas of Ohio, holding constitutional the gold clause in contracts entered into prior to adoption of the gold-antihoarding provisions of the act of Congress of March 9, 1933.

The Ohio court decision cited a ruling of the British House of Lords, holding such legislation confiscatory, and requiring payment in the equivalent in value of the gold contracted for in the event that it proved impossible to produce the gold. The effect of this decision, if finally approved, according to the press reports presented by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], would be to require a payment of about $6,000 to satisfy a debt of $3,600.

At Fort Morgan, Colo., in the same month in which Judge King's decision was rendered, Judge Arlington Taylor, one of Colorado's district court judges, having original jurisdiction for trial purposes in causes at law and in equity, in ruling on a demurrer, sustained a defense under the Antihoarding Act on the ground of impossibility of performance, and held sufficient an offer of payment in legal tender of the United States.

I have just received a copy of Judge Taylor's decision from Gen. James E. Jewel, a leading attorney and citizen of Fort Morgan, and, in view of the attention drawn to the subject by the reference to the decision of Judge King, it appears appropriate to request that the decision of Judge Taylor in a court of apparently similar jurisdiction be likewise printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF COLORADO,
County of Yuma, ss:

IN THE DISTRICT COURT

No. 2968

HOWARD KENNEDY, AS TRUSTEE, PLAINTIFF, v. LAURANCE L. CONRAD AND J. Q. CONRAD, DEFENDANTS. RULING ON DEMURRER

The plaintiff in this action seeks to recover a judgment totaling $8,038.79, the amount alleged to be due for principal, interest and attorney's fees, due upon a promissory note executed by the defendants July 28, 1923, for the principal sum of $7,000, payable September 1, 1933, with semiannual interest at 6 percent per annum from August 10, 1923, evidenced by 20 interest coupon notes. February 13, 1933, all interest coupons having been paid up to that time, the parties by mutual written agreement extended the payment of said principal note 5 years from September 1, 1933, upon the same terms and conditions as provided in the original agreement.

The note, among other things, provided that upon failure to pay the interest when due, the holder could declare the whole sum, both principal and interest, due and payable at once. The note further provided that the same should be payable as follows:

"Both principal and interest payable in United States gold coin", with exchange on New York.

September 1, 1933, the defendants failed to pay the interest then due. Thereafter the plaintiff instituted this suit in the district court of said Yuma County on November 21, 1933. In the complaint he declared the whole sum aforesaid, principal and interest, due and payable. December 9, 1933, the defendants appeared by their attorneys, Messrs. Chutkow and Atler, and promptly moved for a cost bond, the plaintiff being a nonresident. December 26, 1933, motion for cost bond was heard, motion was granted, and the same day the cost bond was duly furnished by the plaintiff.

January 19, 1934, the defendants filed their answer, admitting the giving of the note sued upon herein, the extension thereof, and the failure to pay interest due September 1, 1933. At the same time they tendered into court the amount of interest due September 1, with interest on said interest up to the time of the tender, totaling $218.75.

The defendants, pleading affirmatively, allege:

"Aver that it is further provided in said note that both the principal and interest is payable 'in United States gold coin'; that heretofore and on, to wit, the 9th day of March, A.D. 1933, the Congress of the United States duly enacted certain statutes which were approved by the President of the United States, a copy of which, marked 'exhibit A', is attached hereto and by reference made a part hereof; that thereafter, under and by virtue of said statutes, there was issued by the President of the United States, on the 10th day of March, A.D. 1933, a certain Executive Order No. 6073, a copy of the pertinent portions of which, marked 'exhibit B', is attached hereto and by reference made a part hereof; that thereafter and on, to wit, the 5th day of April, A.D. 1933, under and by virtue of the statute hereinbefore referred to, there was issued by the President of the United States a certain Executive Order No. 6102, a copy of the pertinent portions of which, marked 'exhibit C', is attached hereto and by reference made a part hereof.

"Aver that it was legally impossible for these defendants to make any payment either of principal or interest or tender of payment of either principal or interest in United States gold coin in accordance with the terms and effect of the said principal promissory note; that payment of the said interest in the terms of the said principal promissory note was excused by virtue of the statutes and Executive orders hereinbefore referred to; that these defendants are ready and willing to pay the interest upon said promissory note due September 1, 1933, in legal tender of the United States Government, and at this time hereby tender into the registry of this Court the amount of interest due upon the said principal promissory note on September 1, 1933, to wit, $218.75."

So far as applicable to this case and the demurrer aforesaid, the exhibits A, B, and C are as follows:

EXHIBIT A

In order to provide for the safer and more effective operation of the national-bank system and the Federal Reserve System, to preserve for the people the full benefits of the currency provided for by the Congress through the national-banking system and the Federal Reserve System, and to relieve interstate commerce of the burdens and obstructions resulting from the receipt on an unsound or unsafe basis of deposits subject to withdrawal by check, during such emergency period as the President of the United States by proclamation may prescribe, no member bank of the Federal Reserve System shall transact any banking business except to such extent and subject to such regulations, limitations, and restrictions as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President. Any individual, partnership, corporation, or association, or any director, officer, or employee thereof, violating any of the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or, if a natural person, may, in addition to such fine, be imprisoned for a term not exceeding 10 years. Each day that any such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense. (Mar. 9, 1933, c. —, 4, 48 Stat.)

"Whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury such action is necessary to protect the currency system of the United States, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, may require any or all individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations to pay and deliver to the Treasurer of the United States any or all gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates owned by such individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations. Upon receipt of such gold coin, gold bullion, or gold certificates, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay therefor an equivalent amount of any other form of coin or currency coined or issued under the laws of the United States. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay all costs of the transportation of such gold bullion, gold certificates, coin, or currency, including the cost of insurance, protection, and such other incidental costs as may be reasonably necessary. Any individual, partnership, association, or corporation failing to comply with any requirement of the Secretary of the Treasury made under this subsection shall be subject to a penalty equal to twice the value of the gold or gold certificates in respect of which such failure occurred, and such penalty may be collected by the Secretary of the Treasury by suit or otherwise."

EXHIBIT B

"By virtue of the authority vested in me by section 5 (b) of the act of October 6, 1917 (40 Stat.L. 411), as amended by the act of March 9, 1933, and by section 4 of the said act of March 9, 1933, and by virtue of all other authority vested in me, I hereby issue the following Executive order. • • •

"No permission to any banking institution to perform any banking functions shall authorize such institution to pay out any gold coin, gold buillion, or gold certificates except as authorized by the Secretary of the Treasury, nor to allow withdrawal of any currency for hoarding, nor to engage in any transaction in foreign exchange except such as may be undertaken for legitimate and normal business requirements, for reasonable traveling and other personal requirements, and for the fulfillment of contracts entered into prior to March 6, 1933 * * *."

EXHIBIT C

"By virtue of the authority vested in me by section 5 (b) of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended by section 2 of the act of March 9, 1933, entitled 'An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes', in which amendatory act Congress declared that a serious emergency exists, I, Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do declare that said national emergency still continues to exist and pursuant to said section do hereby prohibit the hoarding of gold coin, gold bullion, and gold certificates within the continental United States by individuals, partnerships, associations, and corporations and hereby prescribe the following regulations for carrying out the purposes of this order: * * *

"SEC. 3. Until otherwise ordered any person becoming the owner of any gold coin, gold bullion, or gold certificates after April 28, 1933, shall, within 3 days after receipt thereof, deliver the same in the manner prescribed in section 2, unless such gold coin, gold bullion, or gold certificates are held for any of the purposes specified in paragraphs (a), (b), or (c) of section 2; or unless such gold coin or gold bullion is held for purposes specified in paragraph (d) of section 2 and the person holding it is, with respect to such gold coin or bullion, a licensee or applicant for license pending action thereon. * * *

"SEC. 9. Whoever willfully violates any provision of this Executive order or of these regulations or of any rules, regulation, or license issued thereunder may be fined not more than $10,000, or, if a natural person, may be imprisoned for not more than 10 years, or both; and any officer, director, or agent of any corporation who knowingly participates in any such violation may be punished by a like fine, imprisonment, or both * * *."

January 22, 1934, the plaintiff through his attorney, Hon. Louis Henke, filed a general demurrer to the above defense. Oral arguments on this demurrer were heard by this court February 7, 1934, and written briefs were called for by the court. Briefs accordingly were submitted and have now been duly considered by the court. The arguments and briefs submitted disclose but one question to be considered and determined by the court (other matters of minor moment having otherwise been disposed of). This one question is: Does the legal impossibility to obtain gold coin with which to pay the interest which became due September 1, 1933, entitled the plaintiff to refuse other legal tender of the United States and declare the whole sum of both principal and interest now due and payable as called for in his complaint?

This is a new question before the courts, and so far as now appears there are no decisions of any appellate court in this country. Counsel have cited none and I have found none.

Two defenses were open to the defendants in this case, viz: (1) The constitutionality of the act of Congress and the Executive orders of the President; (2) the impossibility to obtain gold. Counsel for defendants elected only one—the legal impossibility to obtain gold. The constitutional question therefore is not before us and no expression thereon is necessary or proper.

Much, however, has been written in recent months by eminent lawyers and law commentators of high standing on the subject of the "gold-coin clause."

For example, in the 42 Yale Law Journal, page 1051 (written May 1933, shortly after the congressional act and Executive orders), appears a lengthy discussion of this gold-coin-clause question.

The plaintiff in this case contends that Gregory v. Morris (96 U.S. 619; 24 Law Ed. 740) and Dorr v. Hunter (183 Ill. 435; 56 N.E. 160), and a long line of cases therein cited, are decisive of this question. Among the cases cited, and which has become a leading case in the United States, is Bronson v. Rodes (7 Wall. 229; 19 Law ed. 141). This is the leading case in the United States establishing the doctrine that a provision for payment of gold in a contract is valid and enforceable according to its terms. In that case a mortgage was executed in 1851 securing a certain sum of money and was payable "in gold or silver coin, lawful money of the United States." The interest was also payable in the same manner. It was decided in 1869 in the Supreme Court of the United States. After this debt became due Congress passed the so-called "Legal Tender Act of 1862", making United States notes lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, subject to certain exceptions not material in the case at bar. The debtor, after the passage of the legal-tender acts, attempted to pay his indebtedness with United States notes. The Supreme Court held that the creditor was not bound to accept such notes, but the debt could only be satisfied by the payment of coined dollars.

This decision has been consistently followed since that time in the United States. Practically all of the State courts have followed this case up to the present time.

A different situation exists at the present time, due to the enactment of the congressional statute and Executive orders set out above, as was said by the writer of a learned note in 84 A.L.R., page 1500:

"Assuming that payment in gold or of an additional or equivalent amount in legal-tender money is expressly forbidden by or under act of Congress, certain constitutional questions will doubtless arise with respect to existing contracts, such as the effect of the due-process clause in the fifth amendment to the Federal Constitution, or if such payment is not expressly forbidden but the contract becomes merely impossible of performance because of the action of Congress, or of the Executive under congressional authority, the question may arise whether the debtor can invoke the doctrine of intervening impossibility of performance. As a general proposition, one is discharged from his obligation under a contract where the act contracted for is rendered unlawful, or becomes impossible, because of a change in the law prior to the time for performance. Whether or not a contract to make payment in gold or gold coin comes within this rule may be doubted, because a substantial performance might be had by rendering a decree for such sum in legal-tender money as would be the equivalent of gold coin contracted for, as the courts have sometimes done."

Probably since the writing of the above Congress has acted and enacted the new statute, and the President has issued two Executive orders, the essential portions of which are above set out in haec verba. It will be seen from the above that the leading case of Bronson v. Rodes, and numerous subsequent cases, following the rule laid down, furnish no aid to the court in the case at bar for the reason that almost without exception, if not entirely without exception, in the Bronson case and the long list of cases following that case, gold coin was in fact obtainable, but now the entire picture has changed. Gold coin in the contract involved in this case cannot be obtained and could not be used if it were possible to obtain it.

I have stated above that the quoted reference from Eighty-fourth American Law Reporter was probably written prior to the act of Congress and Executive orders. From Eighty-sixth American Law Reporter I quote the following as the best statement of the situation shortly following the enactment by Congress and the promulgation of the Executive orders:

"The acts of Congress and of the Executive in declaring and enforcing the gold embargo and prohibiting the hoarding of gold raise some serious constitutional questions. Not only are individuals required thereunder to deliver up any gold over a small minimum that they may have on hand but they are thereby prevented from paying gold even in satisfaction of outstanding contracts and obligations which expressly call for payment in gold coins of the weight and fineness prevailing at the date of the obligations. According to a recent estimate, there are obligations in effect in the United States containing such gold clauses totaling about $124,000,000,000. This, of course, calls for more gold than exists in the United States, or even in the world. Under the regulations now in effect it is impossible to discharge any of these obligations in gold" (86 A.L.R. 1556).

From the above may be seen the seriousness of the question before this court, and the probability of an enormous amount of litigation that lies ahead in our pathway which the coming years can alone tell. The figures above stated are almost beyond belief.

Counsel for the defendants have well quoted in their brief a very significant statement written by the author of the article in the Yale Law Journal above alluded to. The article states in part in relation particularly to the rule that has long been observed and as laid down in the Bronson case:

"None of the cases raise any question of the effect upon gold-clause contracts of impossibility to secure gold coin. * * * By Executive order of April 5, 1933, all persons and corporations were required to deliver gold coins owned by them to the Federal Reserve banks. While payment of gold coins by private individuals or corporations other than banking institutions is not restrained by this order, it is practically impossible for the payor to procure gold with which to discharge his obligations. Moreover, restrictions on dealings in foreign exchange would appear to make the purchase of gold abroad also practically impossible. So long as these orders continue in force a court would not be hard pressed to find that there was legal impossibility of paying out gold coin. The following are four possible alternatives available to the courts: (1) They may construe the debt as dischargeable in its face amount of legal tender; (2) they may construe impossibility of procuring gold coin as suspending the creditor's right to gold coin until the restrictions are removed; (3) they may give judgments for damages payable in legal tender for the breach of the gold-coin contract; (4) they may hold the contract frustrated and the creditor entitled to restitution."

The performance of a contract cannot be compelled where it would involve a violation of law. The above has been the rule for many years. It has been frequently held that a contract is discharged where after it has been entered into the performance is made unlawful (13 C.J. 646, par. 720; 6 Ruling Case Law, p. 1000, par. 366).

Paragraph 366 above reads briefly in part:

"The decisions of practically all jurisdictions are to the effect that where a contract, legal in its inception, becomes illegal by subsequent statutory enactment, the contract is wholly terminated as soon as the statute takes effect, even though the time specified for its performance has not yet fully expired, and no action can be maintained by either party for failure to perform the obligations of the contract after the illegality has attached."

As illustrative of the above rules the case of Cowley v. The Northern Pacific Railway Co. (Washington) (123 Pacific, p. 998), is applicable. In 1898 Cowley made a contract with the railroad company to convey a parcel of land in the city of Spokane. In consideration of this conveyance the company signed a written agreement to furnish an annual pass to the plaintiff and his family, entitling them to free transportation over the company's entire system of railway and steamship lines. The property was conveyed. In 1906 Congress passed what is known as the "Commerce Act", providing that:

"No carrier, * * * shall engage or participate in the transportation of passengers or property, as defined in this act, * * * nor shall any carrier charge or demand or collect or receive a greater or less or different compensation for such transportation of passengers, * * * than the rates, fares, and charges which are specified in the tariff filed and in effect at that time, nor shall any carrier refund or remit, in any manner or by any device, any portion of the rates, fares, and charges so specified, nor extend to any * * * person any privileges or facilities in the transportation of passengers * * * except such as are specified in such tariffs."

After the taking effect of this act the company refused to perform its contract any further upon the ground that it could not legally do so. Cowley brought suit for the reconveyance of the property. The Supreme Court of Washington in passing upon the question said in part:

"The act of Congress to which reference has been made forbade the further performance of the contract by the defendant. * * * The plaintiff conveyed the property to the defendant upon the faith of defendant's promise to perform conditions which were then wholly lawful, but which, after a substantial part performance, became unlawful without any contributing cause upon the part of either party. The full performance has not been arrested by any act or omission of the defendant, but by the Congress of the United States acting within its constitutional powers. It follows, from what has been said, that the defendant cannot be mulcted in damages because of and only because of its observance of a law making further performance of the contract on its part impossible."

The demurrer in this case admits that it was legally impossible for the defendants to make payment in accordance with the terms in effect as provided by the contract, and because of congressional acts and Executive orders, as set forth in the answer.

I am convinced that there is but one thing for the court in this case to do, and that is overrule the demurrer and to hold that as the acts of Congress and Executive orders of the President of the United States now stand, the plaintiff should be required in this case to accept the tendered payment of interest in the amount specified in the answer in whatever now remains as legal tender.

I am not unmindful of the now famous English case of Belge D'Electricite (149 L.T.N.S. 108; 86 A.L.R. 1158). I also have in mind the note pertaining to said case found in 84 A.L.R. 1498; and also have in mind the recent reversal by the House of Lords of the decision of the Court of Appeals of England in that case. However, the reversal decision or its holding is not at the time of the ruling on this demurrer available to the court.

I acknowledge great aid from the briefs in this case, and particularly the brief resisting the demurrer, and have had under consideration cases therein referred to, namely, Irving Trust Co. v. Hazlewood (265 N.Y.S. 57), and Canada American Chicle Co. v. Paper Box Co. (50 Ontario Law Reports 517). In the Irving Trust Co. case the Supreme Court of New York distinguished between the Bronson case and the situation arising in the case at bar.

In the Canada case a mortgage provided for payment "in current gold coin * * * in lawful money of Canada." The court found that gold coin was not procurable in Canada and

"It has become legally impossible for a debtor to distribute his obligation in Canada in gold coin made in Canada. * * * Indeed, my view of the legislation and the orders of council pursuant thereto is that they nullify or suspend for the time being the benefit of the exercise of the option given to these mortgagees * * * or rather prevent the debtor from complying with it and enable him to discharge his debt in money which is legal tender in this country."

The defendants in this case, in my opinion, cannot under existing congressional enactments and Executive orders go out and purchase "any gold coin of the United States" with which to pay their interest or the principal. The impossible ought not to be required of them. Neither can the plaintiff require in other legal tender any excess over the amount of the actual interest due September 1 last, or what might be termed the equivalent of the increased value of gold on that date. Assuming gold to have greatly increased, for example, on that date, the plaintiff is not entitled to any excess aforesaid, for the reason that he could not go out and buy the gold equivalent therewith. It would be as impossible for him so to do as it is for these defendants. If he had the gold equivalent, he could not pay his own obligations with it. He would have to turn it [over] to some Federal Reserve bank and at par. His Government could get the profit or increase but the plaintiff could not.

The answer states a complete defense on impossibility of performance, and the demurrer is overruled.

TAXATION—ARTICLE BY SENATOR DAVIS

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, the editor of the Right of Way, a magazine published by the Pennsylvania Threshermen and Farmers Protective Association, asked me to contribute an article on State taxation and the expenditure thereof on social legislation, education, and the general maintenance and operation of municipal governments.

In response to that request I prepared for the March issue an article under the caption "The Right of Way is Right on Taxes." The Right of Way is an independent, nonpartisan publication, and, according to its own description, "is a periodical of protest against things unfair and unjust."

I ask unanimous consent to have that article printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Right of Way, March 1934]

THE RIGHT OF WAY IS RIGHT ON TAXES

By United States Senator JAMES J. DAVIS

The keen interest of our people in the problem of taxes is highly encouraging. When folks become interested in their taxes they become interested in their government, and this is the beginning of good health for politics. Pennsylvania has been and is the leader in industrial enterprise; she must now become the leader in social justice. To promote this end Pennsylvania should develop a first-class business government.

The first step toward sound government in Pennsylvania will be a constitutional convention which will give sufficient power to the general assembly to order the needed reforms. Our State constitution reminds me of an old pair of pants which I used to wear as a boy; they had been patched so many times and in so many places that scarcely none of the original cloth was left. We must take our choice between continuously patching up the pants of Pennsylvania law and the hopeful alternative of getting a new pair of pants. The patching process is slow business, does not always give protection where protection is needed, and in these days is a pennywise, pound-foolish policy. Like the pants of my boyhood days, the constitution of our Commonwealth did well enough when the State was young, but it does not meet our needs today. Our requirements are now so numerous that only a constitutional convention can provide the cloth necessary for a growing people. We need a new garment cut from clean, strong cloth.

MUST CUT DOWN

The second step toward sound government is the elimination of unnecessary offices. There is too much duplication of governmental activity. This is costly and cumbersome. We have too many political fences and too large an army of officeholders at work pulling the wires and making repairs. Again the citizens of Pennsylvania must choose between good government with less taxes and complicated government with more taxes. If the government of the State were put on a business basis, without resort to any extreme measures, the tax burden growing out of State, county, township, and municipal expenditures could be cut in half.

We need Federal, State, and local government, but the responsibilities of each province of government should be so closely defined and so carefully administered that needless overlapping and duplication would be avoided. During the last 20 years the tax increase has been tremendous. The ratio of increase in various governmental units is as follows: Cities, 206 percent; boroughs, 104 percent; school districts, 429 percent; counties, 400 percent; townships, 250 percent; State, 500 percent. During the same period the population has increased but 25 percent. There are 5,637 local government taxing units in Pennsylvania, and these local units require a fifth more of the tax dollar than the State and Federal Governments combined. It is, therefore, perfectly obvious that if there is to be economy in taxes it must be in the field of local government. A complete and scientific reorganization will bring the needed relief.

SOCIAL LEGISLATION

Our people must adapt themselves to our growing social needs together with the demand for substantial social-welfare legislation. Private benevolence has much to its credit, but has proven itself insufficient in time of national emergency. Now, we may expect government to assume a permanent responsibility for the social needs of our people. This will be viewed in the future as one of the constructive benefits of the depression. A comprehensive program of social-welfare legislation must be supported by taxes of sufficient stability to carry it through in all kinds of weather. This is more than can be said of Pennsylvania's tax program in the past. Taxes which shrink toward zero when they are most greatly needed to cover social-welfare demands will not be the chief taxes of the future. Income taxes have been producing less and less. Collections in 1933 from income taxes produced only one third the revenue thus obtained in 1930. Other forms of taxation will, therefore, be added to the income tax to produce the necessary revenue, but great care should be taken lest increased tax burdens shall be placed where they will increase poverty. The sales tax will help bear part of the tax load if it is rightly considered. The people of Illinois in time of depression and impending bankruptcy have improved their condition notably in 6 months' time by the sales tax. I believe that the sales tax is desirable, but only when low-priced food, clothing, and drug supplies are exempted. I believe that the sales tax should be graduated so as to rest most heavily on commodities on the higher price levels—the luxuries and the semiluxuries. Taxes which burden the poor in order to provide for the poor are not to be encouraged. Indeed, they must not be tolerated.

A substantial social-welfare legislation program will cost money, but it will be money well spent and acceptable to the people if it is properly administered. For that reason, useless duplication of governmental activities and inefficiency in government must go. The electorate is weary of promises of reform, partial reforms, election-day orations, and the lopsided administration of government. Fortunately, taxpayers are becoming alert and are recording their verdicts at the polls. A costly social-welfare program plus our present waste in government will break the backs of the taxpayers and chaos will result. The people of Pennsylvania must now choose good government.

NATIONAL TAXES

A sharp increase of national taxes will soon be imposed upon us. This is but another reason why waste in Pennsylvania government can no longer be tolerated. The national debt now stands at $22,000,000,000. The Government expects to borrow $10,000,000,000 in the next 6 months. Thus it is anticipated that the national debt will mount to at least $32,000,000,000 by 1935. That is thirty-two thousand million dollars. The figures are easily written but never understood. Let us think of them this way. Approximately 1,000,000,000 minutes, that is, one thousand million minutes, have passed since the birth of Christ. An expenditure, therefore of $32 every minute since the birth of Christ, 1,935 years ago, would be the equivalent of our national debt, irrespective of interest—but there's the rub. This enormous unprecedented debt plus interest charges, which will exceed one thousand million dollars per annum, means increased taxes for everybody. The Federal Government now pays annually for interest alone one fourth of the cost of national administration during the prosperous years when Coolidge was President. It is now apparent that one of the great tragedies of tax history—that is, human history—was the failure to establish a sinking fund during the prosperity period from 1919 to 1929. If, instead of constantly publishing surpluses and lowering taxes, normal taxes had been maintained to meet current needs and to establish a sinking fund when the Nation was well able to do so, the pressure of the present emergency might now be greatly relieved. But because foresight was lacking, we now have unprecedented tax burdens. This is but one more reason why Pennsylvania must shield her people from unnecessary local taxes.

THE SCHOOL PROBLEM

Over 2,000,000 children who are ordinarily in school because they are of compulsory school age are now being deprived of an education throughout the Nation; nearly 2,000 rural schools in 24 States failed to open last fall; the average salary per year for public-school teachers in the United States this last year was less than $750. Moreover, each year 200,000 more children enroll in the public schools than the year before, and high school enrollment is increasing at the rate of 15 percent annually. These conditions apply in varying degrees to Pennsylvania. Our State has 2,587 school districts. Thirty-two districts have no schools nor teachers, yet a regular board is elected, a secretary, solicitor, treasurer, auditor, and tax collector hired. One hundred and ten districts each have only one teacher in a small one-room school, but the same set-up of five hired administrative officials exists. There are in the State 608 school districts in which there are more paid school officers than there are school teachers. Education is the right of every child. Country children are no exception. The township schools should be just as well equipped and taught as the city schools. This will mean that the larger governmental units must share the school-tax burden of the townships for farm mortgages are so high at the present time as to make school-tax increases in rural districts inexpedient. At the same time, parents and children who live in the rural districts should not be penalized because they have the good sense to live in the country. We must now choose improved education for our children even though some administrative officials can no longer be paid. I dare say that a large majority of these will prove public spirited enough to continue service even though tax conditions will not permit a continuation of their salaries. Otherwise we shall be whipped by taxes which we cannot bear.

THE SALES TAX

The ideal system of taxation has never yet been attained and probably never will be. Often the method which seems most perfect in theory has proven worst in practice. No one method should be overworked. Tax collection will succeed best when the burden is placed on earning power and this is not always in the same place. Experience teaches that the incidence of taxation is elusive. This should be in our minds when we are urging a new constitution for Pennsylvania.

The sales tax has been called the "painless tax." It is an excellent form of taxation under the right conditions, but the slogan attached to it should not be repeated thoughtlessly. A general turnover tax affects everyone for it touches every consumer as we now know through the operations of the gasoline and other sales taxes. Bearing on consumers as it does, it lays an especial burden on the people who have proportionately the least, if precautions are not taken to protect them. A very large number of our citizens, probably the majority, have an income which is only barely sufficient for a decent living, some a little more and some a little or considerably less. All that are included in this class find their living expenses require all or nearly all of their receipts. To them the cost of living is everything in a financial way and in proportion to their ability to pay the tax is heavy even though they may not realize it. To the wealthy the amount of tax on the cost of living is a negligible part of their income and to them the tax becomes insignificant, although it is often acceptable as it shields them from more direct forms of taxation. These considerations make it evident that a sales tax can be unsatisfactory.

GEORGE WASHINGTON

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a historical statement with reference to the life of George Washington, written by Mr. J. A. Nelson, an attorney of Decorah, Iowa.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

History is usually defined as a record of man's activities. In other words, it is a true story of past events. It might rightly be termed a "résumé of bad and good deeds, of movements that have either caused the enslavement or liberation of peoples." In a historic picture of the past clamors of people centered about certain ideals are brought forth; we call it civilization, which is in effect an improved condition; not a condition that is stationary, but ever moving forward and upward. In this onward march we are attracted by certain men who have occupied the arena of leadership and by their powers and influence have brought forth new standards of social and governmental conditions. Quite often such men have been the prime movers in these changing conditions, and in order rightly to understand the cause and effect of such eras or epochs a careful study of the biographies of such leaders is not only interesting but is of immeasurable value.

George Washington occupies just such a position of leadership in one of the greatest and most important movements in all history. As is invariably the case, ancestry and environment had their influence upon his life. His forefathers have been traced back to the days of William the Conqueror in England, the oldest record being that of a knight by the name of William de Hertborn, who occupied a village by that name. This place was later exchanged for a manor and village named Wessynton. With the passing of the time the name Wessynton became Washington, just as we speak of it today. But the interesting part is that historians who have been concerned with tracing the genealogy of the Washington family do not hesitate to state that the family tree came into existence on English soil—with the Norman conquest—and doubtless that condition to a certain extent accounts for the ruggedness, the love for adventure, and the longing for independence that seemed to permeate the very life of the subject of this address.

It is also an established fact that through the centuries the ancestors of Washington were inherently endowed with great vigor, a deep moral nature, and sound common sense. While they were neither brilliant nor impulsive, their station as owners and tillers of the soil left them in that important intermediate class between the nobility on one hand and the common class on the other, which has been termed the bone and sinew of the British Empire.

Tracing the Washingtons from the fifteenth century we find them moving from Durham in England to Northampton, where they attained to wealth and power. In 1657 Andrew and John Washington came to Virginia where they were granted large estates by the King for past military services, and here they became growers of wheat and tobacco.

In this new land the Washingtons were among the leaders, and this change of environment, of conditions and method of living, brought into being new qualities. While those remaining in the old country continued in their old ways and made no perceptible change in the record of their race, those in America took on a new life, snatching as if from a new atmosphere new visions, and were infected with a more aggressive spirit which became the dominating influence on the American soil from the time of the first settlement.

George Washington was born in Virginia February 22, 1732, and was a son of August and Mary Ball Washington. August Washington had two sons from a prior marriage, the most important of whom was Lawrence Washington. The latter, who was so fortunate as to secure his education abroad and have the advantages of military training and service under the Crown, at all times turned his attention to the welfare of his younger half-brother George. Upon the death of Lawrence Washington, when George was about 16, he became the possessor of his estate at Mount Vernon, so named by Lawrence Washington in honor of Admiral Vernon, an officer of the British Navy. A study of the life of Lawrence Washington, with reference to the influence he exerted over George, his younger brother, should, so far as his memory is concerned, demand favorable attention.

And we must not forget the valuable inheritances that George Washington received from his father and mother. No doubt his magnificent physique, his military talents, his common sense were seemingly derived from the paternal side, yet equally important was the sweetness of disposition, respect, and obedience to the finer virtues, not to overlook his firm belief in a Divine Providence, that came from his mother. It is true that Washington's school advantages were somewhat limited, owing to the fact that because of the death of his father while a young boy he was partially left to shift for himself. While his spelling and writing were far from excellent, his mental status became such that he could reason and speak in a masterly manner.

The love and affection that Washington exhibited toward his mother is a story that every schoolboy can well afford to take into account. Washington had longed to enter the British Navy, and, through the efforts of his brother, Lawrence, he obtained the necessary papers to go to sea. In those days that signified high honors, and many were envious for this distinction. When the hour came for Washington to report for duty, and about to bid his mother good-bye, he was so overtaken by her grief that he surrendered his place. From every standpoint this must be termed a heroic act—giving insight into the good traits that must have inhabited that soul. At 18 he took up surveying, and, from an examination of the records in half a dozen counties in Virginia, he must have done a large business.

When 19 years of age he was put in charge of the local militia. In 1753 he had attracted enough attention to be appointed special commissioner to go to the headquarters of the French Army, which had military posts on the Ohio River, to determine by what authority they had invaded British soil. The task was filled with peril, but Washington was equal to the occasion. So well did he demonstrate his strength, his courage, and his intelligence that from thence on he was acknowledged as the rising hope of Virginia.

Shortly afterward we have the French and Indian Wars. He was appointed to an important post in the expedition sent out by the colonists. At the very beginning of this campaign he evinced a strong military talent, by which a possible defeat was turned to victory. The French troops were approaching him with a view to a surprise engagement, but Washington cut across a dense forest at night, overtaking the enemy before they were ready for defense, and annihilated the entire force.

In 1755 Washington was the aide-de-camp to General Braddock and took part in the luckless expedition against Fort Duquesne. Washington warned General Braddock against the European method of marching with drums beating and colors flying. His army was ambushed and routed and it was only the tact, the courage, the coolness, and the genius of Washington that saved the Army from complete destruction. While this may be termed a defeat, yet Washington earned his laurels, the same as though it had been victory. He gained the public confidence and was appointed Commander in Chief of all the Virginia forces. Again in 1758 he exhibited further gallantry and military skill in a similar campaign.

In the month of January 1759 he was happily married to a rich widow by the name of Martha Custis whose home was near Williamsburg. With her two children she became the proud mistress of the Mount Vernon plantation.

Washington now served in the Virginia Assembly, known as the House of Burgesses, where he became prominent by reason of his good judgment, efficiency, and common sense. From then on for 14 years he lived on his estate, always generous and hospitable, idolized by his people, and always taking a deep interest in local affairs.

As Washington went about his daily tasks, he never ignored the trend of current events. While he was a British subject, and had fought their battles, he began to harbor thoughts that had a more direct bearing on the welfare of the colonists. With him their interest came first.

To understand later events it is apparent that the direct result of the French and Indian wars, especially compelling the French to recede from Canada, brought new ideas into the minds of the colonists. They became more united and their military experience prepared them for coming events. On the other hand, England assumed the attitude of demanding reciprocity from the colonists for past services, which gave rise to many grievances, especially the idea of imposing taxes, though without representation, which was the immediate cause of the American Revolution.

The thought of absolute independence was of slow growth, even with Washington. At the time of the Continental Congress in 1775 he wrote that "independence was not then desired by any thinking man in America." But in the spring of 1776, after repeated attempts at reconciliation, Washington boldly asserted, "Nothing but independence can save us." Later that summer followed the great step known in American history as the "Declaration of Independence."

Thus the colonists finally assumed the idea that they had a common interest, and that in order to achieve the blessings of a new country they must renounce the shackles that interfered with their natural rights; and they were not entirely helpless in this, as their experience and that of Washington as well in the French and Indian wars now served as a priceless preparation for the Revolutionary struggle.

Washington, by common request and consent, became elevated to a station of great responsibility—that of Commander in Chief of the Colonial Armies. Under his wise leadership we witness the greatest panorama in history, known as the "American Revolution", comprising a most unique contest of wide-world consequences, inaugurated to rid the social order of unbearable and unfair monarchial demands and to establish permanently in their stead human liberty and individual rights, such as the masses for ages past had clamored for but failed to achieve—but, here then, as if in the fullness of time, under the spell of well-planned and crystallized efforts of visionary compartiots, like Patrick Henry, Thomas Jefferson, and John Madison, the differences of opinion resolved themselves into a terrible conflict of uncontrollable proportions, uncertain as to its outcome, with battle after battle, defeat upon defeat, yet the American troops appearing seemingly unconquerable; and as that war progressed, it resulted in complex and romantic military movements, the memories of which will always linger in our Nation's most sacred lore—such episodes as that of Washington and his troops crossing the icy Delaware, taking by surprise the feasting Hessians at Trenton, purposely leaving camp fires burning so as to slip unnoticed to rout the British at Princeton, and quickly moving northward to establish winter quarters at Morristown; switching from force to tactics and from tactics to force, as was deemed most advantageous, holding troops in line under the most adverse of circumstances, as was the case when the shivering troops left bloody footprints in the wintry snows at Valley Forge—but no trap could catch them, no genius could outwit them, even though there were dangerous contending forces within the American troops, poorly clad, scantily rationed, meagerly equipped, some officers quarrelsome and even soldiers refusing to fight, others deserting or hesitating to reenlist, and the people at home refusing to support them, these untrained soldiers often pitted against crack and well-trained armies of Europe; and in the darkest hour of that conflict moved the paltry shadow of Benedict Arnold, receding from the field of action, as he had turned traitor after winning Saratoga, one of the 15 decisive battles of the world. But the cause was not lost, for fortunately during all of the turbulent and nerve-wrecking years we are attracted by the glory and splendor of that heroic figure, George Washington, planning and moving as if by magic, never faltering, never losing hope, never losing faith in the guiding power of a Divine Providence, never losing sight of the justice of the cause, nor once doubting its victorious outcome, but remaining ever steadfast and determined—yes, unhesitatingly moving forward to the appointed end.

Aid from France at the important hour contributed greatly to success. As a contrast to the dark and gloomy days of former campaigns we finally see Cornwallis and the British troops bottled up at Yorktown, where they surrendered with victory for the colonists assured. Thus came to an end Washington's services as a great soldier—and now he returns to his home quarters at Mount Vernon to rest and recuperate.

The Thirteen Colonies were fully recognized as States and given cognizance as a government by the treaty of peace. They were held together by Articles of Confederation, by the terms of which each State maintained its separate government, without the aid of a centralized government. This condition was little short of anarchy. Everything was out of step. There was no government with which other powers could deal, no supreme laws by which money could be coined or debts redeemed. Meetings were held to air the popular griefs; rebellions were rampant; and every day things became not only more hopeless but actually violent. Little by little the idea of reform found favor. A convention met at Annapolis in 1786, with representatives from a majority of States, but after mature deliberation it was deemed inadvisable to proceed, although the States were called upon to take speedy measures and meeting the following May in full convention.

From his home at Mount Vernon Washington was watching with keen interest and intense solicitude the workings of the great political confederation. He said: "The Confederation seems a little more than a shadow. It is one of the most extraordinary things in nature, that we should confederate a nation and yet be afraid to give the rulers of the Nation sufficient powers to order and direct same." A commission went to Mount Vernon, where matters were discussed with Washington in quiet counsels, looking to the future solution of the intricate problems of the States.

The Constitutional Convention met at Philadelphia. It was the most remarkable gathering in all history. Each State sent their best timber; among them were conspicuous military leaders, statesmen of the day, future Presidents, with George Washington heading the Virginia delegation. On the 25th day of May 1787, with a quorum present and George Washington occupying a seat in the assembly, he was by unanimous choice made president of the Convention. The great soldier now assumed the role of a statesman. The preamble to the Constitution gives the reason for its adoption, "To form a more perfect Union." To go into detail as to the workings of that august assembly would be to depart from the purpose of this discourse, but let us remember that no sooner had the news of the adoption of the Constitution been heralded until the people again turned to Mount Vernon for leadership. By unanimous consent Washington became the first choice for President. He was inaugurated and commenced his task as first President of the United States of America. A great majority of the people viewed Washington in the new trust with confidence, others with doubt and apprehension.

The great leader held the new Nation under his sway, a Nation which now was one of unity, composed of inseparable States, to grow in number with the growth of the population and the call of the West, and westward toward the Mississippi and later the Pacific was the natural course.

This patriot and man, animated and dominated by a new national spirit, carried the young Republic through 8 troubled years—all of the time conscious of his limitations, knowing as he sat at its helm that it was an untried system, virtually an experiment, in the realm of government, but also knowing that true happiness can best be obtained when the people themselves rule under and by virtue of delegated authority. By his unselfish service he made the Constitution the most treasured of documents and the United States the most beloved of commonwealths.

His services ended as President, and refusing a third term, he once more embarked for his beloved homestead, there to pass his waning years. He died December 14, 1799, after a brief illness.

A few years ago it happened to be my privilege and pleasure to stand near the foot of the Washington Monument and to meditate on the subject of this tremendous memorial; to enter the modest but celebrated Mount Vernon home and gaze with amazement at the beauty and splendor of that spacious estate; to see the church where Washington worshipped and the sepulchre where America's beloved couple, George and Martha Washington, rest on their Nation's bosom. Seeing this adds to one's admiration for the cradle of his country and causes one to reflect on the glory of the service of our Nation's builders.

That we may more fully appreciate the spirit that prevailed after George Washington's departure, attention is called to a portion of the memorial address delivered by John Marshall in the House of Representatives, December 19, 1799: "More than any other individual and as much as to one individual as possible has he contributed to found this, our wide-spreading empire, and to give to the western world independence and freedom."

On the same day Timothy Pickering, speaking in the United States Senate, said: "With patriotic pride we review the life of our Washington and compare him with those of other countries who have been preeminent in fame. Ancient and modern names diminish before him. Greatness and guilt have too often been allied; but his fame is whiter than it is brilliant. The destroyers of nations stood abashed at the majesty of his virtue. It reproved the intemperance of their ambition and darkened the splendor of victory. Let his countrymen consecrate the memory of the heroic general, the patriotic statesman, and the virtuous sage; let them teach their children never to forget that the fruit of his labors and his example are their inheritance."

And add to this the beautiful tribute from the pen and lips of Abraham Lincoln, when a Member of Congress: "Washington's is the mightiest name of earth—long since mightiest in the cause of civil liberty; still mightiest in moral reformation. On that name no eulogy is expected. It cannot be. To add brightness to the sun or glory to the name of Washington is alike impossible. Let none attempt it. In solemn awe we pronounce the name and, in its naked, deathless splendor, leave it shining on."

And as a final thought and in special reverence to the memory of the great Father of his Country, who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his countrymen", let us adopt Washington's prophetic words as our own, words that have a special significance in these days of uncertainty, both as to human rights and governmental stability:

"The game is yet in our own hands; to play it well is all that we have to do. Nothing but harmony, honesty, industry, and frugality are necessary to make us a free and happy people."

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, may the amendment be stated for the information of the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 15, it is proposed to strike out all of lines 5 to 25, both inclusive, and, on page 16, to strike out through the period in line 11, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(2) Annuities, etc.: Amounts received (other than amounts paid by reason of the death of the insured and interest payments on such amounts) under a life-insurance, endowment, or annuity contract, but if such amounts (when added to amounts received before the taxable year under such contract) exceed the aggregate premiums or consideration paid (whether or not paid during the taxable year) then the excess shall be included in gross income.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The question now is on the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Rhode Island for the committee amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] in the nature of a substitute for the provisions contained in the bill as reported by the committee, including a portion of the House text and the committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAREY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BULKLEY]. If he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I am advised that, if present, he would vote "nay." Were I permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the following general pairs:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]; and

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS].

I am not advised how any of these Senators would vote.

I also wish to announce that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is detained on official business.

Mr. FLETCHER (after having voted in the negative). I have a pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 55, as follows:

So Mr. HEBERT's amendment in the nature of a substitute for a portion of the House text and for the committee amendment was rejected.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. AUSTIN. Before proceeding to consider another amendment is it in order to move to amend the committee amendment, on page 16, line 6, by changing the numeral "3" to the numeral "2", and in line 11, by striking out "$500" and inserting "$1,000"?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would be necessary to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which the amendment was agreed to in order that the Senator might offer an amendment to it.

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered for that purpose.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I will say that yesterday, when the unanimous-consent request was submitted and acquiesced in, it was on the theory that we would have no further debate, but that any amendment that might be pending or that might be offered to this section would be voted on without debate. I think it is fair to the Senator that he should have an opportunity to offer his amendment, to be voted on without debate of course.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Vermont modify his request?

Mr. AUSTIN. I do; in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to be reconsidered and that he be permitted to offer an amendment to the committee amendment, to be voted on without debate. Is there objection?

The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Vermont may offer his amendment.

Mr. AUSTIN. On page 16, line 6, I move to amend the committee amendment by striking out the numeral "3" and inserting the numeral "2", and in line 11, by striking out the numerals "$500" and inserting "$1,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 16, line 16, in the committee amendment it is proposed to strike out the numeral "3" and to insert the numeral "2", and in line 11, to strike out "$500" and to insert "$1,000", so as to read:

(A) the excess of the amount received in the taxable year over an amount equal to 2 percent of the aggregate premiums or consideration paid for such annuity (whether or not paid during such year), or (B) the entire amount of the annuity if the sum thereof and amounts of other annuities received in the same taxable year is not more than $1,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to take up now the Senate committee amendment on pages 19 and 20. I will state, by way of explanation, that this amendment shows some liberality toward the annuitant. It gives him the right to deduct interest paid by him on money borrowed in order to buy the annuity. I think all will agree that the amendment ought to be adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was, on page 19, line 23, before the word "on", to strike out "(1)"; in line 24, after the word "carry", to strike out the comma and "or the proceeds of which were used to purchase or carry", and on page 20, line 4, after the word "title", to strike out the comma and "or (2) on indebtedness incurred or continued, or the proceeds of which were used, in connection with the purchasing or carrying of an annuity", so as to read:

SEC. 23. Deductions from gross income: In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions:

(a) Expenses: All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered; traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity.

(b) Interest: All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations (other than obligations of the United States issued after Sept. 24, 1917, and originally subscribed for by the taxpayer) the interest upon which is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 25, line 7, after the word "individual", to insert a comma and "and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation", so as to read:

(o) Charitable and other contributions: In the case of an individual, contributions or gifts made within the taxable year to or for the use of:

(1) The United States, any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, for exclusively public purposes;

(2) A corporation, or trust, or community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I hope this amendment will be agreed to. Then it can go to conference, and we can change the language if it is found to do any inequity.

Mr. HARRISON. I may say to the Senate that the attention of the Senate committee was called to the fact that there are certain organizations which are receiving contributions in order to influence legislation and carry on propaganda. The committee thought there ought to be an amendment which would stop that, so that is why we have put this amendment in the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not think the committee is proud of the language in which this amendment is couched. I know that the legislative drafting counsel who drew it expressed no pride whatever in their product; but I agree with the Senator from Michigan that if the amendment shall be agreed to we will have from now until the conference to study the subject and prepare better phraseology.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to add just a word to what has been said about this amendment.

In my opinion, we shall never get away from abuses or mistakes of administration so far as contributions to organizations of this character are concerned until all contributors are deprived of exemption from the payment of income tax on contributions made to these organizations.

I recognize, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED] said the other day when this matter was up, that there are certain types of organizations to which Congress and the executive branch of the Government might desire to encourage contributions. It is difficult from the administrative point of view for those in the Internal Revenue Bureau to determine when an organization is carrying on a type of activity which ought to be encouraged, and when it is carrying on a propaganda type of activity. In my opinion, it will not make a penny's worth of difference, so far as the contributions to these various organizations are concerned, if they are all excluded from this immunity and all treated alike. It is my judgment that we never shall get away from mistakes of administration and from decisions which may seem like favoritism until all contributions to organizations of this kind are made subject to the income tax.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 32, line 5, after the word "than", to strike out "$8,000" and insert "$20,000", so as to read:

(C) "Earned net income" means the excess of the amount of the earned income over the sum of the earned income deductions. If the taxpayer's net income is not more than $3,000, his entire net income shall be considered to be earned net income, and if his net income is more than $3,000, his earned net income shall not be considered to be less than $3,000. In no case shall the earned net income be considered to be more than $20,000.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, just a word of explanation of that amendment. It has reference to earned income. The House fixed the limit at $8,000, while the Committee on Finance has recommended making $20,000 the maximum amount that should be considered earned income.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator how much the experts estimate the loss in revenue will be if this amendment remains in the bill when it comes from conference?

Mr. HARRISON. Seven million dollars.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, under the subhead "Subtitle C—Supplemental provisions", on page 50, line 24, after the word "individual", to insert a comma and "and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation", so as to read:

SEC. 101. Exemptions from tax on corporations: The following organizations shall be exempt from taxation under this title—

(1) Labor, agricultural, or horticultural organizations:

(2) Mutual savings banks not having a capital stock represented by shares;

(3) Fraternal beneficiary societies, orders, or associations, (A) operating under the lodge system or for the exclusive benefit of the members of a fraternity itself operating under the lodge system; and (B) providing for the payment of life, sick, accident, or other benefits to the members of such society, order, or association or their dependents;

(4) Domestic building and loan associations substantially all the business of which is confined to making loans to members; and cooperative banks without capital stock organized and operated for mutual purposes and without profit;

(5) Cemetery companies owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of their members or which are not operated for profit; and any corporation chartered solely for burial purposes as a cemetery corporation and not permitted by its charter to engage in any business not necessarily incident to that purpose, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual;

(6) Corporations, and any community chest, fund, or foundation, organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation.

Mr. HARRISON. This is in line with the other propaganda amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 55, after line 15, to strike out the following:

SEC. 102. Tax on personal holding companies: (a) Tax on personal holding company. In addition to the tax imposed by section 13, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each taxable year, upon the undistributed adjusted net income of every personal holding company a tax of 35 percent thereof. Such tax shall be computed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law (including penalties) as the tax imposed by section 13.

(b) Definitions: As used in this section, (1) the term "personal holding company" means any corporation (other than a banking or insurance corporation) if (A) at least 80 percent of its gross income for the taxable year is derived from rents, royalties, dividends, interest, annuities, and (except in the case of regular dealers in stock or securities) gains from the sale of stock or securities, and (B) at any time during the last half of the taxable year more than 50 percent in value of its outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for not more than five individuals. For the purpose of determining the ownership of stock in a personal holding company—(C) stock owned, directly or indirectly, by a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries; (D) an individual shall be considered as owning, to the exclusion of any other individual, the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by his family, and this rule shall be applied in such manner as to produce the smallest possible number of individuals owning, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock; and (E) the family of an individual shall include only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants. For the purpose of clause (A) of this paragraph the term "gross income" includes the amount of interest upon obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, which would be subject to tax in whole or in part in the hands of an individual owner.

(2) The term "undistributed adjusted net income" means the adjusted net income minus the sum of:

(A) Ten percent of the adjusted net income; and

(B) Dividends paid during the taxable year.

(3) The term "adjusted net income" means the sum of:

(A) The net income determined without regard to the provisions of this section;

(B) The amount of the dividend deduction allowed under section 23 (p); and

(C) The amount of interest upon obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, which would be subject to tax in whole or in part in the hands of an individual owner; minus the sum of:

(D) Federal income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid or accrued, but not including the tax imposed by this section;

(E) Contributions or gifts, not otherwise allowed as a deduction, to or for the use of donees described in section 23 (o) for the purposes therein specified; and

(F) Losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets which are disallowed as a deduction by section 117 (d).

SEC. 103. Tax on other corporations improperly accumulating surplus: (a) In addition to the tax imposed by section 13, there shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation (other than a personal holding company as defined in sec. 102) a tax equal to 25 percent of the amount thereof, if such corporation, however created or organized, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon its shareholders or the shareholders of any other corporation, through the medium of permitting gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed. Such tax shall be computed, collected, and paid in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law (including penalties) as the tax imposed by section 13.

(b) The fact that any corporation is a mere holding or investment company, or that the gains or profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a purpose to avoid surtax.

(c) As used in this section, the term "net income" means the net income as defined in section 21, increased by the sum of:

(1) The amount of the dividend deduction allowed under section 23 (p); and

(2) The amount of the interest on obligations of the United States issued after September 1, 1917, which would be subject to tax, in whole or in part, in the hands of an individual owner; but diminished by the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year.

And to insert:

SEC. 102. Surtax on corporations improperly accumulating surplus: (a) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the adjusted net income of every corporation (other than a personal holding company as defined in sec. 351) if such corporation, however created or organized, is formed or availed of for the purpose of preventing the imposition of the surtax upon its shareholders or the shareholders of any other corporation, through the medium of permitting gains and profits to accumulate instead of being divided or distributed, a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

(1) 25 percent of the amount of the adjusted net income not in excess of $100,000, plus

(2) 35 percent of the amount of the adjusted net income in excess of $100,000.

(b) Prima facie evidence: The fact that any corporation is a mere holding or investment company, or that the gains or profits are permitted to accumulate beyond the reasonable needs of the business, shall be prima facie evidence of a purpose to avoid surtax.

(c) Definition of "adjusted net income": As used in this section, the term "adjusted net income" means the net income increased by the amount of the dividend deduction allowed under section 23 (p), but diminished by the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year.

(d) Tax on personal holding companies: For surtax on personal holding companies, see section 351.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 68, line 4, after the article "a", to strike out "merger or consolidation, or (B)" and insert "statutory merger or consolidation, or (B) the acquisition by one corporation in exchange solely for its voting stock; of at least 80 percent of the voting stock and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of another corporation; or of substantially all the properties of another corporation, or (C)"; in line 15, before the article "a", to strike out "(C)" and insert "(D)", and at the end of the same line to strike out "(D)" and insert "(E)"; and in line 20, after the word "reorganization", to insert "and includes both corporations in the case of a reorganization resulting from the acquisition by one corporation of stock or properties of another", so as to read:

(g) Definition of reorganization: As used in this section and section 113—

(1) The term "reorganization" means (A) a statutory merger or consolidation, or (B) the acquisition by one corporation in exchange solely for its voting stock; of at least 80 percent of the voting stock and at least 80 percent of the total number of shares of all other classes of stock of another corporation; or of substantially all the properties of another corporation, or (C) a transfer by a corporation of all or a part of its assets to another corporation if immediately after the transfer the transferor or its stockholders or both are in control of the corporation to which the assets are transferred, or (D) a recapitalization, or (E) a mere change in identity, form, or place of organization, however effected.

(2) The term "a party to a reorganization" includes a corporation resulting from a reorganization and includes both corporations in the case of a reorganization resulting from the acquisition by one corporation of stock or properties of another.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 83, line 11, after the word "property" and the period, to strike out:

A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year and all succeeding taxable years shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for all taxable years shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for such year shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion. The method, determined as above, of computing the depletion allowance shall be applied in the case of the property for all taxable years in which it is in the hands of such taxpayer, or of any other person if the basis of the property (for determining gain) in his hands is, under section 113, determined by reference to the basis in the hands of such taxpayer, either directly or through one or more substituted bases, as defined in that section.

So as to read:

(4) Percentage depletion for coal and metal mines and sulphur: The allowance for depletion under section 23 (m) shall be, in the case of coal mines, 5 percent, in the case of metal mines, 15 percent, and, in the case of sulphur mines or deposits, 23 percent, of the gross income from the property during the taxable year, excluding from such gross income an amount equal to any rents or royalties paid or incurred by the taxpayer in respect of the property. Such allowance shall not exceed 50 percent of the net income of the taxpayer (computed without allowance for depletion) from the property. A taxpayer making his first return under this title in respect of a property shall state whether he elects to have the depletion allowance for such property for the taxable year for which the return is made computed with or without regard to percentage depletion, and the depletion allowance in respect of such property for such year shall be computed according to the election thus made. If the taxpayer fails to make such statement in the return, the depletion allowance for such property for such year shall be computed without reference to percentage depletion. The method, determined as above, of computing the depletion allowance shall be applied in the case of the property for all taxable years in which it is in the hands of such taxpayer, or of any other person if the basis of the property (for determining gain) in his hands is, under section 113, determined by reference to the basis in the hands of such taxpayer, either directly or through one or more substituted bases, as defined in that section.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I desire to offer to this depletion section. I have not a copy of it on my desk.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest that we pass over this amendment for the present.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 93, line 16, after the figure "5", to strike out "years" and insert "years but not for more than 10 years", and on the same page, after line 17, to insert "30 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 10 years", so as to read:

SEC. 117. Capital gains and losses: (a) General rule: In the case of a taxpayer, other than a corporation, only the following percentages of the gain or loss recognized upon the sale or exchange of a capital asset shall be taken into account in computing net income:

100 percent if the capital asset has been held for not more than 1 year;

80 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 1 year but not for more than 2 years;

60 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 2 years but not for more than 5 years;

40 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 5 years but not for more than 10 years;

30 percent if the capital asset has been held for more than 10 years.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, this is the amendment with reference to capital gains and losses. The Senate will recall that the tax on property held for more than 10 years is reduced in the House bill from 40 to 30 percent, which still makes it higher than the present 12½ percent.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] has an amendment on that subject.

Mr. HARRISON. On capital gains and losses?

Mr. CONNALLY. It is with regard to the 10-year provision.

Mr. MURPHY. I have an amendment on that subject, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Mississippi, in charge of the bill, I should like to inquire whether any disposition has been made of the provision dealing with personal holding companies. I was called from the Chamber to respond to a long-distance telephone call, and if the amendment was acted on, I should like to have a reconsideration of the vote.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the House provision was stricken out by the adoption of an amendment of the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KING. I should like to have the entire subject considered at the same time, because I think I shall want to have the House provision reinstated.

Mr. HARRISON. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Utah ought to be told that we have already acted on the equivalent of section 220; that is, section 102 in the bill before us. The Senator will find it on page 59. The amendment there has been agreed to, but a long, complicated description of a personal holding company occurs in section 351, which we have not as yet reached.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if, in the consideration of the entire subject, a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to shall be involved, I shall ask that any action taken be set aside, so that the whole subject may be considered.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator does not now ask for a reconsideration of section 102?

Mr. KING. Not at the present time.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I have an amendment to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the amendment proposed by Mr. MURPHY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair suggests that the Senate act first on the committee amendment on page 93, and then take up the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, which is offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire section, because the proposed substitute takes in more than the committee amendment.

Mr. CONNALLY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CONNALLY. While the rule is that we act on committee amendments, is it not also in order to consider an amendment to a committee amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the rule, the committee amendment should first be acted on, because it is a perfecting amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The rule is to perfect the text, and then to perfect the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 117, subsection (a) and subsection (b), so as to read as follows:

SEC. 117. Capital gains and losses.—(a) Tax in the case of exceptional capital net gain: In the case of any taxpayer, other than a corporation, who for any taxable year realizes an exceptional capital net gain (as defined in subsection (b) of this section), the tax under this title shall be determined, under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, as follows:

(1) A partial tax shall first be computed on the ordinary net income at the rates and in the manner as if this section had not been enacted.

(2) To this amount shall be added an additional tax on the exceptional capital net gain, equal to—

Five times the additional tax that would be imposed, at the rates and in the manner as if this section had not been enacted, on one fifth of the exceptional capital net gain if the capital assets sold or exchanged by the taxpayer at a gain in the taxable year have been held by him an average of 5 years or more.

Four times the additional tax that would be similarly imposed on one fourth of the exceptional capital net gain if the said capital assets have been held by the taxpayer an average of 4 years.

Three times the additional tax that would be similarly imposed on one third of the exceptional capital net gain if the said capital assets have been held by the taxpayer an average of 3 years.

Twice the additional tax that would be similarly imposed on one half of the exceptional capital net gain if the said capital assets have been held by the taxpayer an average of 2 years.

The entire amount of the additional tax that would be similarly imposed on the entire exceptional capital net gain if the said capital assets have been held by the taxpayer an average of 1 year or less.

(3) The Commissioner (with the approval of the Secretary), in prescribing the method of determining the average number of years for which capital assets have been held, may limit the number of years that shall be counted in the case of a capital asset held for more than 5 years. He may also extend the method prescribed by this section for computing the tax on an exceptional capital net gain to cases in which the said average number of years, between 1 and 4, is determined in whole numbers and fractions thereof.

(b) Definitions: For the purposes of this title—

(1) "Capital assets" means property held by the taxpayer (whether or not connected with his trade or business), but does not include stock in trade of the taxpayer or other property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of the taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year, or property held by the taxpayer primarily for sale in the course of his trade or business.

(2) "Capital gain" means taxable gain upon the sale or exchange of a capital asset.

(3) "Capital loss" means loss upon the sale or exchange of a capital asset.

(4) "Capital net gain" means the excess of the taxpayer's capital gains for the taxable year (including his distributive share of the capital gains of any partnership of which he is a member and of any trust, the income of which is taxable to him in whole or in part, under sections 162, 165, 166, and 167 of this title) over (A) his capital losses for the taxable year and (B) such deductions, allowed by section 23 for the purpose of computing net income, as are properly allocable to or chargeable against the capital assets sold or exchanged.

(5) "Exceptional capital net gain" means the amount by which the taxpayer's capital net gain for the taxable year exceeds the average amount of his capital net gains for that number of immediately preceding taxable years (not exceeding four) which is equal to one less than the average number of years during which the taxpayer has held the capital assets sold or exchanged by him at a gain in the taxable year: Provided, however, That the excess so determined shall not be considered an exceptional capital net gain unless it exceeds 20 percent of the taxpayer's ordinary net income.

(6) "Ordinary net income" means the taxable net income less the exceptional capital net gains.

(7) The additional tax that would be imposed on an exceptional capital net gain or any fraction thereof means the difference between (A) a tax computed on the ordinary net income and (B) a tax computed on the sum of the ordinary net income and the exceptional capital net gain or fraction thereof.

Section 117 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(g) The Commissioner may, with the approval of the Secretary, direct that a taxpayer who reports an exceptional capital net gain shall compute and pay his tax as though this section had not been enacted. In that event the Commissioner shall cause the tax to be recomputed as promptly as practicable and shall immediately credit or refund any overpayment indicated by such recomputation."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Chair may have the attention of the Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Iowa, there is a committee amendment pending, on page 93, lines 16 to 19, inclusive, section 117. The amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is a substitute for subsection (a) and subsection (b). First in order is the committee amendment perfecting subsection (a) to section 117. After that the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, in the nature of a substitute, will be in order.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 93, lines 16 to 19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is another committee amendment to the same section.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have been engaged in a conference over another amendment. Has the vote been taken on the committee amendment on line 16, page 93?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes; that amendment has been agreed to. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 94, line 3, it is proposed to strike out, after the word "sale", the words "in the" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "to customers in the ordinary", so as to make the subsection read:

(b) Definition of capital assets: For the purposes of this title, "capital assets" means property held by the taxpayer (whether or not connected with his trade or business), but does not include stock in trade of the taxpayer or other property of a kind which would properly be included in the inventory of the taxpayer if on hand at the close of the taxable year, or property held by the taxpayer primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of his trade or business.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may that amendment on page 94 go over for a short time? We have been trying to work out some method by which credits could reasonably be given for obsolete property which is sold for salvage. As will be seen, under this amendment, the only loss that is deductible is a loss on property normally carried for sale to customers. It is conceivable that a railroad company, for example, finds that while a locomotive is useless, it has a salvage value as scrap. Probably most of the deductions can be taken in the annual deductions for obsolescence, but if there remained a loss between the book value of such a locomotive and the amount for which it was sold to the junk dealer, under this language the loss could not be deducted. I suggest that we pass the amendment over for a short time, so that we may see if we cannot work out a satisfactory provision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that if the committee amendments shall be passed over, then the substitute offered by the Senator from Iowa will not be in order at this time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not mean to embarrass the consideration of the Senator's substitute. Perhaps the best course to take would be to agree to the pending committee amendment, with the understanding that if we can work out a better provision we may reopen the question.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that would be better, so that we may now settle this committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 94, line 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], in the nature of a substitute for subsection (a) and subsection (b) of section 117.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, let the amendment lie on the table, and I will ask that it be taken up for discussion later.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator desires to have the amendment passed over, of course I desire to be accommodating. The Senator from Iowa says he should like to have it lie on the table for the present. I suggest that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdraws his substitute for the present.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest that the whole section be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the amendment offered by the Senator from Iowa is temporarily passed over.

The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 95, line 20, after the words "extent of", to insert "$2,000 plus."

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator explain the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment gives to everyone a $2,000 exemption in figuring gains and losses. It is really an effort to help the small taxpayer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 95, line 21, after the word "exchanges" and the period, to insert:

If a bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory, a substantial part of whose business is the receipt of deposits, sells any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness issued by any corporation (including one issued by a Government or political subdivision thereof), with interest coupons or in registered form, any loss resulting from such sale shall not be subject to the foregoing limitation except such portion of the loss as is equal to the amount, if any, by which the adjusted basis of such instrument exceeds the par or face value thereof.

So as to read:

(d) Limitation on capital losses: Losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets shall be allowed only to the extent of $2,000 plus the gains from such sales or exchanges. If a bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory, a substantial part of whose business is the receipt of deposits, sells any bond, debenture, note, or certificate or other evidence of indebtedness issued by any corporation (including one issued by a government or political subdivision thereof), with interest coupons or in registered form, any loss resulting from such sale shall not be subject to the foregoing limitation except such portion of the loss as is equal to the amount, if any, by which the adjusted basis of such instrument exceeds the par or face value thereof.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer a clarifying amendment to the Senate committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 96, line 2, it is proposed to strike out all after the word "form", down through line 6, and insert "any loss resulting from such sale (except such portion of the loss as does not exceed the amount, if any, by which the adjusted basis of such instrument exceeds the par or face value thereof) shall not be subject to the foregoing limitation and shall not be included in determining the applicability of such limitation to other losses."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, do I understand that to mean that if a bank or trust company sells at 100 a security which it bought at 94, there is no tax? What is the meaning of the amendment?

Mr. REED. This section, Mr. President, relates exclusively to deductions. The committee has adopted the very stern rule that no capital losses shall be deducted from the taxable income except where capital gains in the same amount have been realized. In other words, one cannot deduct losses in calculating the tax except to the extent that one has had gains. We have enlarged that a little so as to allow a deduction of $2,000 of losses to take care of the small taxpayer.

It has been shown to us that banks stand no chance of making the corresponding capital gains, but that very frequently when they have bought bonds those bonds are afterward defaulted, and they are not in the position of the ordinary individual who is in a position to offset capital gains. The committee was willing to allow that in the case of bona fide investments of financial institutions, but the committee was not willing to allow a deduction of the premium paid for a bond, because in the case of Government bonds held by the banks the interest is totally tax exempt, and when banks buy such bonds at a premium they calculate the real interest rate they are going to get by subtracting the premium from the interest due to the first call date. Inasmuch as the interest is tax exempt, it seemed to us that the premium should not be deducted from the taxable income.

It is very complicated, but it has been thoroughly studied by the draftsmen, and they think the revised language offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will adequately take care of the case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 96, after line 6, to strike out:

(e) Gains and losses from short sales: For the purposes of this title, gains or losses (A) from short sales of property, or (B) attributable to privileges or options to buy or sell property, or (C) from sales or exchanges of such privileges or options, shall be considered as gains or losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets held for 1 year or less.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(e) Gains and losses from short sales, etc.: For the purpose of this title—

(1) gains or losses from short sales of property shall be considered as gains or losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets; and

(2) gains or losses attributable to the failure to exercise privileges or options to buy or sell property shall be considered as gains or losses from sales or exchanges of capital assets held for 1 year or less.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have some statement with reference to this amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. The purpose of the amendment is to prevent tax avoidance. As the Senator will see from the report, it is there said:

Fourth, to prevent tax avoidance in the case of capital losses, and to prevent discrimination in respect to capital gains against taxpayers living at a distance from the stock market, subdivision (e) of section 117 has been entirely rewritten. Under the House bill a man with a long-term loss could change it into a short-term loss and utilize it against his gains to the full 100 percent by simply making a short sale. On the other hand, a man living in some distant city who desired to sell some stock he had held for 5 years would have to pay a tax on 100 percent of the profit if he wired his order for the immediate sale of such stock. Both of these inequitable results are remedied by the bill as reported.

They are placed upon the same basis.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment which has been read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 174, after line 9, to insert:

(c) Omission from gross income: If the taxpayer omits from gross income an amount properly includible therein which is in excess of 25 percent of the amount of gross income stated in the return, the tax may be assessed, or a proceeding in court for the collection of such tax may be begun without assessment, at any time within 5 years after the return was filed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 190, after line 3, to insert:

TITLE I-A—ADDITIONAL INCOME TAXES

SEC. 351. Surtax on personal holding companies.—(a) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid, for each taxable year, upon the undistributed adjusted net income of every personal holding company a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

(1) Thirty percent of the amount thereof not in excess of $100,000; plus

(2) Forty percent of the amount thereof in excess of $100,000.

(b) Definitions: As used in this title—

(1) The term "personal holding company" means any corporation (other than a corporation exempt from taxation under section 101, and other than a bank or trust company incorporated under the laws of the United States or of any State or Territory, a substantial part of whose business is the receipt of deposits, and other than a life-insurance company) if—(A) at least 80 percent of its gross income for the taxable year is derived from royalties, dividends, interest, annuities, and (except in the case of regular dealers its stock or securities) gains from the sale of stock or securities, and (B) at any time during the last half of the taxable year more than 50 percent in value of its outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for not more than five individuals. For the purpose of determining the ownership of stock in a personal holding company—(C) stock owned, directly or indirectly, by a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries; (D) an individual shall be considered as owning, to the exclusion of any other individual, the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by his family, and this rule shall be applied in such manner as to produce the smallest possible number of individuals owning, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock; and (E) the family of an individual shall include only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants.

(2) The term "undistributed adjusted net income" means the adjusted net income minus the sum of:

(A) 10 percent of the excess of the adjusted net income over the amount of the dividend deduction allowed under section 23(p);

(B) A reasonable amount used or set aside to retire indebtedness incurred prior to January 1, 1934; and

(C) Dividends paid during the taxable year.

(3) The term "adjusted net income" means the sum of:

(A) The net income; and

(B) The amount of the dividend deduction allowed under section 23 (p);

minus the sum of:

(C) Federal income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes paid or accrued, but not including the tax imposed by this section; and

(D) Contributions or gifts, not otherwise allowed as a deduction, to or for the use of donees described in section 23 (o) for the purposes therein specified.

(4) The terms used in this section shall have the same meaning as when used in title I.

(c) Administrative provisions: All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by title I of this act, shall insofar as not inconsistent with this section, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this section, except that the provisions of section 131 of that title shall not be applicable.

(d) Improper accumulation of surplus: For surtax on corporations which accumulate surplus to avoid surtax on stockholders, see section 102.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment may be passed over, because I am working on an amendment, or a series of amendments, which I think ought to be adopted, and concerning the details of which the experts and myself have not quite agreed as yet.

Mr. HARRISON. Let the amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 194, line 21, after the figures "1926", to insert "as amended", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 196, after line 12, to insert:

(b) The amendments made by this section shall be effective only with respect to transfers of estates of decedents dying after the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Mississippi will let that amendment go over temporarily. I have modified my amendments somewhat along the lines of the suggestion which I received, and I expect them to be back from the Printing Office at any time.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say to the Senator that I also should like to have it go over, and if the members of the Committee on Finance—with some of whom I have talked, with others I have not—can agree upon some modification, I am willing to do so, in order that we may avoid a long discussion of this provision of the bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, what was done about section 404, on page 196? Has that been agreed to?

Mr. HARRISON. That has been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee will be passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 198, under the heading "Title III—Amendments to prior acts and miscellaneous", on page 198, line 23, before the word "petition", to strike out "of" and insert "for"; in line 25, after the figures "1926", to insert "section 308 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1926, section 513 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932,"; on page 199, line 6, after the words "striking out", to insert "'not counting Sunday as the"; and in line 7, after the word "thereof", to insert "'not counting Sunday or a legal holiday in the District of Columbia as the", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 501. Period for petition to Board under prior acts: Section 274 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1926, section 308 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1926, section 513 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1932, and section 272 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1928 and the Revenue Act of 1932 (relating to the period during which a taxpayer may petition the Board of Tax Appeals for redetermination of a deficiency) are amended by striking out "60 days" and inserting in lieu thereof "90 days"; by striking out "not counting Sunday as the sixtieth day" and inserting in lieu thereof "not counting Sunday or a legal holiday in the District of Columbia as the ninetieth day"; and by striking out "60-day" and inserting in lieu thereof "90-day." The amendment made by this section shall apply only in respect of notices mailed after 30 days after the date of the enactment of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President there is no reason why the amendment on page 198, line 13, cannot now be agreed to.

Mr. KING. Has it not been agreed to?

Mr. REED. No; it has not as yet been agreed to. It was passed over. It deals with propaganda organizations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 198, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

SEC. 406. Nondeductibility of certain transfers: Section 303 (a) (3) and section 303 (b) (3) of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, are amended by inserting after "individual", wherever appearing therein, a comma and the following: "and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting, to influence legislation."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was on page 207, line 8, after the word "law" and the period to strike out:

The Secretary may appoint and fix the duties of such Assistant General Counsel (not to exceed six) and such other officers and employees as he may deem necessary to assist the General Council in the performance of his duties. The Secretary may designate one of such Assistant General Counsel to act as the General Counsel during the absence of the General Counsel. The General Counsel is authorized to delegate to any Assistant General Counsel any authority, duty, or function which he is authorized or required to exercise or perform. The Assistant General Counsel provided for in this subsection may be appointed and compensated without regard to the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the Civil Service laws, and shall receive compensation at such rate (not in excess of $10,000 per annum) as may be fixed by the Secretary.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The Secretary may appoint and fix the duties of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary to assist the General Counsel in the performance of his duties. The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not to exceed six Assistant General Counsel and to fix their compensation at rates not in excess of $10,000 per annum. The Secretary may designate one of such Assistant General Counsel to act as the General Counsel during the absence of the General Counsel. The General Counsel, with the approval of the Secretary, is authorized to delegate to any Assistant General Counsel any authority, duty, or function which the General Counsel is authorized or required to exercise or perform.

So as to read:

SEC. 512. General Counsel for the Treasury: (a) There is hereby created in the Department of the Treasury the office of General Counsel for the Department of the Treasury (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "General Counsel"). The General Counsel shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum. The General Counsel shall be the chief law officer of the Department, and shall perform such duties in respect of the legal activities thereof as may be prescribed by the Secretary or required by law. The Secretary may appoint and fix the duties of such officers and employees as he may deem necessary to assist the General Counsel in the performance of his duties. The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not to exceed six Assistant General Counsel and to fix their compensation at rates not in excess of $10,000 per annum. The Secretary may designate one of such Assistant General Counsel to act as the General Counsel during the absence of the General Counsel. The General Counsel, with the approval of the Secretary, is authorized to delegate to any Assistant General Counsel any authority, duty, or function which the General Counsel is authorized or required to exercise or perform. The rate of compensation of any person appointed under the provisions of this subsection shall be subject to the reduction applicable to officers and employees of the Federal Government generally.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I dislike very much even to appear to be critical of this provision, but I feel constrained to suggest that the payment of $10,000 for the designated assistants—doubtless they are worth it—will lead to a demand in every department of the Government where counsel are employed, or experts, or assistant secretaries, or assistants to the secretaries are employed, for a like amount—$10,000. Under all the circumstances, and in view of the precedent which it will establish, I think the amount should be reduced. Demands inevitably will follow for an increase in the compensation of persons performing like duties. Perhaps the duties of such persons are not so important in many respects as the duties that would devolve upon these six assistants, but certainly they will make requests for like compensation. I think that we ought to reduce from $10,000 to $8,000 per annum the compensation of each of the six assistant general counsel. So I move, in line 4, on page 208, to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$8,000" in lieu thereof, so that it will read:

Not in excess of $8,000 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 209, commencing with line 4, to strike out the following:

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized (without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the civil-service laws) to appoint and fix the compensation of 10 assistants at rates of compensation of not to exceed $10,000 per annum, but the rates so fixed shall be subject to the reduction applicable to officers and employees of the Federal Government generally.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, five assistants to the Secretary of the Treasury and to fix their compensation at rates not to exceed $10,000 per annum, but the rates so fixed shall be subject to the reduction applicable to officers and employees of the Federal Government generally.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, in the committee amendment on line 13, page 209, I move to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$8,000", so as to limit the compensation of the five assistants to the Secretary of the Treasury to $8,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 209, line 13, it is proposed to strike out "$10,000" and insert "$8,000."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 209, line 23, after the word "the", to strike out "Secretary" and insert "President", so as to read:

The President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, five assistants to the Secretary of the Treasury and to fix their compensation at rates not to exceed $10,000 per annum, but the rates so fixed shall be subject to the reduction applicable to officers and employees of the Federal Government generally. The Secretary is authorized to delegate to such assistants any authority, duty, or function which he is authorized or required to exercise or perform. Whenever the President declares by Executive order that the emergency requiring the appointments under this section has ceased to exist, the persons appointed under this section shall cease to hold office under this section, and the power of the President under this section shall terminate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 210, to strike out lines 1 to 24, inclusive, down to and including line 9, on page 211.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask that that amendment be passed over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 212, after line 3, to insert:

SEC. 516. Nondeductibility of certain gifts: (a) Section 505 (a) (2) (B) and section 505 (b) (2) of the Revenue Act of 1932 are amended by inserting after "individual" a comma and the following: "and no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation."

(b) Section 505 (b) (3) of the Revenue Act of 1932 is amended by inserting after "animals" a comma and the following: "no substantial part of the activities of which is participation in partisan politics or is carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, that is in line with the other amendment in relation to the deductibility of gifts from income-tax returns, and I think it ought to be approved.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 212, after line 16, to strike out:

TITLE IV—EXCISE TAXES

SEC. 601. Fruit-juice tax: Subsection (a) of section 615 of the Revenue Act of 1932 (relating to the tax on soft drinks) is amended as follows:

(a) Paragraph (2) thereof is repealed;

(b) Paragraph (3) thereof is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Upon all imitations of unfermented fruit juices (except grape juice), in natural or slightly concentrated form (as distinguished from finished or fountain sirups), intended for consumption as beverages with the addition of water or water and sugar, and upon all carbonated beverages, commonly known as soft drinks (except those described in paragraph (1)), manufactured, compounded, or mixed by the use of concentrate, essence, or extract, instead of a finished or fountain sirup, sold by manufacturer, producer, or importer, a tax of 2 cents per gallon."; and

(c) Paragraph (4) thereof is amended by striking out "(except grape juice)", and by striking out "pure apple cider" and inserting in lieu thereof "fruit juices."

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 601. Termination of soft-drink tax: No tax shall be imposed under section 615 of the Revenue Act of 1932 on the sale or use of any article if such sale or use takes place after the date of the enactment of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not quite sure where it would be appropriate to offer an amendment which I desire to offer. I refer to my proposed amendment which reads:

The tax imposed by section 613 of the Revenue Act of 1932 shall not apply to candy sold by the manufacturer, producer, or importer after the date of the enactment of this act.

Mr. HARRISON. The amendment may be offered as a separate proposition later.

Mr. KING. The chairman of the committee suggests that the amendment be offered as a separate proposition, and, with that understanding, I shall not press it at this time.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 213, section 602, imposing a tax on certain oils.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, we had better pass over the oil amendment for the present. I do not refer to lubricating oil and gasoline but all of section 602. I may say that the tax on sesame and coconut oil has been one of the hardest nuts for the committee to crack—and, I imagine, for individuals as well—and we are trying to reform the provision so as to avoid a long discussion and dispute and get something that might be acceptable to the administration, which is very much opposed to the provision as contained in the House bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. May I ask the Senator if the amendment which he contemplates and which I believe the administration wants has anything to do with maintaining the commercial status of the Philippine Islands in their relations with the United States until the Independence Act shall have become effective?

Mr. HARRISON. I will say that so far as I am concerned that has all to do with it. I have not thought we ought to pass an Independence Act one day and the next day undo everything that we guaranteed to the people in that act. We hope to eliminate that provision from the bill, and I think we can get together on something which will do it.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the Senator will allow me to make this brief observation, let me say that the Philippine Legislature is now being called into special session to accept the act which was recently passed so that Philippine independence in the form in which we passed it is on its way; but the inclusion of this tax has done much to destroy that situation, and I am somewhat apprehensive if we put more taxes on Philippine exports, having cut down their quotas in various categories in the independence bill itself, the Philippine independence bill may not be accepted by the Filipino people. That is my primary interest in maintaining the status quo so that we may keep our word with these people.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, to what tax is the Senator referring?

Mr. TYDINGS. To the 3 cents a pound tax on coconut oil and copra, on page 214 of the pending bill, which discriminates against Philippine oil. As the Senator will recall, we have already limited the amount of imports to this country of Philippine sugar and various other commodities, including copra, in the Philippine independence bill. Now it is proposed to tax what we allow to come in, so that it really amounts, to a large extent, to an embargo on their exports. I fear that if we shall adopt the proposed tax all the work that has been done for Philippine independence at the present session will not amount to anything at all.

Mr. BORAH. The logic of the Senator's contention is that the same observation with reference to the tax on copra and coconut oil may, perhaps, be applicable for the next 10 years.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. May I say to the Senator from Idaho that we have limited in the independence bill the amount of copra, sugar, coconut oil, and whatnot that may be shipped to the United States from the Philippine Islands; we have cut down their normal allotment. Now, if we are going to tax the exports we do allow to come in, which are less than normal, we cannot expect the Filipino people to make a satisfactory economic adjustment; it cannot be done.

Mr. BORAH. As I understood the able Senator from Mississippi, the provision is to be redrafted.

Mr. HARRISON. It will be redrafted to carry out the idea which has been expressed, because the Senate committee amendment makes no exception at all, as the Senator knows, of coconut oil or copra from the Philippines, and the House bill, of course, made no exception of such commodities exported from the Philippines. The House provided for a tax of 5 cents on sesame and on coconut oil, but not on copra, and in the Senate bill we have taken in all oils, including copra and coconut oil. So I was hopeful that we might work out some provision which might eliminate the Philippine question from the picture, and yet retain a tax on all these oils. I am told that that might be very helpful.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. I am willing to grant that we must use the utmost fairness toward the Filipinos, but certainly we do not owe them any higher duty than we owe to our own citizens.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true.

Mr. REED. We are putting all the excise taxes that ingenuity can suggest on everything produced in this country; we are putting processing taxes on all the necessaries of life produced and sold in this country, and certainly we have not any obligation to treat the Filipinos any better than we treat our own people, have we?

Mr. TYDINGS. The Filipinos pay a lot of these taxes, the Senator must bear in mind. They buy many millions of dollars' worth of cotton, all of which has the processing tax added to it.

Mr. REED. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that they pay their share of taxes like everybody else. The Senator from Pennsylvania knows, I am sure, that the primary purpose of this tax is not revenue, but its primary purpose is to discriminate against the Philippine people.

Mr. REED. The primary purpose of the processing tax is to raise prices and not to raise revenue.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not agree with the general philosophy of that tax, may I say to the Senator; but I do think that we ought to lean backward to carry out our implied understanding with the Filipino people. We have just passed the independence bill, in which we have set out various conditions upon which ultimate independence is predicated and will be obtained. That is in the nature of a covenant between the Congress and the Philippine people, and I believe it would be breach of faith were we now, having already cut down the allotment of sugar, coconut oil, copra, and other commodities which they may send into the United States below their normal exports to this country, to go still further during the transitory period and cut them out altogether.

May I say also to the Senator from Pennsylvania that several of us are working on a plan to bring about complete independence for the Philippine Islands within 2 or 3 years, and I am fearful if we do not exercise care, assuming the desire is to exclude Filipino products from entry into this country, by this sort of provision in order to gain a little advantage we will lose a greater advantage.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. My object in asking that we pass this amendment over at this time is to avoid discussion and to dispose of other amendments which will cause no discussion. I know when we enter upon a discussion of the coconut-oil provision it will take some time. I hope the amendment may be passed over for the present.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have no objection to passing it over for the present, and I hope we may work out something that will not put Congress in the position of having broken faith with the Filipino people within 3 weeks after passing an independence bill.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not mean to prolong the debate, but I must say for the RECORD that I do not see any breach of faith involved in this tax. In the beginning I was as much opposed to the tax as is the Senator from Maryland. The more I have studied it, the more I have learned of the condition to which the dairy farmers particularly are being reduced, the more I think the tax is absolutely essential.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator realizes that as the amendment is drawn the only people under the American flag who would pay the tax would be the Filipinos.

Mr. REED. No; I do not realize that at all.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the fact. As the amendment is drawn, no other oil except Filipino oil would be taxed. What I am maintaining is that the tax ought to apply to all people under the flag, or ought not to apply to any of them.

Mr. REED. We get a lot of oil from the tropical regions of Africa.

Mr. TYDINGS. But that is a different situation entirely. The Senator would put the Filipinos in the same position that is occupied by the Africans.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator is in error. This tax will not do what he said. It does not put any tariff tax on the Filipinos, and there are some tariff taxes against the rest of the world. Even if this tax should be levied, the Filipinos would have a differential over everybody else on earth.

Mr. REED. That is exactly correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. The wording is:

For the purposes of this section, the term "first domestic processing" means the first use in the United States, in the manufacture or production of an article intended for sale—

And so forth.

It has been interpreted by those who have studied the phraseology of the section that the phrase "within the United States" means that all oil produced in continental United States would not pay this tax, but that any oil coming from territory under the flag, but not territory actually a part of continental United States, would pay the tax. What I am complaining about is not so much the tax as the discriminatory manner in which it is proposed to be levied by this particular amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland is correct in his construction of the provision, of course, his position is perfectly sound; but is that the proper construction?

Mr. TYDINGS. Everyone who has studied it says that is the proper construction. I may say, however, to the Senator from Idaho, if the committee does not perfect its amendment, I have an amendment to offer which would remove the objection I have just stated, and then there would be no question about the tax applying universally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to temporarily passing over the amendment? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is passed over temporarily. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 217, after line 6, to strike out:

(a) Effective on the 30th day after the date of the enactment of this act, the second sentence of section 601 (c) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is amended to read as follows: "Any person to whom lubricating oils were sold tax free under this paragraph prior to the effective date of its amendment by the Revenue Act of 1934 shall be considered the manufacturer or producer of such lubricating oils. Every person liable for tax under this paragraph shall register and file bond as provided in section 617. No sale of lubricating oil after the effective date of the amendment of this paragraph by the Revenue Act of 1934 shall be tax free under section 620 and no credit with respect to tax on any such sale shall be allowed under section 621 (a) (1). A credit against tax under this paragraph, or a refund, may be allowed or made to a manufacturer or producer with respect to the sale (after the effective date of the amendment of this section by the Revenue Act of 1934) of lubricating oils if the manufacturer or producer has in his possession such evidence as the regulations may prescribe (1) that such lubricating oils have been used by any other person in the manufacture or production of any article upon which tax has been paid under this title and (2) the manufacturer or producer has repaid or agreed to repay the amount of such tax to his vendee or has obtained the written consent of his vendee to the allowance of such credit or refund."

(b) Effective on the 30th day after the enactment of this act, section 617 of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 218, after line 10, to strike out:

"SEC. 617. Tax on gasoline: (a) There is hereby imposed on gasoline sold by the producer or importer thereof, or by any producer of gasoline, a tax of 1 cent a gallon.

"(b) If a producer or importer uses (otherwise than in the production of gasoline) gasoline produced or imported by him, such use shall for the purposes of this title be considered a sale.

"(c) As used in this section—

"(1) the term 'producer' includes only producers, refiners, compounders, and blenders; but any person who purchased gasoline free of tax under this section prior to the effective date of its amendment by the Revenue Act of 1934 shall be considered the producer of such gasoline.

"(2) the term 'gasoline' means (A) all products commonly or commercially known or sold as gasoline (including casinghead and natural gasoline), benzol, benzene, or naphtha, regardless of their classification or uses; and (B) any other liquid which is prepared, advertised, offered for sale or sold for use as, or used as, a fuel for the propulsion of motor vehicles, motor boats, or airplanes.

"(d) No sale of gasoline after the effective date of the amendment of this section by the Revenue Act of 1934 shall be tax free under section 620 and no credit with respect to tax on any such sale shall be allowed under section 621 (a) (1).

"(e) A credit against tax under this section, or a refund, may be allowed or made to a producer or importer in the amount of tax paid by him under this section with respect to the sale (after the effective date of the amendment of this section by the Revenue Act of 1934) of gasoline if the producer or importer has in his possession such evidence as the regulations may prescribe establishing that (1) such gasoline (A) has been used by any other person as material in the manufacture or production of, or as a component part of, any article upon which tax has been paid under this title or (B) has been resold and tax under this section paid on such resale or (C) (in the case of benzol only) was sold for use and used otherwise than as a fuel for the propulsion of motor vehicles, motor boats, or airplanes, and (2) the producer or importer has repaid or agreed to repay the amount of such tax to his vendee or has obtained the written consent of such vendee to the allowance of the credit or refund.

"(f) Every person subject to tax under this section or section 601 (c) (1) shall, within 30 days after the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1934, or before commencing business, register with the collector for the district in which is located his principal place of business or, if he has no principal place of business in the United States, with the collector at Baltimore, Md., and shall give a bond, to be approved by such collector, conditioned that he shall not engage in any attempt, by himself or by collusion with others, to defraud the United States of any tax under such sections; that he shall render truly and completely all returns, statements, and inventories required by law or regulations in pursuance thereof and shall pay all taxes due under such sections; that whenever his sales for any month exceed or are likely to exceed the amount upon which the sum of such bond was based he shall immediately give notice thereof to such collector; and that he shall comply with all requirements of law and regulations in pursuance thereof with respect to tax under such sections. Such bond shall be in such sum as the collector may require in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, but not less than $2,000. The collector may from time to time require new or additional bond in accordance with this section. Every person who incurs any liability for tax under this section or section 601 (c) (1) after 30 days after the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1934, without first registering and giving bond as required by this subsection, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 221, after line 11, to insert:

(a) Section 601 (c) (1) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is amended by adding after the first sentence thereof the following: "Every person liable for tax under this paragraph shall register and file bond as provided in section 617, as amended."

(b) Sections 617 (a) and (b) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, are amended to read as follows:

"(a) There is hereby imposed on gasoline sold by the producer or importer thereof, or by any producer of gasoline, a tax of 1 cent a gallon, except that under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, the tax shall not apply in the case of sales to a producer of gasoline.

"(b) If a producer or importer uses (otherwise than in the production of gasoline) gasoline sold to him free of tax, or produced or imported by him, such use shall for the purposes of this title be considered a sale. Any person to whom gasoline is sold tax free under this section on or after the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1932 shall be considered the producer of such gasoline."

(c) Effective on the first day of the first calendar month after the enactment of this act, section 617 (c) (2) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is further amended to read as follows:

"(2) The term gasoline means (A) all products commonly or commercially known or sold as gasoline (including casinghead and natural gasoline), benzol, benzene, or naphtha, regardless of their classifications or uses; and (B) any other liquid of a kind prepared, advertised, offered for sale, or sold for use as, or used as, a fuel for the propulsion of motor vehicles, motor boats, or airplanes; except that it does not include benzol or naphtha (other than gasoline) sold for use otherwise than as a fuel for the propulsion of motor vehicles, motor boats, or airplanes, and otherwise than in the manufacture or production of such fuel, and does not include kerosene, gas oil, or fuel oil."

(d) Section 617 of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsections:

"(d) Every person subject to tax under this section or section 601 (c) (1) shall, before the first day of the first calendar month after the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1934 (or in the case of a person commencing business after such day before incurring any liability for tax under such sections) register with the collector for the district in which is located his principal place of business (or, if he has no principal place of business in the United States, with the collector at Baltimore, Md.), and shall give a bond, to be approved by such collector, conditioned that he shall not engage in any attempt, by himself or by collusion with others, to defraud the United States of any tax under such sections; that he shall render truly and completely all returns, statements, and inventories required by law or regulations in pursuance thereof and shall pay all taxes due under such sections; and that he shall comply with all requirements of law and regulations in pursuance thereof with respect to tax under such sections. Such bond shall be in such sum as the collector may require in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, but not less than $2,000. The collector may from time to time require new or additional bond in accordance with this subsection. Every person who fails to register or give bond as required by this subsection, or who in connection with any purchase of gasoline falsely represents himself to be registered and bonded as provided by this subsection, or who willfully makes any false statement in an application for registration under this subsection, shall upon conviction thereof be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, together with the costs of prosecution. If the Commissioner finds that any manufacturer or producer has at any time evaded any Federal tax on gasoline or lubricating oil, he may revoke the registration of such manufacturer or producer, and no sale to, or for resale to, such manufacturer or producer thereafter shall be tax free under section 601 (c) (1), this section, or section 620, as amended, but such manufacturer or producer shall not be relieved of the requirement of giving bond under this subsection.

"(e) Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, records required to be kept with respect to taxes under section 601 (c) (1), as amended, or this section, and returns, reports, and statements with respect to such taxes filed with the Commissioner or a collector, shall be open to inspection by such officers of any State or Territory or political subdivision thereof or the District of Columbia as shall be charged with the enforcement or collection of any tax on gasoline or lubricating oils. The Commissioner and each collector shall furnish to any of such officers, upon written request, certified copies of any such statements, reports, or returns filed in his office upon the payment of a fee of $1 for each 100 words or fraction thereof in the copy or copies requested."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 225, after line 10, to strike out:

SEC. 604. Tax on production of crude petroleum: (a) There is hereby imposed on crude petroleum produced in the United States a tax of one tenth of 1 cent per barrel of 42 gallons, to be paid by stamp by the producer prior to removal from the premises where produced, refining on the premises, or any other disposition of such petroleum. In determining the quantity of crude petroleum produced, proper allowance shall be made for basic sediment and water.

(b) The Commissioner shall issue suitable stamps denoting the payment of the tax imposed by this section to each collector, upon his requisition, in such numbers as may be necessary in his district. Such stamps shall be in such form and denominations as the Commissioner shall prescribe, and shall be sold by the collector to producers only, upon application under oath showing necessity therefor.

(c) No person shall transport any crude petroleum from the premises where produced, or receive crude petroleum from such transportation, unless such transportation is covered by a run ticket, bill of lading, or similar document bearing stamps denoting the payment of tax on such petroleum, canceled as prescribed by regulations under this section. Any crude petroleum transported or received in violation of this section shall be forfeited to the United States. Every person receiving any crude petroleum from transportation from the premises where produced shall preserve such stamped documents as a part of the records required by law or regulations in pursuance thereof.

(d) If any person other than the producer has any interest in crude petroleum subject to tax under this section, such person shall, in lieu of the producer, be liable for so much of such tax as is proportionate to his interest in such petroleum. The tax imposed by this subsection shall be collected from such person by the producer, who shall pay such tax to the United States in the same manner as taxes imposed by subsection (a). The producer may collect such tax by withholding the amount thereof from any payment to such person with respect to such petroleum, and the producer is hereby indemnified against the claims and demands of such person for any amounts withheld in accordance with this subsection.

(e) Every producer shall (in addition to records and reports otherwise required by law or regulation) keep such records of his daily crude oil production as shall be prescribed by regulations under this section, and shall make monthly reports thereof under oath at such times and in such manner as the regulations shall prescribe. Records and reports required under this section shall be open to inspection at all reasonable hours by any duly authorized representative of the Commissioner or any agency of the United States or any State having supervisory or regulatory powers over the production of crude petroleum.

(f) If (1) any person has, prior to the enactment of this act, made a bona fide contract for the sale of crude petroleum with respect to which a tax is imposed by subsection (a) or (b) or this subsection and (2) such contract does not permit the addition to the amount to be paid thereunder of the whole of such tax, then (unless the contract expressly prohibits such addition) the vendor shall not be liable for so much of the tax as is not permitted to be added to the contract price, and the vendee shall pay a tax on the petroleum purchased equivalent to the amount of the production tax not permitted to be added to the contract price. Taxes payable by the vendee shall be paid to the vendor at the time the sale is consummated and shall be paid to the United States by the producer in the same manner as taxes imposed by subsection (a). In case of failure or refusal by the vendee to pay such taxes to the vendor, the vendor shall report the facts to the Commissioner, who shall cause collection of such taxes to be made from the vendee.

(g) As used in this section the term "producer" means the person operating a well producing crude petroleum or otherwise taking crude petroleum from the earth or waters thereof.

(h) The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe such regulations as he deems necessary for the enforcement of this section.

(i) All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1926, shall, insofar as applicable and not inconsistent with this section, be applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by this section.

(j) Any person who violates any provision of this section or who, with intent to defraud, falsely makes, forges, alters, or counterfeits any stamp made or used under this section, or who uses, sells, or has in his possession any such forged, altered, or counterfeited stamp, or any plate or die used or which may be used in the manufacture thereof, or who makes, uses, sells, or has in his possession any paper in imitation of the paper used in the manufacture of any such stamp, or who makes any false statement in any application for stamps under this section, or who has in his possession any such stamp obtained by him otherwise than as provided in this section or who sells or transfers any such stamp otherwise than as provided in this section, shall on conviction be punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 or by imprisonment at hard labor not exceeding 5 years, or by both.

(k) This section shall take effect on the day after the date of the enactment of this act. The Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may provide by regulation for the payment of the tax imposed by this section by return until such time (as specified in such regulations) as the stamps required by this section will be available. The provisions of subsections (c) shall not be effective until such time.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 229, after line 16, to insert:

SEC. 604. Producers' tax on crude petroleum: (a) There is hereby imposed on crude petroleum sold by the producer thereof a tax of one tenth of 1 cent per barrel of 42 gallons, to be paid by the producer. Under regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, such tax shall not apply to crude petroleum produced from any well which is not capable of producing more than 5 barrels per day.

(b) Every person purchasing crude petroleum from the producer thereof, and taking delivery thereof at the premises where produced, shall collect the tax imposed by subsection (a) from the producer. Every such purchaser, and every producer liable for any tax under this section not so collected from him, shall make monthly returns under oath and pay such taxes to the collector for the district in which are located the premises where such crude petroleum was produced. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may by regulations prescribe.

(c) Every purchaser required to collect any tax under this section shall make such collection by deducting and withholding the amount of such tax from any payments made by such purchaser to the producer. Every such purchaser is hereby indemnified against the claims and demands of such producer for the amount of any payments made in accordance with the provisions of this section.

(d) The Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may require such bond or other security from any person subject to any provision of this section as he deems necessary for the protection of the revenue and to assure compliance with this section and other provisions of law applicable with respect to the tax imposed by this section, and may prescribe the form and conditions thereof, provide for the approval of the sureties thereon (without regard to any general provision of law), fix the amount and penalty thereof (whether for the payment of liquidated damages or of a penal sum), and authorize the cancelation of any such bond, in the event of a breach of any condition thereof, upon the payment of such lesser amount as he may deem sufficient. Any person willfully failing to comply with any such requirement shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both.

(e) In addition to records and reports otherwise required by law or regulation, every working interest operator of a well producing crude petroleum or otherwise taking crude petroleum from the earth or waters thereof (whether or not the producer as defined in this section) shall keep such records and make such reports with respect to production and disposition of crude petroleum, at such time and in such manner, as the regulations shall prescribe. Records, reports, and returns required under this section or any provision of law applicable with respect to tax under this section shall, wherever held, be open to inspection at all reasonable hours by any duly authorized representative of the Commissioner or any agency of the United States or any State having supervisory or regulatory powers over the production of crude petroleum.

(f) For the purposes of this section—

(1) The refining of crude petroleum on the premises where produced, the removal of crude petroleum therefrom, or any transfer or other disposition of crude petroleum shall be considered a sale.

(2) The term "producer" means the person owning crude petroleum or having any interest in or title to crude petroleum at the time of its production.

(3) The term "working interest operator" means the person having the management and operation of a well.

(4) The amount of crude petroleum produced shall be determined with allowance for any reasonable and bona fide deduction for basic sediment and water agreed upon by the producer and the purchaser for the purpose of determining the amount sold.

(g) The provisions of section 623 and sections 771 to 774, inclusive, of the Revenue Act of 1932 shall be applicable with respect to the tax imposed by this section.

(h) This section shall take effect on the thirtieth day after the date of its enactment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 233, line 24, after the word "records", to insert "and make such returns", so as to read:

SEC. 605. Tax on refining of crude petroleum: (a) There is hereby imposed (1) on crude petroleum refined or processed in the United States a tax of one tenth of 1 cent per barrel of 42 gallons, to be paid by the refiner or processor, and (2) on gasoline produced or recovered in the United States from natural gas a tax of one tenth of 1 cent per barrel of 42 gallons, to be paid by the person producing or recovering such gasoline.

(b) Every person liable for tax under this section shall make monthly returns under oath in triplicate for each plant or refinery, and pay such taxes to the collector for the district in which such plant or refinery is located. Such returns shall contain such information and be made at such times and in such manner as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. The tax shall, without assessment by the Commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector at the time fixed for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of 1 percent a month from the time when the tax becomes due until paid. Every refiner or processor shall (in addition to records otherwise required by law or regulation) keep such records as shall be prescribed by regulations under this section showing daily receipts, stocks, and disposals of crude petroleum and the names and addresses of the persons from whom received. Every person handling, transporting, storing, or dealing in any manner in crude petroleum shall keep such records and make such returns with respect to transactions in crude petroleum as shall be required by regulations under this section. Returns and records required under this section shall be open to inspection at all reasonable hours by any duly authorized representative of the Commissioner or any agency of the United States or any State having supervisory or regulatory powers over the production of crude petroleum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 234, after line 6, to strike out:

(c) If (1) any person has, prior to the enactment of this act, made a bona fide contract for the sale of gasoline or any product of crude petroleum upon which gasoline or petroleum a tax is imposed by subsection (a) or with respect to which gasoline or product a tax is imposed by this subsection and (2) such contract does not permit the addition to the amount to be paid thereunder of the whole of such tax, then (unless the contract expressly prohibits such addition) the vendor shall not be liable for so much of the tax under subsection (a) as is not permitted to be added to the contract price, and the vendee shall pay a tax on the article purchased equivalent to the tax under subsection (a) not permitted to be added to the contract price. Taxes payable by the vendee shall be paid to the vendor at the time the sale is consummated and shall be paid to the United States by the vendor in the same manner as taxes imposed by subsection (a). In case of failure or refusal by the vendee to pay such taxes to the vendor, the vendor shall report the facts to the Commissioner, who shall cause collection of such taxes to be made from the vendee.

The amendment was agreed to.

SEC. 701. (b) For each year ending June 30, beginning with the year ending June 30, 1934, there is hereby imposed upon every foreign corporation with respect to carrying on or doing business in the United States for any part of such year an excise tax equivalent of $1 for each $1,000 of the adjusted declared value of capital employed in the transaction of its business in the United States.

(c) The taxes imposed by this section shall not apply—

(1) To any corporation enumerated in section 101;

(2) To any insurance company subject to the tax imposed by section 201 or 204;

(3) To any domestic corporation in respect of the year ending June 30, 1934, if it did not carry on or do business during a part of the period from the date of the enactment of this act to June 30, 1934, both dates inclusive; or

(d) Every corporation liable for tax under this section shall make a return under oath within 1 month after the close of the year with respect to which such tax is imposed to the collector for the district in which is located its principal place of business or, if it has no principal place of business in the United States, then to the collector at Baltimore, Md. Such return shall contain such information and be made in such manner as the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary may by regulations prescribe. The tax shall, without assessment by the Commissioner or notice from the collector, be due and payable to the collector before the expiration of the period for filing the return. If the tax is not paid when due, there shall be added as part of the tax interest at the rate of 1 percent a month from the time when the tax became due until paid. All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1926 shall, insofar as not inconsistent with this section, be applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by this section. The Commissioner may extend the time for making the returns and paying the taxes imposed by this section, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe with the approval of the Secretary, but no such extension shall be for more than 60 days.

(e) Returns required to be filed for the purpose of the tax imposed by this section shall be open to inspection in the same manner, to the same extent, and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as returns made under title II of the Revenue Act of 1926.

(f) For the first year ending June 30 in respect of which a tax is imposed by this section upon any corporation, the adjusted declared value shall be the value, as declared by the corporation in its first return under this section (which declaration of value cannot be amended), as of the close of its last income-tax taxable year ending at or prior to the close of the year for which the tax is imposed by this section (or as of the date of organization in the case of a corporation having no income-tax taxable year ending at or prior to the close of the year for which the tax is imposed by this section). For any subsequent year ending June 30, the adjusted declared value in the case of a domestic corporation shall be the original declared value plus (1) the cash and fair market value of property paid in for stock or shares, (2) paid in surplus and contributions to capital, (3) its net income, and (4) the amount of the dividend deduction allowable for income tax purposes, and minus (A) the value of property distributed in liquidation to shareholders, (B) distributions of earnings or profits, and (C) the excess of the deductions allowable for income-tax purposes over its gross income; adjustment being made for each income-tax taxable year included in the period from the date as of which the original declared value was declared to the close of its last income-tax taxable year ending at or prior to the close of the year for which the tax is imposed by this section. The amount of such adjustment for each such year shall be computed (on the basis of a separate return) according to the income-tax law applicable to such year. For any subsequent year ending June 30, the adjusted declared value in the case of a foreign corporation shall be the original declared value adjusted (for the same income-tax taxable years as in the case of a domestic corporation), in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary, to reflect increases or decreases in the capital employed in the transaction of its business in the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 241, after line 17, to insert:

Excess-profits tax: (a) There is hereby imposed upon the net income of every corporation, for each income-tax taxable year ending after the close of the first year in respect of which it is taxable under section 701, an excess-profits tax equivalent to 5 percent of such portion of its net income for such income-tax taxable year as is in excess of 12½ percent of the adjusted declared value of its capital stock (or in the case of a foreign corporation the adjusted declared value of capital employed in the transaction of its business in the United States) as of the close of the preceding income-tax taxable year (or as of the date of organization if it had no preceding income-tax taxable year) determined as provided in section 701. If the income-tax taxable year in respect of which the tax under this section is imposed is a period of less than 12 months, such adjusted declared value shall be reduced to an amount which bears the same ratio thereto as the number of months in the period bears to 12 months. For the purposes of this section the net income shall be the same as the net income for income-tax purposes for the year in respect of which the tax under this section is imposed.

(b) All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable in respect of the taxes imposed by title I of this act shall, insofar as not inconsistent with this section, be applicable in respect of the tax imposed by this section, except that the provisions of sections 131 and 141 of that title shall not be applicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 242, after line 20, to insert:

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to have that amendment agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will not the Senator explain the effect of the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. This amendment increases the surtax rates only about 1 or 2 percent between $4,000 and $32,000. Above $32,000 it does not change them. The tax increases, of course, apply to all taxpayers in the higher surtax brackets. The change is made so that no one with a net income of more than $12,000 will receive any tax reduction in respect to the tax paid under existing law. There is a slight tax reduction below $12,000, in cases where the taxpayer's income is entirely earned. In the intermediate brackets, up to $32,000, as was pointed out, the House committee amendment did not have an equitable and symmetrical schedule, and it was merely for the purpose of making the surtax schedule more equitable and symmetrical that I got the draftsmen to prepare these rates.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The effect of the amendment is to eliminate the reductions made in the lower income brackets below what figure?

Mr. HARRISON. We have eliminated all reductions above $12,000. It does not affect the normal rate. Only the surtax rates are adjusted. For instance, between $4,000 and $6,000, under the bill recommended by the Senate committee, it was a 4-percent rate—that is the bill as it passed the House. In this amendment we have made it 5 percent. That is, the surtax on $6,000 will be $100 instead of $80, since the surtaxes start at $4,000. Between $6,000 and $8,000 the rate is 4 percent in the Senate committee recommendation, and the revised rate is 7 percent. If the Senator will compare this amendment with the present law, he will find there is no great change made by the suggested amendment; not as great as in the Senate committee amendment, and which was the House committee amendment. On the other hand, this amendment is in favor of the Government and will bring in more revenue.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, what is the difference between the revenue expected to be raised by the pending bill as compared with that raised under the present law, from personal income taxes?

Mr. HARRISON. We expect about $30,000,000 additional revenue. We lost $7,000,000 by our earned-income amendment, but will get this back by the revised surtax rates now proposed.

Mr. DILL. That is, under the pending bill it is expected that $30,000,000 more will be received from personal income taxes than has been coming in under the present law?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. May I say to the Senator that that is due to the fact that by reducing the normal taxes, and by increasing the surtaxes, we are reaching tax-exempt securities, which are exempt from normal taxes but not exempt from surtaxes.

Mr. DILL. This $30,000,000 will come from the income taxpayers earning below $10,000, or above $10,000?

Mr. HARRISON. It goes all the way through.

Mr. DILL. How much does it increase the rate of income tax on the so-called "big taxpayer"?

Mr. HARRISON. Four percent on his dividend and partially tax-exempt interest income.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, if I understood the Senator from Washington, I think he was endeavoring to elicit the information as to whether or not the rate schedules in the pending bill have been materially changed from those in existing law. The answer, as I understand, is in the negative; they have not been materially changed.

Mr. HARRISON. There is no substantial change.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The increase in revenue will be due to the difference in the application of the normal tax rate to interest from tax-exempt securities, but will not be due to any material change in the schedules of the income-tax brackets and the rates applied thereon.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit the text to be perfected by my amendment, and then offer his substitute, we can get the matter before the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should prefer to offer my amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. HARRISON. That is right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. So the committee amendment should be disposed of before I offer my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi offers the committee amendment which has just been read as a substitute for the House text. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 7, it is proposed to strike out beginning with line 25 down to and through line 3 on page 8 and to insert the following:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a bitter fight in this country, waged over many years, finally secured the adoption, as a principle of Federal taxation, that taxes should be levied in accordance with the ability of the taxpayer to carry the burden. Later, because one member of the Supreme Court of the United States changed his mind, it became necessary to secure a constitutional amendment in order that we might adopt, for the support of the Federal Government, and to pay in part the costs of war, a graduated system of taxation.

Ever since that amendment was adopted, every time a tax bill has been taken up for consideration by the Congress, there has been a difference of opinion, there has been a sharp conflict. On the one hand have been those who have struggled to prevent the imposition of higher rates of taxation upon large fortunes and upon large incomes. On the other hand have been those who have contended that in a democratic form of government taxes should be levied in accordance with ability to pay, and that more and more of the burden of government and the costs of war should be shifted from direct or indirect taxes, which are not levied in accordance with ability to pay, to the graduated form of taxation as represented by the income and the estate taxes.

In my recollection perhaps one of the most significant, one of the most intense battles in the long legislative career of my father took place in this Chamber when the question arose as to how the war was to be financed. He contended that war profits should be taxed 100 percent, and that taxes should be levied upon wealth in accordance with its ability to pay, in order that oncoming generations should not be shouldered with the huge burden of paying for the war.

He was unsuccessful, Mr. President, insofar as his efforts were concerned, and the Congress at that time determined that a larger percentage of the cost of the war should be borne by the generation that fought it and their children and their children's children.

In this country in 1916, the year before we entered the war, the per capita Federal debt was about $12.50. Today, many years after that conflict closed, the per capita debt attributable to the war is approximately $150.

Mr. President, even at this late date we are still fighting over the issue as to whether or not those who reaped terrific profits out of the war, those who built their fortunes upon the blood money which they extracted in the form of war profit, shall be asked even now, at this late date, to come forward and to carry their fair share of the cost of the war out of which they profited so richly at the expense of their fellow citizens.

So lightly did we treat income and estate tax rates during the war that as a result of the war the reports of the United States Bureau of Internal Revenue show that 21,000 individuals in the United States during the period of the war accumulated a million dollars or more of capital. In other words, Mr. President, we were so lenient in our tax rates during the war, insofar as wealth and war profits were concerned, that we permitted the creation of one war-made millionaire in the United States for every three American boys who gave up their lives in France.

In succeeding sessions of the Congress after the war was over, the issue as to whether or not these income and estate tax rates should be maintained at a high level until the war debt had been discharged was brought up in connection with every single revenue bill. But in 1921 there was appointed as Secretary of the Treasury, Andrew W. Mellon. He came before a secret meeting of the Senate Finance Committee shortly after he had assumed office. He was requested by a member of the committee to outline his point of view upon the whole tax question, and in response to that request he said, in substance, "I think that if we could do away with all the taxes which we now have"—and I digress long enough to point out he meant the income and the estate tax—"if we could wipe out all the taxes that we now have"—and the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] suggests that at that time, of course, the excess-profits tax was still upon the books—"if we could wipe out all those taxes and levy a tax upon all turn-overs, all sales of goods and real estate, I think we would spread the burden of taxation as much as it can be spread," and he concluded by saying, "I would regard that as an ideal system of taxation."

In other words, Mr. President, the newly sworn-in Secretary of the Treasury in 1921 revealed before the Finance Committee that his ideal system of taxation was the sales tax, a tax levied upon the opposite principle to the theory recognized by every economist worthy of the name as being a sound theory, namely, that taxes should be levied in proportion to the ability of the taxpayer to carry the burden. During Mr. Mellon's term of office we had the active, aggressive leadership of the Treasury Department, with all the force and influence which it wields, in a constant drive to drastically reduce the taxes upon the wealth in this country and to shift more and more of the burdens onto people less able to bear it.

I have seen estimates made, Mr. President, that as a result of this policy of relieving wealth of its fair share of taxation more than $4,000,000,000 were taken off from large incomes and off from large estates during the period when Mr. Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury..

In order to be absolutely fair, Mr. President, I think it should be said that after 1924 those who sit upon the other side of the Chamber, and who occupied a minority position at that time, finally abandoned their traditional attitude toward taxation, and in many instances tried to "out-Mellon Mellon" in their advocacy of lower and lower taxes upon large incomes.

One of the things that has impressed me in my effort to study the various factors which helped to contribute to producing the worst economic crisis in the history of this country is the fact that more and more economists and experts upon the subject of taxation are coming to recognize that the Mellon policy of constantly reducing the graduated taxes upon large incomes and large estates was a material contributing factor in stimulating the excesses of speculation and wild finance which characterized the period of the so-called "boom" before 1929.

Mr. President, as I stated on the floor of the Senate a few weeks ago, it seems perfectly obvious that one of the things which manifested itself during the period of this so-called "boom" was a constant decline in the ability of the great mass of the people of this country to buy the products of industry and the farm. We had during that period a constantly rising curve of production, both in the factory and on the farm, and a constantly declining curve of ability on the part of the great mass of the people to buy the things produced in the factory and on the farm.

I desire to refer to the October 1932 bulletin of the Tailor Society, in which they printed a study of the American consumer market in 1929, in an effort to ascertain by income groups where the real purchasing power of the American consumer market rested. They picked the year 1929, as I understand, because it was the period known as the peak of the so-called "boom."

I shall not burden the Senate with a detailed quotation from this bulletin, but I can summarize the findings as follows:

This study shows that those with incomes of $1,000 or under purchased about 17.7 percent of all the goods sold; individuals with incomes from $1,000 to $2,000 purchased 36.4 percent of the expenditure in 1929 for goods, services, taxes, and savings. Those with incomes between $2,000 and $3,000 purchased 13.1 percent; those with incomes of from $3,000 to $5,000 purchased 10.7 percent; those with incomes of $5,000 and over bought about 22.1 percent of the goods sold.

In other words, Mr. President, at the peak of the so-called "prosperity" individuals in the United States with incomes of $5,000 or less purchased approximately 80 percent of all the goods sold during that year, and those with incomes of $5,000 or more purchased approximately only 20 percent of all the goods sold.

It seems perfectly obvious to me, Mr. President, that until we restore the buying power of that group of citizens in the United States who in 1929 furnished approximately 80 percent of the purchasing power we shall continue to suffer the agonies of this economic depression.

Everyone recognizes that for several generations in this country wealth has been concentrating in the hands of a relatively small group of individuals. The process had gone forward for many, many years preceding the World War, but the war and the policies of taxation which were inaugurated thereby resulted in a terrific concentration of wealth.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Has it not been the case in the whole history of the United States that following every war there has been a period of pseudoprosperity and high taxes in order to pay for the cost of the war and for economic maladjustment, which has resulted in every instance in a still further concentration of wealth?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think the Senator from Missouri is absolutely correct historically in his statement.

The process to which I refer went forward apace during the period of the boom until the concentration of wealth in the hands of a relatively small group of individuals created a situation where the expenditure of those incomes for the purposes of consumption became impossible; in other words, after an individual had satisfied the most exaggerated desires for all the things which people eat, wear, and use, and even for the so-called "luxuries of life", there remained over and above the satisfaction of those wants and those desires a huge surplus income which the economists often refer to as "unexpendable" income. Unexpendable in the sense that the individual enjoying that income cannot spend the surplus for goods and things which are normally consumed in the channels of trade.

Perhaps the best recognized studies of the distribution of wealth and income in this country were made by Dr. Wilfred I. King. Taking those studies as a basis, and translating them into a simple little illustration, we obtain a startling picture of the extent to which wealth has become concentrated in the United States. Let us assume that $100 represents all the vast wealth of this country, the richest Nation on earth; let us assume that 100 individuals represent the entire population of the United States; if we divide that $100, representing our vast wealth, among those 100 people, representing all our citizens, as wealth is today divided in this country, what result do we find? We find that 1 individual would have $59, 1 individual would have $9, 22 persons would have $1.22 each, and 76, or all the remainder, would have less than 7 cents apiece.

Mr. President, I maintain that this not only presents the problem which confronts the people of this country if we are ever to find our way out of this depression but I likewise contend that it presents a situation which should give pause to every Senator who in his heart desires to see the institutions of democracy maintained. I contend that all history demonstrates that concentration of wealth such as has taken place in the United States is inimical to the perpetuity of democratic institutions. Upon that basis and that basis alone a sound and logical plea could be made for the imposition of higher taxes upon those who are able to bear the burden; but, Mr. President, I do not rest my contention for this amendment upon that ground alone. Every person recognizes that this is a crisis graver than war. I contend that this crisis is more fraught with danger to the institutions of the Republic than any war or any combination of wars in which we have ever been engaged. I think the loss of the war against this depression is more terrible to contemplate than would have been the consequences of the loss of any war in which our country ever engaged.

It has been necessary in this crisis for the Federal Government to come to the aid of its citizens, to relieve distress, to relieve want, to relieve human suffering, to prevent malnutrition, and the undermining of the health of the on-coming generation. It has been necessary likewise for the Federal Government to provide employment to a large number of the unemployed who could not find employment in the normal activities of life. Any person who has made a study of the question must recognize that it will be necessary to carry on these collective expenditures over a long period of time, and I want to plead with Senators who do me the honor to listen to these remarks not to fall into the error which, in my opinion, contributed more to the failure of the last administration than any other single factor.

Mr. President, all the way through this crisis the thing which has defeated the efforts of those of us who were fighting for an adequate program to stem the tide of the depression has been the unwarranted optimism of men who have refused to face the facts. Every time we have come forward with an adequate program we have been told that prosperity was "just around the corner." For that reason no program was adopted in session after session, and it was only the intensification of the crisis and finally the collapse of the entire banking structure which made it possible to secure consideration for a program to meet the situation. Even if Senators disagree insofar as the probable immediate developments of economic activity are concerned, we may say, so far as this crisis is concerned, just as now we can honestly say so far as the World War is concerned, neither the war nor this economic crisis is over insofar as paying for them is concerned.

How shall we proceed to meet the situation, so far as the cost of war, the cost of Government, and the cost of these extraordinary expenditures to meet the emergency of this hour are concerned? In all justice, in all equity, it seems to me there is only one sound course open, and that is in this grave crisis to call upon those who have the ability to meet the burden, and to call upon them in proportion to their ability to meet the crisis.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. How does the rate the Senator proposes compare——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am coming to that, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. President, the prediction I am about to make may shock some Senators, but I venture the prediction, nevertheless, that the direct-relief load will be higher in April and May than in those 2 months during any year of the depression. I make that statement in the hope that Senators will not be led astray upon the question by a false sense of security or an illusory hope that the enormous burdens confronting the Treasury have abated. It is necessary to carry on the collective expenditures if we are to maintain our institutions; and now is the time, not a year from now, to levy the taxes.

Assume for the moment that we experience a sharp improvement in economic activity in private business, then now is the time to levy rates which will benefit the Treasury. Every student of the situation knows that if there is any sharp rise in economic activity in private industry it will be due, largely, to the collective expenditures which have been made by the Federal Government. The Government at this hour should ask those who are the beneficiaries of that expenditure, in part, to carry their fair share of the load. If, however, we fail to increase the income-tax rates we will be relieving them from their fair contribution in this crisis.

I know that the old argument about tax-exempt securities will be made. It is made every time we have a tax bill under consideration and whenever an attempt is made to increase the rates upon large incomes. May I say at the outset that I recognize frankly the existence of tax-exempt securities and believe that the island of safety they provide to individuals who desire to escape the burdens of government and the costs of war is absolutely unjustified. I make the further statement, Mr. President, that we shall never have a satisfactory tax system nor one which is efficient and equitable until we have met and solved that problem and removed from the taxpayers these havens of safety from tax burdens.

But, in my opinion, the bugaboo of tax-exempt securities has been used altogether too effectively in previous debates over the question of whether or not we can afford to increase income-tax rates. I have no very recent figures, but the Federal Trade Commission in 1924, following the high tax rates of the war period, made a survey to ascertain the percentage of income in the United States derived from tax-exempt securities to the total taxable income from income groups of $10,000 a year and upward. They found that only 3.16 percent of all the incomes of the United States of those who enjoy incomes of $10,000 a year or more was derived from tax-exempt securities. They found furthermore that only 7.76 percent of the total income in the United States was derived from tax-exempt securities. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], as a result of his investigations, made a statement in the course of the debate upon a previous tax bill which is not at variance with the figures I have cited from the Federal Trade Commission.

I should like to say, however, that I do not share the apprehension of many Senators and others that if higher income-tax rates are imposed there will be a dangerously high percentage of income placed in a position of immunity through investment in tax-exempt securities. In the first place men are too much interested in the business in which they have invested their capital to be willing to sacrifice for tax immunity their right to share in the control of those institutions.

In the second place, in a market such as we have today, I believe it would be very difficult for those owning the so-called "blue-chip" industrial stocks to successfully transfer at this time, without a terrific loss, their holdings in those securities in order to invest in tax-exempt securities. It would require a supergenius at stock-market manipulation to extricate himself from a situation of that kind without a loss which would be so much greater than any advantages he would enjoy from the immunity from taxation that I think it would not be undertaken.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The Senator from Wisconsin has properly and eloquently discussed the importance of his amendment with respect to current expenditures of the Government. Because of my absence from the Chamber during a portion of the Senator's address I rise to ask whether the Senator has referred to the indispensability of some such program for meeting the public debt of the country?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I tried to suggest a few moments ago that regardless of what may be the events which the immediate future holds in store for us so far as economic and business activity is concerned, so far as paying the cost of the recovery program is concerned the depression is not over. Even if we could be assured that someone would wave a wand and we would return to prosperity tomorrow, it is absolutely essential to levy these higher rates in order to distribute the burden of the cost of the recovery program upon those best able to bear it, and in large measure upon those who are directly benefiting and who will directly benefit from the huge collective expenditure.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LONG. As a matter of fact, if we were to discontinue today the immense amount of money the Government is pouring out, does the Senator think we would be any better off than we were in 1932 and 1933?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If we were to discontinue the collective expenditures that are being made at this time, in my opinion we would be courting a terrific recession in economic activity. I am convinced that most of the ground that has been won against this depression—and I may say that in my opinion it is all too little—has been won as a result of these collective expenditures, and the placing of purchasing power in the hands of individuals.

I also desire to point out that we meet the argument about tax-exempt securities both coming and going. When we are advocating an increase in the rates on incomes, we are told that there is danger that those who have large incomes will invest in tax-exempt securities. When, however, we reach another section of the bill and endeavor to increase the rates of estate taxes, the same Senators who have argued against increased income-tax rates because of the existence of tax-exempt securities fail to support increased rates of taxes upon estates, where they know full well that a tax may be levied, at the time of death, upon tax-exempt securities.

Mr. President, a few words now about this amendment.

It increases the normal tax over the committee bill from 4 to 6 percent.

It increases the surtax rates in the committee bill, with a larger number of brackets, so that upon surtax net incomes of $1,000,000 the committee would levy a tax of $532,740, and upon such incomes in excess of $1,000,000, 59 percent of such excess, while this amendment would levy upon surtax net incomes of $1,000,000, $658,260, and upon such incomes in excess of $1,000,000, 71 percent in addition of such excess. Combining the normal and the surtax rates, the committee proposes a tax of 63 percent upon incomes of $1,000,000 or more, while this amendment proposes a tax of 77 percent upon incomes of $1,000,000 or more. The exemptions are the same as in the existing law.

I should like to make a few comparisons between the tax rates proposed by the committee, the tax carried in the act of 1932, the tax carried in the 1918 or so-called "war revenue bill", the tax at present levied in Great Britain, and the rates proposed in this amendment. I wish to say that upon a few of these brackets, in view of the amendment offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] which has been adopted, some of the reductions which appear on this table would not occur in the pending bill; but since the Senator offered his amendment only a few moments ago, I have not had time to ask the experts to correct this table. Substantially, however, for the bulk of the brackets I shall mention there is no real difference.

Mr. President, let us take an income of $3,000 as one example and assume a married man with no dependents, all earned income. The 1932 act levied a tax of $20; the revenue bill of 1934 as reported from the committee would levy a tax of $8; the 1918 act levied a tax of $60; the amendment I propose would levy a tax of $12; and in Great Britain a taxpayer would pay $311.

Let us take an income of $5,000, making the same assumption. The 1918 act levied a tax of $180; the 1932 act levied a tax of $100; the revenue bill as reported from the committee would levy a tax of $80; my amendment would collect $120; in Great Britain the income-tax payer would pay $711.

Let us assume an income of $7,500, making the same assumption. The 1918 act levied a tax of $460; the 1932 act, $255; the revenue bill as reported from the committee, $210; the amendment I propose, $315; in Great Britain the taxpayer would pay $1,222.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator to repeat the amount which the Revenue Act of 1932 levied on an income of $7,500?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Two hundred and fifty-five dollars.

Mr. BORAH. And the present bill levies a tax of $210?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The bill as reported from the committee levies a tax of $210 on—

$10,000 income, the 1918 act levied a tax of $830; the 1932 act, $480; the revenue bill as reported from the committee, $408; my amendment, $618; in Great Britain, $1,862;

$15,000 income: The 1918 act levied a tax of $1,670; the Revenue Act of 1932, $1,020; the bill as reported from the committee, $887; my amendment, $1,330; in Great Britain the taxpayer would pay $3,444;

$25,000 income: The 1918 act, $3,720; the 1932 act, $2,520; the revenue bill as reported from the committee, $2,348; my amendment, $3,528; in Great Britain, $7,369;

$100,000 income: The 1918 act levied a tax of $35,030; the 1932 act, $30,100; the revenue bill of 1934 as reported from the committee, $30,358; my amendment, $42,993; in Great Britain, $48,102;

$500,000 income: The 1918 act levied a tax of $323,030; the 1932 act, $263,600; the revenue bill as reported from the committee, $263,708; my amendment, $336,343; in Great Britain, $307,910;

$1,000,000 income: The 1918 act levied a tax of $703,030; the 1932 act, $571,100; the bill as reported from the committee, $571,158; my amendment, $716,318; in Great Britain, $639,160.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the table from which the figures I have given have been taken.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Comparison of income tax, married man with no dependents (all earned income)

Net income	1932 act	Revenue bill of 1934	La Follette proposal	1918 act	Great Britain, present

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator knows, of course, that I am in sympathy with the purposes of his amendment. I voted for it in the committee and intend to vote for it on the floor; but I do wish to point out a fact to which I am certain the Senator will agree—that the comparison he has drawn in that table between Federal taxes in the United States and taxes in Great Britain is not nearly so fair a comparison as it appears to be on the surface because in Great Britain, of course, they have no equivalent of the State, county, and municipal taxes which in this country are superimposed upon the Federal tax. Furthermore, they do not have the great mass of tax-exempt securities with which we are cursed in this country.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I agree with that, Mr. President, but I think it is a conclusive answer to those who contend that there will be a flight of capital from this country if we increase the tax rates to a point where they are less than they were in 1918.

Mr. CLARK. I entirely agree with that statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I further desire to suggest to the Senator that it seems to me that the fact that we have other taxes not based upon ability to pay is no reason why we should not, insofar as meeting the obligations of the Federal Government is concerned, shift more and more of the burden of the cost of government, the cost of war, and the cost of the recovery program over to a graduated system of taxation as distinguished from one that is not graduated and falls upon the taxpayer without regard to ability to pay. In other words, we have our problem. We are confronted with certain alternatives as to how it may be met; and I am contending that the level of the rates imposed in Great Britain, where they have the same problem of meeting their responsibilities as a national government, indicates that these taxes may be levied without unfortunate consequences so far as a flight of capital or a resistance to the tax is concerned.

While I do not hold any brief for those in this country who enjoy great wealth and large incomes, I should be the last to charge them with a lack of patriotism which would cause them to export their capital in order to avoid their share of the responsibilities of government in this crisis.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. May I ask the Senator why he stopped the graduated system at a million dollars? It seems to me, although the pending bill stops at a million dollars, that the same plan should go on above a million dollars.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, theoretically I think there is a great deal in what the Senator has said, and while I have not the last report before me there are not many incomes above a million dollars.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator as to that.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I agree with the Senator that theoretically and properly the rates should continue to be graduated beyond a million dollars.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Mississippi offered an amendment making some changes in this provision?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from Mississippi offered an amendment which would tend, as I understood his statement, to correct the situation in the lower brackets in the committee rates, where there is shown a reduction in the rates below those in the existing law.

Mr. BORAH. Did I understand the Senator correctly as saying that we will collect less under the act of 1934 from income taxes than we collected under the act of 1932?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It would be true under the bill as it was reported from the committee. The way in which they get the estimate of an increase of $30,000,000 in the yield from the income tax is not through any change in rates, but is due to the fact that they have made interest from tax-exempt securities subject to the normal tax all the way up, and the experts in the Treasury estimate this will yield $30,000,000 additional. But the committee gave away about $7,000,000 of that when it increased the earned-income exemption from $8,000 to $20,000. So that the net gain is probably not to exceed $23,000,000, and it is not obtained by any increase in rates. In other words, we are to go into the next year of this depression, if we follow the recommendations of the committee, without laying a heavier share of the burden upon those who enjoy net taxable incomes than we placed on them in the last revenue bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield further to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator may have given the figures, though I did not hear him if he did; but has the Senator an estimate of the increased amount which would be raised under the proposed taxes?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am coming to that now, and I will answer the question while the Senator from Alabama is here.

Under date of March 12 I received a letter from the Honorable Henry Morgenthau, Jr., Secretary of the Treasury, from which I read the following:

Available information indicates that this proposed schedule of normal and surtax rates—

That is the one now pending—

(assuming earned income credit as in H.R. 7835)—

I have just explained that it is not quite the same as it is now—would yield about $185,000,000 more revenue than the 1932 act rates, on incomes as reported for 1932. These estimates take no account of other provisions of H.R. 7835 affecting individual incomes, such as the proposed treatment of gains and losses from capital assets. It does not appear feasible to estimate the effect of the proposed rates on the income base. If incomes reported under these rates should exceed incomes for 1932, the additional revenue would be larger than estimated above.

Mr. President, by adopting this amendment upon the basis of the estimate furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, upon which we have to rely in making up these tax bills, upon which the committee has relied with relation to every other item in the bill, we would secure an increase of $185,000,000. Confronted as we are with a grave national situation, it is only logical and only the part of sound statesmanship to impose the rates I have offered, and to impose them in this bill.

I believe that we are determining a much more important question, however, than just what is to be raised additionally from these taxes, although I recognize that as of supreme importance. Considering the magnitude of this economic crisis, I think we are passing upon the question of who owns this Government, and I hope to have a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think we are also passing upon the question of our approach to a possible enforced inflation, because if the Government is self-sustaining in its revenue, it is that much farther removed from this thing which is so largely feared.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Precisely, Mr. President; the Senator from Michigan has indicated a very important consideration, which I had neglected to state. There is no question but that it is a race between the ability of the tax mechanism to produce a sufficient amount of revenue in order to maintain Government credit and to enable us to carry on these needed, extraordinary expenditures, and the alternative of uncontrolled printing-press inflation.

I might say that Great Britain, under the existing high rates, with a load in proportion to her population as great as ours, in my opinion, announces a surplus of $166,000,000 over her expenditures—a balanced budget.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed without amendment the joint resolution of the Senate (S.J.Res. 74) authorizing necessary funds to conduct investigation regarding rates charged for electrical energy and to prepare reports thereon.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7599) to provide emergency aid for the repair or reconstruction of homes and other property damaged by earthquake, tidal wave, flood, tornado, or cyclone in 1933 and 1934.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 552. An act for the relief of Manuel Merritt;

S. 1484. An act for the relief of Miles Thomas Barrett;

H.R. 881. An act for the relief of Primo Tiburzio;

H.R. 2639. An act for the relief of Charles J. Eisenhauer; and

H.R. 7599. An act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to nonprofit corporations for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin asked a very pertinent question at the conclusion of his speech; that is, Who owns this Government?

A few days ago the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] stated on this floor that we had now reached the point in our financial operations where it would require $1,600,000,000 a year to meet the interest on our national debt, and to provide an adequate sinking fund. At the rate at which this Government is becoming indebted under various operations, it is conceivable that before long we may face an interest burden, together with what is required for the creation of a sinking fund, of $2,000,000,000 a year. I am wondering, and I think a great many other people are beginning to wonder, whether an operation, which keeps piling up these frightful interest charges, is not in itself as disastrous in its potentialities as the thing to which the Senator from Wisconsin referred a moment ago—that is, printing-press money.

We will have to decide before very long how we are going to finance recovery operations, and whether we are to continue financing them by going further into debt, piling up a monstrous burden of interest, which of itself is becoming so large as to present a threat to the financial stability of the Government.

Mr. President, I listened with a great deal of interest to the figures used by the Senator from Wisconsin in his coldly logical appeal for higher income taxes on big fortunes. I hear no challenge to the accuracy of those figures. They constitute a damning indictment of our economic system. There is no answer to this Banquo's ghost of finance, except such answer as we care to make here, in this Chamber, and in my judgment, we fail to answer at our peril. We fail to make a just and correct answer at the expense of a possible disruption of all the functions of government.

Under these figures dealing with income, it appears that 1 percent of our population owns and controls 59 percent of the wealth of this Republic; that another 1 percent owns 9 percent of the wealth; that 22 percent of the population own and control 27 percent of the wealth; that another great body of Americans, who may be called upon to shoulder rifles to preserve this Republic, and whose children are taught to sing "My country, 'tis of thee"—"my country", the possessive case—this great body of dispossessed Americans, constituting 76 percent of our population, own something over 5 percent of the wealth of a Nation for which they may have to shed their blood.

Translating these figures in another fashion, it means that 2 percent of the population of this country have 68 percent of its wealth; that 24 percent of the population of this country have 94 percent of its wealth; and that 76 percent, as I indicated, have something over 5 percent of its wealth. These figures present the most somber picture ever confronted by any people under the sun.

Since this country came into existence and the infant Republic was born we have had three or four gigantic conflicts. First, there was the Revolutionary War, by which we established certain fundamental principles upon which it was hoped this Republic would forever continue to operate. Then came the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and the War between the States. I have walked over these great battlefields so near this beautiful city of Washington—Gettysburg, Antietam, Mine Run, Spottsylvania Courthouse—fields bathed in blood, the blood of courageous men who died to preserve a Government of, for, and by the people, but, preeminently and above all else, a government for the people. Yet our Government has so functioned, or misfunctioned, if you please, that by operation of law—because it could not come about in any other way—we now find 1 percent of the population of this country in possession of nearly 60 percent of our national wealth.

We do not have to quote Goldsmith, that a nation that permits that sort of thing is perilously near the edge—

> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

This abysmal poverty in the midst of plenty is a herald of moral death and national decay, and Congress will permit that tragic situation to continue at its peril.

How long can we maintain this thing we call "representative government" when, as representatives of a hundred percent of the people, we stand here year in and year out and permit 5 percent of the people—yes, 1 percent of the people—to own so great a proportion of the national wealth; and, by means of that ownership, to exploit mercilessly, ruthlessly, every family in this country? Practices sanctified by law and patient acquiescence enable the comparatively few to loot the pantries of every family under the American flag. And by rejecting the La Follette amendment we put the stamp of our approval on this monstrous wrong.

It is true that here and there from reactionary sources will be found a guarded admission that beggaring a nation to enrich a few men is wrong. Oh, they are very guarded admissions, very halting, timid little admissions that something is wrong. Servitors of the "House of Have" are very cautious gentlemen, and much prefer to make meaningless gestures and rhetorical flourishes in the political arena, a few of which I shall presently advert to.

I hold in my hand a clipping from a newspaper bearing date December 16, 1931. It is a statement by Mr. Patrick Hurley, who was in President Hoover's Cabinet at the time. He refers in somewhat guarded terms to the tragic conditions of the country. Here speaks one of the outstanding Republicans of the United States, and he says:

> One of the weaknesses is the overconcentration of wealth in the hands of a few individuals. We have yet to devise a plan that will provide for a more equitable distribution of the Nation's wealth.

Nothing came of this pleasant little gesture—this sop to Cerberus. As a lawyer I know of no other means whereby there can be brought about a just, fair, and adequate redistribution of national wealth in this country except by employing the processes of taxation.

Certainly an attempt by any other mechanism to do that would simply plunge us into chaos. This proposal presents to concentrated wealth the option of sifting it back to the people in pay envelops, or giving it to the Government to feed the hungry.

There have been some very, very startling things said about the causes of this horrible depression, and I want to read a few of them into the RECORD because these statements are, first, a challenge to our patriotism and intelligence, and, second, an admission of the utter ineptitude of some of our so-called "leaders."

Along in the early part of 1932, Mr. Ogden L. Mills, the then Secretary of the Treasury, made a statement which was one of the most extraordinary, bizarre, weird statements ever made by a public servant. He was before one of the committees of the Senate or House at that time, and he is credited with the statement that capital, referring to the great body of concentrated wealth in this country—and I am quoting his language now—> is better employed in the hands of the men who built up the industry than scattered among the thousands.

There speaks your tory. There speaks the tory mind. If that theory be correct and it is better for a little group to have most of our wealth, where does that sort of principle lead us to? If it is just and proper for 1 percent of our population to have 59 percent of our wealth, by the same token and by the same logic it would be just and proper for that 1 percent to have 95 percent of the wealth of the country.

Where is that thing going to end? Is there a man, woman, or child under the American flag who can find any defense in morals, in conscience, in light of the history of this country, for the thing that Mr. Mills defends and which has been so vigorously assailed by the able and aggressive Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to whom we have just listened?

On these great battlefields around this city were poured out libations of blood that staggered the world. As I stand here today, I wonder whether those boys, both in the Northern and in the Southern Armies who yielded up their young lives for a cause which they believed to be just and holy; I wonder if they would have died so willingly had they known that within one generation, within 70 years after the guns of Gettysburg had ceased to thunder, 1 percent of the population of the Republic would own 60 percent of our national wealth? I wonder what they would have thought when they stood on the flame-crested hills of Gettysburg had they known that their sons and grandsons would walk the streets, beggared by cruel economic adversity which is so unnecessary.

My father happened to be one of those soldier boys who carried a musket up there at Gettysburg, and I have thrilled so often as I read and reread Lincoln's beautiful address on that field, where he adjured his auditors and posterity to stand firmly for those principles that should forever preserve a government of, for, and by the people.

What are we doing to carry out that admonition of Lincoln to preserve this Government for the people? We have contented ourselves with the creation of an industrial machine that has looted every pantry in America for the benefit of a few; and when we protest we are met with a brazen statement, like that of Ogden Mills, that it is better that a few men should have this money than to have it scattered out in the hands of the people.

That, Mr. President, comes as near a declaration of treason as anything ever uttered in this country. And any man who actually believes that it would be better for a little handful of men to have our national wealth of this country, wealth that has been preserved by the blood and tears of a million Americans—any man who thinks that that is just, a decent and honorable patriotic sentiment, comes dangerously near to having the blood of treason in his veins. Such a philosophy is treason to the memory of the boys who died upon American battlefields that this Republic might be preserved. These boys died for the homes of America, for economic liberty for their sons, not to preserve Ogden Mills' private fortune.

Let us see what answers some of the other outstanding minds of this country have given us to this great challenge of poverty that is laid at the very doors of this Capitol. It will not do for us to exorcise this demon with a lot of words about our national greatness. It makes no difference whether we now answer or not; sometime the American people are going to make us answer for not meeting this issue head-on. The American people are not going to sit supinely by indefinitely and see their children go hungry in the midst of a civilization capable of producing so much wealth that we do not know what to do with it.

Let me digress to say that despite the classic definitions of wealth which are flung in our teeth so glibly, definitions that come so trippingly to the lips of the apostles of laissez-faire, from those who would continue to clamp down this yoke on the necks of the American people; wealth, Mr. President, consists of homes, radios, rugs, automobiles, and electric cookers, and all those things which help to make life sweet and happy, that bring into American homes those things that make life just a little more cheerful.

With this marvelous machinery of ours we can produce that sort of wealth in such abundance that men are compelled to gaze in astonishment at this great industrial miracle that has been wrought within your lifetime and mine. Yet in the face of these potential possibilities of bringing into every American home that sort of wealth, to drive forever from the hearthstones of American homes the wolf of want—in spite of the fact that our machinery, operating but a few hours a day, can insure to every American under the flag a livelihood second to none—at the very moment when our mastery over our own destiny seems to be most complete, at the very instant when we seem to be most completely masters of our own fate—we find many millions of our people beggarized, pauperized, walking the streets, begging for the poor privilege of a job with any kind of wages.

At a time when our factories can turn out foodstuffs in a prodigal fashion, babies go hungry; at a time when we slaughter pigs to dispose of an unsalable surplus, little kiddies have not enough to eat; at a time when men complain that they do not have decent coverings on their floors, the rug and carpet factories are silent, the wheels are gone still.

What sort of an indictment will the historian of the future bring against this crazy topsyturvy civilization? The critic is justified in asking if it deserves the name of civilization. With 96 men in this body grappling with this problem and with 435 on the other side of the Capitol, for some reason our hands seem palsied, and we shrink from frank discussion of the fact that a few are coming to own America.

What are some of the answers to this riddle which have been offered of late? Let me read from one of the big magazines of this country in which a great editor is telling Americans whose homes are ravaged by poverty what they need to do and should do in a time like this. He says this in an editorial:

The charitable organizations of this country should be called to account for their criminal waste. When money is used to feed those who have no means for sustenance it should be confined to low-priced nourishing foods.

This editor is objecting to feeding the poor the kind of food he thought was too expensive. He goes on:

The 1-cent restaurant, details of which appeared in this publication recently, clearly proves how cheaply people can be fed and still be given a reasonable amount of variety.

Everywhere we find a fear of national catastrophe. Possible revolution has been referred to by high Government officials, and unless the money available for feeding people is used more economically and sensibly, there will be no possible chance of stopping the tide of desperate humans. It is said that we are only a few meals from savagery. And here is the remedy available to every community, every charitable organization.

Now, get this gem from the learned editor. Quoting again:

Huge pots of boiled cracked wheat or corn without a single ingredient added will thoroughly nourish the body and thoroughly satisfy the pangs of hunger.

That gentleman has filled his editorial columns time after time with an indictment of the thing that the Senator from Wisconsin has just advocated. He sees nothing wrong in a few men owning America. Feed the hungry cracked wheat and cracked corn. That is all these out-of-work Americans deserve. Yet they are of that sturdy and stalwart breed who may be asked to yield up their bodies to preserve their country for gentlemen like this man, who is a part of the fortunate 1 percent who hold 60 percent of the wealth of our country.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator who wrote that?

Mr. BONE. I hand it to the Senator so that he may look at it.

I marvel sometimes at the animal courage of the defenders of this sort of a game. I suppose I arrived on this scene of earthly troubles too late to understand the operation of minds that can see no wrong in a system that dooms millions to want. I marvel at their brazen effrontery in the face of the tragic conditions which we now face, their superb indifference to the possible results of their own folly. I have before me an editorial by Mr. B. C. Forbes, a very prominent financial writer for the Hearst newspapers. The editorial bears date January 27, 1932. I have no quarrel with Mr. Forbes; he is merely writing his own conclusions as to the views of financiers, but Mr. Forbes has frequently assured us that he speaks from the book, so to speak, and he is apparently in close touch with the gentleman whose views he expresses at various times. Here is what he says in this article:

This is real progress. A year ago, 6 months ago, even less, most financiers and other men of important affairs objected to any attempts to stimulate recovery.

Just get that confession. It comes from one of the most prominent financial writers of the country.

A year ago, 6 months ago, even less, most financiers and other men of important affairs—

That is, the 1 percent that are coming rapidly to own the United States—objected to any attempts to stimulate recovery.

In other words, this tragedy that had come into the American home, this wracking of the bodies of children with pangs of hunger, stirred not one single impulse of pity in the cold, stony breasts of these gentlemen concerning whom Mr. Forbes speaks. These masters of America "objected to attempts to stimulate recovery." I again quote:

Their attitude was: "Things must be allowed to run their course."

I ask Members of the Senate, who, in God's name, owns this country? Have we gotten to the point where 96 men in the Senate have to sit here day after day and allow a challenge like this to remain unanswered, when a few private citizens can say, "things"—meaning this depression—"must be allowed to run their course" although little kiddies go hungry and homes of decent, clean Americans are desolated by this carefully arranged "course"?

Out in the State of Washington during the campaign of 1932 I talked to thousands of people and I want to tell Members of the Senate one or two things I saw in that campaign because they also constitute in themselves an unanswerable indictment of this game as it is now played.

Washington is a beautiful State. God has blessed it with marvelous resources. When the harvest comes on it is a veritable cornucopia of plenty; every Senator from the West knows what the State of Washington is and its marvelous productivity, and yet in one county 60,000 people were being fed the bitter bread of charity out of commissaries; being fed dry, farinaceous foods poorly suited to the needs of children. Little kiddies out there were deprived of milk, fruit, and vegetables because their poor daddies had been out of a job for 2 or 3 years, and the bodies of these little ones were suffering and their bones were becomming afflicted with a disease strangely akin to rickets. Malnutrition and inanition were getting in their deadly work on the innocent and the helpless. I saw sights that would melt a heart of stone. As I looked at these great audiences who did me the honor to listen to my speeches, and who were trying so hard to be patient and loyal and forbearing, I wondered how long they would remain in that state of mind. Mr. President, the outstanding fact in all human history is the infinite patience of the poor.

A hundred miles away in one of the most beautiful valleys in the United States I saw thousands of tons of foodstuffs—peaches, pears, tomatoes, cherries—rotting on the trees and on the ground. All our genius and our wisdom could not devise a scheme which would get that fruit and those vegetables over the mountains to those hungry little mouths on the west side that were watering for the cherries and peaches that were never to be theirs.

But let me quote further from Mr. Forbes:

Today nearly every one of these same influential gentlemen feels that constructive steps can now be taken safely.

After hundreds had committed suicide because of poverty, after millions of American homes had been desolated by poverty, these suave gentlemen, who are running America, felt that constructive steps could be safely taken.

I want to repeat almost the last words of the Senator from Wisconsin: Who owns America? That question ought to be echoed and reechoed in every home under the American flag, until it is answered by Columbia's sons.

I proceed to quote further from the Forbes article:

Deflation, they agree, has been carried quite far enough, much too far in many directions. Therefore they are willing to support active, helpful innovations, such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

* * * * * * *

Hence the encouragement derivable from the fact that the conclusion has been reached in the most powerful circles that the time has come when remedial measures can and should be instituted.

This is, in my opinion, news of supreme moment.

Oh, how blithely the masters of America told us that the moment had arrived when they were ready to put an end to the hunger of little children; to put an end to the ghastly tragedy that has crept across the doorstoop of millions of American homes. God of Israel, what a gall.

We stand face to face with this tragic picture and it is rendered infinitely more tragic because it is so stupid, because it did not have to be, because it has made a mockery of the death of every boy who died that the Republic might live, who died that decent standards of economic social justice might be established in this land. We have helped to make a shambles of the thing he gave his life to preserve. When the depression hit us and President Hoover called into conference some of the smart, wise men to tell us what was wrong and what should be done, certain of these wise men came down to Washington. Let me read a few things they said and what was suggested to meet the crisis caused by the shameless greed of men.

I quote Mr. Walter S. Gifford, president of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. He was one of the golden-haired boys who were going to tell the country what to do to be saved. Before the Chicago Association of Commerce on December 12, 1929, just as the panic was beginning, Mr. Gifford made this statement:

> A prosperity of the few at the expense of the many is always subject to the danger of attack by the many.

Well, I think comment on that sort of a statement is unnecessary. Seventy-six percent of the people have only a little over 5 percent of the wealth of the country, and are getting less and less of it all the time, and Mr. Gifford assures us that that sort of condition is likely to be criticized. Mr. Gifford is America's outstanding exponent of the obvious.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not want the Senator to remain in the error that I am afraid he is falling into as to that 76 percent owning 5 percent of the wealth. That does not take into account the debts the 76 percent owe. When their debts are computed as against what they own, their assets represent minus quantities. As a matter of fact, 76 percent of the people do not own 5 percent of the wealth, because that 76 percent cannot today pay their debts with such property as they own.

Mr. BONE. If they continue to accept the advice of the best minds that I am going to quote, they, of course, must expect to remain in poverty and their children never know the meaning of a decent chance in life. There is no such thing as equality of economic opportunity; there will be no opportunity for the sons and daughters of this great mass of Americans if this trend continues. I just happen to be one who feels that——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. BONE. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. The trend does not have to continue. There is no opportunity for their sons and daughters today; there has not been for 5 years; and today conditions are worse than ever. There is not a business in which a man can put his boy to enable him to make a living—not one. There is no opportunity in America today for a boy who comes out of college. He cannot make a living, and that is the fact. It has been that way for 5 years, and is worse today than it ever was. The only thing that can be done is to get him on the dole roll; that is all; and he cannot even get there as it has been ruled that since he never did have a job he cannot be called unemployed. Therefore, today the trend does not have to continue. The wreckage has been here for 5 years; it is getting worse every year; and not a thing we have done has helped conditions one iota, not one jot or tittle.

Mr. BONE. I thank the Senator for his contribution. I think one of the most somber pictures presented to this country is that thousands of boys and girls fresh out of our high schools and colleges cannot possibly fit themselves into the present economic machinery. There are no jobs for them; no free play for their talents; and if this condition shall continue, that great mass of young Americans who are now coming into their own will be completely disillusioned and utterly disheartened. From an ethical standpoint, this picture presents a most mournful aspect.

Mr. LONG. I just want to say to the Senator that some of the Phi Beta Kappa students in one of our universities in Louisiana consider themselves fortunate when they can get jobs as dishwashers.

Mr. BONE. I have not the slightest doubt that that is true. I know of one large department store in my section of the country which is now hiring young women who are graduates of our State university, to sell handkerchiefs and stockings. To that estate has fallen the highly intelligent and well-educated girlhood of America.

Now I will proceed and quote further from Mr. Walter S. Gifford. He says:

> The foundations of our present-day standards are sound and enduring.

Mr. President, at that very moment reverberations of the panic were to be heard everywhere, but, says Mr. Gifford, the head of the Telephone Trust, one of the wise men of the East, whence comes much of our financial wisdom:

> The foundations of our present-day standards are sound and enduring.

Of course, the people of this country had a right to believe one of these outstanding business leaders, because he was tied in with an unusually effective organization that was cleaning the pantries of the American people as rapidly as possible, and that ought to qualify the head of the outfit to give plentiful advice to Americans.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to his colleague?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. DILL. I want to call my colleague's attention to the fact that this is the same Mr. Gifford who appears before the Committee on Interstate Commerce and denounces as unthinkable, legislation that would give the proposed communications commission the power to declare void the inter-service contracts between the parent and its subsidiary and affiliated companies by which enormous rate bases are built up for telephone structures in various States, and thereby high rates for telephones are maintained to pay a return, if you please, upon the investment of the operating companies, when the parent company of which Mr. Gifford is the head owns the manufacturing company and the operating company and reaps profits from all of them.

Mr. BONE. I thank my colleague for that statement. Of course, it is obvious to every intelligent American that the men heading these monopolies are interested only in one thing, and that is dividends. They are not interested in the welfare of human beings. They are creating by their greed a Frankenstein monster that will crush them. Instead of one man rising in the Senate to challenge this brazen effrontery, a lot of men will sometime rise to denounce this truculent infamy that makes men tramps instead of free men.

For one, I am thoroughly tired of seeing Americans starve in the midst of plenty. I am tired of seeing decent men walk the streets and beg in vain for the opportunity to tramp in our industrial treadmills; beg in vain for the privilege of making a living for their families and going hungry while all this great machinery of production lies idle. It is not going to continue, and if the American people have the nerve of rabbits they will not let it go on.

Mr. LONG. I wonder whether my friend from Washington remembers that we made a great national campaign on this issue in 1933 and promised that we were not going to let this thing go on. That was the basis upon which we won the election. I do not know whether the Senator is aware of it, though probably he is, that our campaign was made on the word and promise that we were going to give a better distribution of wealth into the hands of the masses. That was even endorsed in the Madison Square Garden speech by Mr. Hoover, who himself said he wanted a better distribution of wealth in the hands of the masses. It was on that basis that we won the last election. That is the promise we made to people. I do not know whether that promise means anything or not. Usually such promises do not mean anything, but that is what we promised.

Mr. BONE. I do not think it is necessary to remind me that the American people are becoming thoroughly disillusioned by party promises. The Senator may take out of his desk the platform declaration of both parties and he will find that year in and year out they have disregarded those promises completely. Every party has done it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in the army a traitor is shot! [Laughter.]

Mr. BONE. It may be that I am an old-fashioned American, but my first loyalty is to the American home and not to the Telephone Trust or any other big combination. I think I speak what is in the hearts of the people of the United States when I say our first loyalty should be to the home, because without homes fortified by economic security there can be no security of any kind for this Government.

But let me quote further from Mr. Gifford, the head of the Telephone Trust, Mr. Hoover's man who was entrusted with the job of finding ways to aid the unemployed in the gloomy winter of 1931. I listened with great interest to Mr. Gifford's radio address about remedies, which he delivered on September 27, 1931, while we were in the midst of the beautiful panic brought on by the treasonable efforts of a few men trying to grab the earth. Said Mr. Gifford:

The public—

Get this! This is one of the great minds of America, one of the captains of industry, one of the great leaders who is trying to tell us what to do in our hour of peril. Imagine a man foolish enough to accept advice from anyone who uses this kind of language in dealing with this hideous disease of social poverty.

Mr. LONG. Did the Senator say "trying" to tell us what to do? He was telling us what we were doing.

Mr. BONE. The Senator does bring some light to bear on this matter, and for that reason I am happy to be interrupted.

I quote further from Mr. Gifford:

The public is to blame for much of the unemployment—

That is, the 76 percent of the poor devils who have only 5 percent of our wealth—

The public is to blame for much of the unemployment by reason of its failure to spend its money.

The crowd about whom the Senator from Louisiana was talking refused to spend their little 5 percent of the national wealth which they do not have, and therefore Mr. Gifford says the country is going to the dogs because of that fact—

If the public buys neither works nor goods, it is the public that is to blame.

That ought to clinch the argument. Nothing further need be said by way of comment.

Here is Mr. Gifford's program for social reconstruction in four points, as given over the radio on the date I indicated:

First, appointment of a State-wide committee of leading citizens by the Governor.

It would not do to appoint anybody except a leading citizen. These fellows are strong on leading citizens.

Mr. LONG. We had one of them this morning before the Finance Committee who claimed constitutional immunity for fear that he might incriminate himself.

Mr. BONE. A good many of our leading citizens have come dangerously near having to do that in some of the recent congressional investigations, so the suggestion does not present anything unusual.

Second, organization of an emergency committee in needy communities.

That proposal ought to make a mighty appeal to the hungry men and women of America, and that ought to clinch the argument against higher income taxes on multimillionaires.

Third, determination by this committee of the probable unemployment load and development of ways to meet it by providing employment or relief.

Marvelous! It is as opaque as some of the other arguments of these gentlemen.

Fourth, reports of State committees on plans of the local groups.

That is a final clincher. If we could only get a report on these activities, we would have the unemployment problem solved. He stated that 6,000,000 are said to be out of work and then adds that these reports ought to be made for the benefit of the bewildered populace who are not eating regularly. I quote further:

Employers have already to an extraordinary degree spread employment available in their own plants among the workers. Many have gone the limit. The employment situation is temporary. There is not and probably ought not to be permanent organization to cope with it.

I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will bear that in mind and consider that he is reproved for suggesting such an odious thing as a permanent unemployment problem.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I promise not to interrupt the Senator any more after this, but judging from the remarks he is quoting, Mr. Gifford finds that the people are starving themselves to death because they will not spend their money for something to eat.

Mr. BONE. That is probably as correct and clear as any of the gentleman's cryptic remarks.

Mr. LONG. In other words, this is a nation of suicides. [Laughter.]

Mr. BONE. Here is another best mind speaking his little piece. Mr. C. A. Stone is chairman of the board of Stone & Webster, one of those benevolent private power outfits. I am quoting from the Tacoma Daily Ledger of February 2, 1931, from an article by John F. Sinclair, a prominent financial writer. He said:

Mr. Stone told Theodore M. Knappen, associate editor of the Magazine of Wall Street, that the United States would have to go back to 1893 for a parallel to the present depression. While it may be some years before America again attains new peaks of industry and trade, Mr. Stone does not think it will see so much profitless prosperity as was experienced in the last few years. For the young man of today, he, Mr. Stone, sees in the present depression a vast opportunity that would never have been his otherwise.

If anybody can find anything funnier than that in current literature I would like to see it.

Mr. Stone, of Stone & Webster, one of the generous Power Trust outfits, sees a marvelous opportunity for young men in this frightful depression. That sort of an utterance does not require any comment. It answers itself.

Mr. LONG. That might be the back to nature movement.

Mr. BONE. The Senator from Louisiana has a marvelous vocabulary, but he cannot do justice to banalities, and I suggest that he do not try to wrestle with Mr. Stone's statement. [Laughter.]

Let the boys out of work, the college boys—and I have hundreds of friends among them—listen to this further statement from the Power Trust octopus as represented by this gentleman to whom I have referred:

The adversity of today—

Says Mr. Stone—

shuffles the cards anew and gives the young privates in the business ranks chances, according to their talents and character, that they never would have had in a dead level of continuous prosperity.

Is not that a gem? Marvelous! No wonder the people are learning to worship at the shrine of big business and to doff their hats to pompous humbuggery! Mr. Stone continued:

Emerson's law of compensation still holds true.

Of course, Mr. Stone's outfit during this panic and depression, while millions of Americans were going broke and hundreds were shooting themselves and millions were walking the streets with despair in their hearts, was grinding out dividends just as usual. The Power Trust saw nothing bad in the depression. It liked the card shuffling made possible by the miseries of the poor. It went blithely along, paying huge salaries to insiders and making just as much money as before.

We have another brilliant mind, another gentleman in the ranks of those described by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. He, like others, has been uttering apologies for the House of Have and snarling at the House of Have Not—Mr. Roger W. Babson.

In the American Legion Monthly for January 1931 Mr. Babson hands this to a bewildered country. It is his explanation for the panic and depression—not the fact that a few men own America; not the facts which have been so brilliantly and ably discussed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]; not the facts that have been portrayed to the Senate in the various discussions about the concentration of wealth. Here is what Mr. Babson says is wrong:

Spiritual and intellectual values are of great importance. It must be recognized that business depressions have their usefulness and fulfill an important economic function.

You see, if half the people of the country starve to death, that process constitutes a very important function, according to Roger Babson.

When men are making money they are likely to lose their faith, forget their God, and become more or less like pagans. During such prosperous times the churches become neglected, personal prayers are dropped, and man feels self-sufficient, without the need of Bible, church, or meditation.

Abysmal poverty is a beautiful thing, according to Mr. Babson, because it brings men in closer touch with the Deity.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I wonder if they do not need a song and a revival to cap that thing off.

Mr. BONE. No; not when a man is so filled with the divine afflatus as the gentleman from Boston. He needs no outside influences at all to encourage him in the work of social salvation.

I quote again:

When people are out of employment, and business men are making losses, and we are unable to control the situation, then we look to higher and better things. This brings us to a realization of spiritual and intellectual values. Men develop mentally and spiritually during depressions. Church attendance increases during periods of unemployment. Of course, a business readjustment has many other practical uses. It gives employers a chance to repair their plants and reorganize policies. It gives executives a chance to develop new plans; it gives opportunities to fund and refund indebtedness.

If any Senators here care to fund or refund their indebtedness during this period, Mr. Babson assures them of a wonderful opportunity—a sort of check-and-double-check, "Amos 'n' Andy" idea.

Then Mr. Babson goes on:

While it gives wage workers a chance to rest and get in good physical shape for the next pull.

A beautiful thing! [Laughter.]

We should all be optimists under all conditions. Fill your rain barrel when it storms, instead of talking about sunshine. Let us direct more of our efforts to filling our rain barrels.

If the poor would only fill their rain barrels, instead of talking about taxing this unearned increment away from the few who own most of it, we probably might be able to bring the country back to normalcy.

Then Mr. Babson, not content with this profound utterance, comes along later during the same year, in December 1931, and gives an interview to a young lady by the name of Eleanor Early, a staff writer on the Seattle Times, and this gem is the result of that interview:

Business has turned the corner, and the worst is over.

That was in December 1931.

But prosperity will not wholly return until there is a change in spirit.

I commend that to the prayerful attention of Senators who are wrestling with fiscal problems that tax their ingenuity.

Have faith. Work; love; pray; do good, and your hearts will be filled with gladness. We are now about 60 percent through the depression.

[Laughter.]

That ought to cheer all the Members of the Senate.

Bankers have begun to practice the Golden Rule.

[Laughter.]

I really think the Senate ought to relax its rules and let everyone laugh at that beautiful thought.

This is going to be a hard winter. But next spring things will be much better. Business has turned the corner, and the worst is over. If you have any money, spend it. Get in a better frame of mind. Prosperity will return as soon as 51 percent of the people get right spiritually.

I hope this is all very plain to Members of the Senate. I want them to understand just what is wrong with us. We are not right spiritually, and hence the country is "going to the dogs" financially.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. There is a spiritual lesson on that subject in the Scripture. The Bible tells us what to do spiritually to cure depressions. Do you know what they did with the rich in those days? They hung them. [Laughter.] That is what the spiritual lesson was.

Mr. BONE. We call them into conference now to tell us how to adjust the troubles brought on by their own greed.

Quoting again:

It is wrong to hoard money at this time. Buy a few extra gifts and put some more dollars in circulation. Give Mary a fur coat for Christmas, if you can. Give Junior that dinner coat he has been begging for.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator read that a little louder? Let us get that.

Mr. BONE (reading):

Give Mary a fur coat for Christmas, if you can. Give Junior that dinner coat he has been begging for.

Depressions provide leisure, and we must learn to use this leisure wisely. Now is the time—to teach your children the things of the spirit. I have compiled a few statistics to prove that there is good in all things—even a depression. Business began slipping 2 years ago. Since then America has developed spiritually and mentally. Church attendance has increased. More and better books are being read. America is become cultured. When men make money they lose faith.

During your enforced leisure, of course—

I do not know just what this 1 percent are doing or thinking as a substitute for faith, but evidently Mr. Babson has not considered that angle of the subject.

They forget religion and become pagans. Churches are neglected and prayers forgotten. It is only in hard times that we turn to religion. Hard times are blessed times when they bring us back to our religion.

Then, says Eleanor Early:

Mr. Babson is inclined to see the Divine hand in this depression.

He believes that a great deal of good has come out of it. He believes—

Get this gem:

He believes that the mania for good times is curbed.

He believes that the mania for good times is curbed! In other words, we are just suffering from a form of delusion when we want good times. Americans who want to make their loved ones safe, are suffering from a mania.

If you are low in spirit, cheer up. What if your salary has been cut? Forget the bad times that are behind you. Ring out the old. Get right spiritually.

Then comes another brilliant mind who tells us that nothing is wrong with this business of ours—not concentration of wealth; not depriving Americans of a chance for economic security in this great game of life. Something else is wrong. Here is a gentleman who does not suggest the rings around Saturn or sun spots, but he is very close to such a suggestion. This is Merle Thorpe, editor of Nation's Business, official organ of the United States Chamber of Commerce, speaking to the chamber of commerce in Tacoma, Wash., along in 1931. He says—and this is quoted from one of the Tacoma papers, a clipping of which I have in my hand—

The present unemployment and complaint of slow business is purely a psychological effect, brought about by fear. Suggestion brought about the present condition. Rumor did it.

Not sun spots, or anything like that; poor old rumor did it.

The suggestion caught. Everybody grew cautious.

That is, everybody except the Power Trust and the big monopolies.

They waited to see how things would turn out before starting anything. Some day we will wake up, and the sun will shine, and we will laugh and begin to take chances again.

That does not require any comment.

By way of conclusion, I desire to read a remedy for depressions and panics that was discovered by the Republican Party. I am now going to read into the RECORD an extract from a propaganda article appearing in the 1924 Republican campaign textbook, page 277, bearing the title "Labor and the Republican Party", under the subtitle "Unemployment Conference Gets Down to Fundamentals."

The dear old Republican Party, the G.O.P., the party of those Grand Old Promisers [laughter], took a hitch in its belt and got down to fundamentals. I want my Democratic brethren on this side fully to appreciate this statement, because it is a work of art. I do not know what happened to the Republican Party, for it had a long time after its spokesman uttered these words to apply this magic formula and eradicate, fully, finally, and completely, the problem of enforced unemployment—

To relieve the unemployed, and then to deal with the underlying causes of unemployment—

That is blunt enough—underlying causes, fundamental causes—and find a remedy which should have permanent value, President Harding called the Unemployment Conference in the autumn of 1921, and named as its chairman Secretary Hoover. The Department of Commerce and the Department of Labor cooperated in the work of the conference, which was the first national effort to deal with the basic problem of unemployment.

This is blunt talk. On this kind of an argument the Republican Party went back into power. It was either speaking the truth or coldly falsifying when its spokesmen told the people that a remedy had been found. The party, by some awful mischance, mislaid or lost this priceless formula.

Its success—

That is, the success of this conference—was phenomenal.

I do not know whether the gentleman across the aisle recalls this phenomenon. But the Republican campaign textbook assures us that the success of this conference was phenomenal.

Millions have benefited directly from its labors. The President's conference helped to bring about a prompt revival of industrial activity, upon which employment depends. The conference then turned its attention to the problem of the business cycle, through exhaustive studies under the direction of leaders in the business and labor world, and developed an industrial program looking to the prevention of recurrent booms and slumps in business. No solution was sought in Government interference; the remedies advocated were in complete accord with our national conception of individual and community initiative.

This was in 1924, and it refers to what occurred in 1921. All this individual and community activity and initiative had full sway for years and years and years. For 8 long years—some of the most dreary, somber years in American history—this stand-pat Republican theory held full sway; and here we have President Coolidge and his advisers telling us that the Republican Party found this magic formula, this open sesame to prosperity and to the solution of our fundamental problems growing out of the industrial unrest in this country. The Republican Party tells us that it developed this theory and that it would prevent recurrent booms and slumps in business.

No solution was sought in Government interference—

Says the Republican textbook. Oh, no! Let these private-initiative boys do it. Let the boys who run the Power Trust and the Telephone Trust and the Steel Trust and all the other combines that have looted America handle the remedy. They found it and employed it for 12 years under Republican administrations, and this remedy brought us to the edge of the abyss, where with just one slight push we would have gone over.

The conference showed—

I am reading again—

that through cooperative efforts of those in industry, seasonal unemployment in such vast activities as bituminous-coal mining and the construction industries can be greatly reduced, to the advantage of the public, the industries, and the workers. A plan was developed for the postponement of large-scale public and private construction work during periods of intense industrial activity until such time as there should come a slackening of this class of work in private industry, so that employment may be steady instead of intermittent.

Mr. President, I should like to know what became of this Republican plan which removed all our difficulties. For 8 years after that plan was discovered this country went blithely ahead, and wound up in the ditch. I wonder what that statement was worth when it was uttered, and what it has been worth over the dreary years since it was uttered.

Now we stand face to face with this threat to our homes which the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has discussed, which the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] has discussed, which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has referred to and discussed here, this bold fact that America is almost owned by a little handful of men. I sincerely believe that unless we boldly grapple with that difficulty, there can be no solution of this problem which Congress can formulate that will be worth the paper it is written on.

Unless we get at this concentration of wealth, unless we tap these great reservoirs of wealth which represent the stored-up labor power of millions of underpaid and now unemployed Americans, we will never get out of the ditch. We ought to pay our national debt out of those great reservoirs of wealth. We ought to pay our bills as we go along out of this concentrated wealth.

If we shall ever be engaged in another war and the existence of the Government is threatened, who will be called upon to defend the Republic? The sons of the masses of the people will do it; the sons of the 76 percent of the people, who represent the ownership of somewhere around 5 or 6 percent of the wealth of this country, will put on the uniform and go out and die on battlefields. And when they preserve the fabric of civilization which we now have, what will they have preserved? They will have preserved the very thing which brought to all of them the humiliation and despair that comes to honorable men who through no fault of their own are compelled to face poverty in its most degrading form.

Mr. President, we might as well be practical about this matter. We perhaps can fool ourselves, and perhaps the American people may remain fooled about this thing for a long time to come; but you cannot undo the impoverishing effects of this machine which grinds, and grinds, and grinds. Some day it will do its last grinding, because the infinite patience of the American people will give way before it, and, like another blind and desperate Samson, this great dispossessed group will put its brawny arms around the pillars of the temple and pull the temple down about our ears. I do not want to live to see that thing in America.

Mr. President, there is no prosperity that is worth the snap of a finger, there can be and is no prosperity, unless it is shared by all of the people of this country; shared by the people whose flesh and blood must pay the price of the preservation of the Republic. If these 1-percent chaps had to do all the fighting, I could find much consolation in that fact. But we clamp down on the boy of the poorest citizen, whose home is impoverished and made wretched by the thing I have been discussing, and his boy must go out and defend this country. Certainly such a patriotic citizen has every right to demand economic justice at the hands of the rulers of this Republic. I try in my somewhat inept way to speak for those who will be called upon to defend this country and its wealth. We owe to them the highest duty. I consider it a rare privilege to rise in my place and voice the hopes and aspirations of the inarticulate poor who have so few to speak for them—to demand for them the fullest measure of economic security.

In the interest of the American home, the La Follette amendment should be adopted and concentrated wealth be made to carry a share of the burden proportioned to its ownership of our wealth.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I favor the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and desire to have the RECORD disclose briefly why I do favor it.

The question of the concentration of wealth is one about which we are all thinking, one of the great problems with which I suppose the near future will have to deal. I do not myself desire to use the taxing power for the redistribution of wealth. I doubt whether it would be effective. In other words, it is a problem which requires a different program from that which could be built upon the taxing power of the Government. I support the amendment, not entertaining the view that it will be effective in that direction but because I feel that the measure is necessary in order to deal with the situation which now confronts us.

Leaving aside entirely the question of redistribution of wealth, passing by the extent to which the concentration has now gone forward, we are met with the proposition of the necessity of raising a vast amount of money through means of taxation. There is one rule which seems to be a fundamental one. That is, that taxes should be paid in accordance with the ability to pay. That is not being done in these days. Even if this amendment should be agreed to, we would still not measure up to the full import of that rule, but it would be a step in the right direction, and it is founded upon a perfectly sound principle.

Mr. President, there are at this time in this country, it is estimated, from eleven to twelve million people unemployed. After the heroic and extraordinary effort of this administration to bring unemployment to an end, at least to reduce it, there is still confronting us the proposition of caring for some eleven or twelve million people in a sound and sane way.

If we continue to increase indebtedness, to issue bonds, to increase the interest burden upon the people, instead of meeting to the fullest extent possible the obligations of the Government through taxation, we shall come very shortly to face the question of issuing irredeemable paper money to take care of the situation. Those who have great incomes fear inflation and yet by opposing amendments like the one we are considering they speed the hour of irredeemable paper money.

A person who has an income of a million dollars at this time ought to be entirely willing to contribute the amount which is provided for in this amendment in order to enable his Government and its people to meet the situation which now confronts us. It is in no sense as high a tax or as burdensome a tax as that which other countries are applying under conditions no more serious than those which confront this country.

It is a sound rule to meet these obligations, insofar as we can, through taxation, rather than through the issuance of bonds, incurring indebtedness and greater interest charges. We have by no means reached the limit of our taxing power in this country as to these great incomes, assuming conditions call for a greater demand on such incomes.

Mr. President, when we come to compare this with other taxes, we must conclude that this would not be a heavy tax. There are at least a half a dozen processing taxes now in operation which bear more heavily and are more exacting upon those who must bear them and meet them than this tax would be upon those who would have to meet it if this amendment were adopted. The class of people who are largely meeting these processing taxes are not able to meet them and still enjoy the comforts of home.

There is another thing to bear in mind. This would reach that class of people who are getting the large share of the benefits of the present recovery program under present conditions. I observed in the press a few days ago that the steel industry was preparing to raise wages 10 percent, a most laudible thing to do. Mr. Schwab, leaving for a trip in Europe, said:

> We steel people are doing everything we can to cooperate with the President of the United States. We have just raised wages, when we are not making money, which in itself indicates that we are doing everything we consistently can.

One would infer from that statement that the steel industry was preparing to raise wages to the extent of 10 percent and to pay those wages out of the income the steel industry is now enjoying. But what happened? Upon the next day, or the day after that, the steel industry, through its board of directors under the code, raised the price of the products of the steel industry so as to more than take care of the amount which would be paid out to labor. They are in a position, in other words, to collect from the public the entire amount which they would pay by reason of this increase in wages and still have a considerable amount in excess of the wage paid.

Mr. President, when we are taxing income derived in this manner we are simply equalizing, in a sense, the burden which rests upon the people at this time by reason of this economic crisis, and I do not look upon it in any sense as an effort to redistribute wealth, in any sense as a punishment of wealth, in any sense as an attack upon wealth. It is simply calling upon wealth to do that which every citizen throughout the country must be prepared to do in this emergency at this time in proportion to his ability. The bill as now reported raises only $330,000,000, in my judgment a wholly inadequate sum when we contemplate the expenditures which are necessarily before us.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken. I am sure he is in error. It is $330,000,000 more than is now raised by law. He stated that the proposed bill would only raise $330,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. It raises $330,000,000 more than we are now raising by law.

Mr. BORAH. I say that the bill raises $330,000,000. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. HARRISON. No, no; the bill raises tremendously more than that. It raises $330,000,000 more than is now raised by law.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand that precisely; that it raises that amount in excess of what is already provided for by law.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps I made my statement inadequately.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, how much of that is attributable to the income-tax schedule?

Mr. BORAH. The amount, as I understand, which we raised through the income tax is smaller than it was in 1932.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes. The increase over the present income, after the amendment which was adopted, will be about $37,000,000 more if we eliminate the earned-income feature. With the earned-income feature it is about $27,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. And the amount which we would raise under the La Follette amendment would be in excess of that about $183,000,000.

Mr. LONG. According to what I understand it would only be around $27,000,000 in excess of the present income-tax schedule. Is my understanding correct in regard to that?

Mr. HARRISON. That is right.

Mr. LONG. That is not very much.

Mr. HARRISON. That is under the normal and surtax increases in the bill.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, as I understood from what the Senator from Wisconsin just said, would raise about $187,000,000 or $185,000,000. I ask the able Chairman of the Finance Committee in all seriousness if $187,000,000 is a burdensome amount of money to place upon those who are enjoying the incomes which are covered by this amendment? The $187,000,000 which would be collected under this amendment would come from those who are enjoying in the midst of the depression a most extraordinary income.

It seems to me, Mr. President, in the mere matter of providing means by which to carry on the Government, laying aside all the other problems which have been thrown into the discussion, that it is a simple act of prudence to make provision as provided for in the La Follette amendment.

QUO VADIS?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have a few statistics which I desire to read to the Senate. The Finance Committee, I am sure, has labored very earnestly with this bill. With due consideration to many of my good friends who are on the committee, I am afraid the air of conservatism in the income-tax schedule is the part that is weighing down a good deed.

Last year we had an income from all taxes in the United States of $2,079,000,000. In other words, putting it in round figures, we had an actual income for 1933 from taxes of all sorts of $2,079,000,000. Quo vadis?

It is estimated, Mr. President, according to the estimates that have been furnished, that in 1934 we will have an income of $3,259,000,000. In other words, it is estimated that in 1934 our income will go up one and one quarter billion dollars. But in order to get the income of $2,000,000,000 in 1933 the Government had to increase its deficit by over $4,000,000,000. There was an expenditure of $4,681,000,000 made by the Government in order to get $2,000,000,000 of income.

The United States Government went into the hole $4,681,000,000 in order to get $2,000,000,000 of income, and in order that the Government may get the estimated three and one quarter million dollars of income for this year—and I do not know whether we will get it or not—it is estimated that the United States Government will spend $10,569,000,000.

It does not take any skilled mathematician to know that a country that is getting $2,000,000,000 of income and is spending $4,000,000,000 in order to get that $2,000,000,000, and a country that is going to spend $10,000,000,000 in order to bet back three and one quarter billion dollars, is going into the hole financially at the rate of six and three-quarters billion dollars a year. There is no way of answering that kind of proposition.

We are not on anything like a self-sustaining basis. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said that if today we were to discontinue the P.W.A. and the emergency relief rolls we would be right back at the very place from which we started in the very worst part of the depression, and the chances are we would be worse off were we to discontinue these numerous expenditures.

Let me do just a little more figuring. I may not be exactly accurate to the cent or to the dollar, but I will be approximately accurate in my statement, in round figures. Let us figure on a national debt of $35,000,000,000; let us say that we will retire that national debt in 50 years; let us say that we will try to spread this national debt of $35,000,000,000 out over 50 years; then the annual retirement, Mr. President, would be something like $700,000,000 a year, and if we borrowed the money at 3½ percent or 4 percent we would have another billion dollars on top of that, and the cost alone for one of the years, to start this matter off, would be approximately $1,500,000,000 or $1,600,000,000, as against a $2,000,000,000 income, and in order to get the $2,000,000,000 income we had to spend $4,000,000,000. And in order to get the three and one quarter million dollar income we must spend $10,000,000.

If we stopped dead still, if we stopped right where we now are and did not spend another 5-cent piece, if we cut the whole thing loose and said we would stop here with $33,000,000,000 or $34,000,000,000, how could we pull out of this thing today on the present set-up? It is not possible to do it, and instead of spending $10,000,000,000 this year and stopping with $10,000,000,000 next year, the spending would increase. Remember what I said on the floor of the Senate in the year 1932: "You will spend more money in 1932 than you did in 1931, and you will have to spend yet more in 1933." Nineteen hundred and thirty-three came along, and we had to spend more in 1933 than we did in 1932. My prophecy again was fulfilled when I said: "We will spend more in 1934 than we spent in 1933."

I say that if this fiscal condition continues, every prophecy that has been made on the floor of the Senate since I came here will be fulfilled. The prediction that we will have to spend more money in 1935 than we did in 1934 now stands proved.

How shall we stop this snowball from coming down hill? Where are we going to put the brakes on it in order to preserve the national credit of the United States? Where are the brakes ever going to be put on? Year after year, when we had to spend more money than our national income in order to deal successfully with the problems caused by the depression, year after year in order to get the smokestacks going full blast, to fill the stomachs of the people, and to put some clothing on the backs of women and children, we continually increased the amount we spent over our total resources, and year after year there has been a widening gap between income and expenditure.

The income 1 year was only $1,000,000,000 less than the outgo, then it is $2,000,000,000, and now it has widened to where there is a difference between what we are spending and what we are receiving of six and three-quarters billion dollars for the year 1934. How are we going to save the national credit on such a basis as that? It cannot be done. It is absolutely a physical impossibility to do so.

The time is now coming, Mr. President, when we must find out where we are going to get the money for the Government. How are we going to get any money anyway, Mr. President? It is a deplorable thing that we should sit here and talk about liberalizing the expenditures. I have voted for every one of them. I have voted for every expenditure that has been made. I have voted for the E.R.A., for the P.W.A.—I do not spell them all out, but if it were left to me, I should take those letters and put them back in the first reader, where they belonged in the first place—but I voted for every one of them. And practically all the Members of Congress, in line with what was the policy being tried out as an experiment to bring the country back, has been "hell bent for election" on the proposition of continuing the expenditures ad libitum.

Today we stand on the calendar for 1934. What Senator here can tell me—I ask anybody to tell me—anything that we are going to do in this Congress if we pass this bill and adjourn now? I ask anybody to tell me anything that is going to make conditions in 1935 any better than they are in 1934. If you have to give a man a hypodermic needle every Saturday night and every Monday morning in order to keep him going through the week and to guide him to spiritual prosperity on Sunday; if you have to give him every day a little dole in order that he may have something in his stomach and continue giving it week after week and month after month until time grows into years, we will have to continue this process of the Government pouring out through the sluice-barrel money to the extent of four times the revenue resources of the United States. There is not a single rift in the sky to point how the cataclysm can be lessened next year. How are you going to keep the ship of state going in 1935 unless you do just what you did in 1933 and 1934, which was to limber money out from the Government Treasury and spend many more times than it was getting from the entire revenue-producing resources of the Government? Where is the answer to it—is there an answer to it—when, if we should stop today, we have not got enough income coming in from the entire resources of the United States Government to retire the bonds in 20 years? We would not be able to pay off the bonds in 20 years' time with the entire resources of the United States Treasury all put together on the basis of 1933 if we did not spend a dime for the Army, for the Navy, for Congress, or for anything else.

We have not enough revenue, according to the figures that have been compiled here for the benefit of the Senate Finance Committee, coming in from all sources, on the basis of 1933, to do it; and we have only $300,000 more than it would take to pay them during a 50-year period. If we were to make them 20-year bonds—and, God knows, a 20-year bond is long enough, because 20 years in Government circles is looked upon as being almost a generation—in 20 years' time we could not retire these bonds at the interest rate we are now paying upon the bonds if we devoted every cent of the resources of the United States Government to that purpose right now.

I pause for any Senator to challenge those statements; I pause for any Senator on the floor to challenge the calculation that we cannot retire any 20-year bonds out of the revenue of the Government if it were no more than it was in 1933; and I take the figures for 1933 as at least a favorable calculation, because in 1933, in order to take in $2,000,000,000 we had to put out four and a quarter billion dollars. Where is the money coming from?

What have we done? Congress may sit here and twiddle its thumbs, as it has done ever since I have been here. I say that advisedly; I say that Congress has sat here, to my certain knowledge ever since I have been here, and fiddled while Rome has burned—the Democratic Party and the Republican Party.

I hear the Democratic leaders get up and decry Hoover and make a whole lot of "hurrally" as to how terrible Hoover was, and yet the Democratic leaders on this side of the Chamber supported Hoover in everything he tried to do. When we had enough votes on the other side of the Chamber of the progressive Republicans to have undone this damnable cataclysm, the Democratic leaders were following in the tracks of Hoover and doing what Hoover said to do. They did later get up and blame Hoover, but they were the greatest disciples Hoover ever had; there was not anybody on the other side of the Chamber who could hold a candle to them. They were doing everything they could and you could not break them loose. I merely listened to them when I heard those songs they sang of Herbert Hoover and Hooverism, when I know from the record that every dadgummed one of them followed Hoover's tracks and were the most useful disciples he had. You cannot expect anything from them when they get out that old claptrap and sing the songs and dance the dances of politics. Their record shows that they sat here and helped send this country to hell with Herbert Hoover in the saddle. Poor old Hoover was less to blame than they were.

Now we come along here and we are going to change leaders. I had something to do with changing the leaders. The leaders on this side of the Chamber did not have anything to do with it, Mr. President, but I did. [Laughter in the galleries.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will request the occupants of the galleries to maintain order.

Mr. LONG. I had something to do with changing these leaders, to try to get some liberality in the Democratic Party, to give us a chance to break loose. I had something to do with it in a material way, because I went out and helped raise the sinews of war, the nickels and dimes and dollars that we had to have to finance a little campaign to nominate a man to start with; and I helped get the votes that went into the convention. I helped get the votes right in the States that were dominated by big, masterful men of finance right next to Louisiana [laughter], to take them into the Chicago convention and vote them for the nomination of Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

Why were we making all this fight? Because Mr. Roosevelt came out with a statement over his signature in which he said that he was in favor of the distribution of wealth among the people of this country so that the starving could be fed in the land of plenty, and because he had advocated taking it from the top and supporting the Government and distributing it to those at the bottom.

We have had an election—an election on beautiful principles and on beautiful platforms. What do platforms mean? I said to my friend the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], when he was speaking, that in the army they shoot a traitor. When are we going to decide that a party can be a traitor? When are we going to decide that a party is held to the same obligation after signing up for a year's service as we hold a private or officer of the United States Army to?

We went out all over this country. I was one of those going. I did not go without proper authority; I did not go without reckoning with my host to begin with. We went out over this country, Mr. President, for a principle that was stated by the President of the United States. I will read what he said. I have it here. It is nothing that is going to be disputed. I will read you one thing he said. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, at Chestertown, Md., on October 21, 1931, said:

> As I recall the words of a professor in my school, the wider a distribution of wealth there is in the proper way the more we can make it possible for the men and women of the land to have the necessities of life in such shape that they will not have to lie awake at night worrying where the food tomorrow will come from. Then, and only then, will we have the security necessary for the country.

Those are the words of the present President of the United States, uttered from his lips in the year of our Lord 1931, on the 21st day of the month of October, in which he said that, through a wider distribution of wealth in this country only would there be such a thing as security for the country; then, and only then, said he, would there be such a thing as national security.

I have other statements, Mr. President, that were uttered in that campaign. I do not need to quote them because I have in days passed put them into the RECORD. Were we going along with something that was new to the Democratic Party? Not on your life; it was not supposed to be new until we got in authority; not supposed to be new until we had a little election talking. We get up here and make a whole "hurrally", saying that Hoover did this and did that and did the other; and yet we have come here and adopted everything that was done under him. We were not operating any Republican form of government—I mean a Republican Party form of government—in 1932 and 1933; we were operating a coalition Government of the leaders of the Democrats and the leaders of the Republican Party. Anybody here who does not know it has not sense enough to sit in the United States Senate. We were operating a coalition Government in 1932 and in 1933; a Government the policies of which had been dictated, had been decided upon in the joint councils of the leaders of the Democrats and the Republicans in the Congress of the United States, in both the Senate and the other House.

If we had not wanted what the Republicans were willing to accept in 1931 and in 1932 and in 1933, there is not a man here who does not know we had votes enough on this side of the Chamber, with our control of the other House of Congress, to have done anything we wanted to do long before they ever voted Herbert Hoover out of office. Long before Herbert Hoover was ever voted out of the Presidency of the United States it was within the power of the Democrats of the United States Senate and the Democrats in the other House of Congress to have passed whatever kind of tax or restoration program they wanted to pass.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] was advocating it. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] was advocating it. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] and both Senators from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette and Mr. Blaine] at that time were advocating it. The two Senators from North Dakota [Mr. Nye and Mr. Frazier] were advocating it. The senior Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] was advocating it. Others whom I could mention were advocating it, all of them sitting on the other side of the Chamber, but we preferred to test out the old reactionary, broken-down system by which the masses were raided for the support of the Government, and the aggrandized fortune holders of the country were not to be molested in what they owned.

I am not willing to have it go out to the country that we have had a revolution when we have not. The only way on the living God's earth that I am willing to go out and say we have changed things is to do what we promised the people to do. We fought for a change of leadership, not from one party to another party but for a liberalization of the party before we went into the campaign. Many of us who risked everything we had on the top side of the earth, many of us who bearded the lion in his den, many of us who took our political lives in our hands—and I was one of them—and went out practically unskilled and untrained in the lines of party manipulations and party conventions, and thought we brought back the bacon and made it possible by winning one more victory for the people to vote themselves into these reforms, grow sick at heart when we stand here faced with such statistics as come to us indicating that in order to get an income of $2,000,000,000 we have to put out $4,000,000,000, and that in order to get $3,500,000,000 we have to put out $10,000,000,000.

Then we realize that the one curse is still with us, the one main curse that we have to stand in order that the people might become enlightened from one end of the country to the other. That one curse remains here without a voice lifted, without a single voice lifted on this side of the Chamber undertaking to decentralize wealth and carry out the pledge of the party. Not a voice is lifted, not a feather has been taken from the backs of the poor and put onto the rich. Not a single thin dime of concentrated, bloated, pompous wealth, massed in the hands of a few people, has been raked down to relieve the masses and to start the mills going for the distribution of wealth, as was promised by the party which the people voted into power.

We had proclaimed ourselves many years before. We went before the American people with a handbook, and in that handbook we made certain statements. We had to go before the American people with a pronouncement of the Industrial Relations Commission appointed by Woodrow Wilson in 1916, in which we had decried a condition which we said the war had kept us from correcting. We set out in the pronouncement that had been made by a Democratic committee that if it had not been for the war which involved this country as it had involved all of Europe and much of Asia, we would have done according to what this report recommended. Here is the report of the United States Commission on Industrial Relations, appointed by Woodrow Wilson, as contained in Senate Document No. 415, Sixty-fourth Congress. From that report I extract the following:

> The sources from which industrial unrest springs are, when stated in full detail, almost numberless, but upon careful analysis of their real character they will be found to group themselves almost without exception under four main sources which include all the others. These four are—

This was said in the report put out by the Democratic Party on the means of correction of conditions existing at that time—

> 1. Unjust distribution of wealth and income.

That will be found on page 265 of the report of the Woodrow Wilson Industrial Relations Commission.

> The final control of American industry rests, therefore, in the hands of a small number of wealthy and powerful financiers.
> The concentration of ownership and control is greatest in the basic industries upon which the welfare of the country must finally rest.
> With few exceptions each of the great basic industries is dominated by a single large corporation, and where this is not true the control of the industry through stock ownership in supposedly independent corporations and through credit is almost, if not quite, as potent.
> In such corporations, in spite of the large number of stockholders, the control through actual stock ownership rests with a very small number of persons. For example, in the United States Steel Corporation, which had in 1911 approximately 100,000 shareholders, 1.5 percent of the stockholders held 57 percent of the stock, while the final control rested with a single private banking house.

Men talk about the enormous number of shareholders in United States Steel as though it were a greatly diffused property, but, said the Industrial Relations Commission in 1916—

> It had in 1911 approximately 100,000 shareholders; 1.5 percent of the stockholders held 57 percent of the stock, while the final control rested with a single private banking house.

The United States Government report was talking about something that had to be corrected, the steel industry and the ownership of the United States Steel Corporation which was supposed to be diffused among 100,000 stockholders, whereas and in truth 57 percent of it was owned by 1.5 percent of the stockholders and the entire control was vested in one single banking house. That was in 1916, and we were going to correct that condition.

Now, we come back with a tax bill. I waited in the special session of Congress thinking that the Democratic Party was going to go through with something to carry out the pledges of the party. They did not go through with it. They did not see fit to do it. We said there were so many things that had to be dealt with speedily that we did not have time to carry out what we told the people we would do. Why not do it now?

Only a few days ago the President of the United States was making a speech at the N.R.A. conference, and in that speech he said that we could not allow this country to go back to the old system that allowed the wealth to become concentrated into the hands of the few. Those are the words of the President of the United States here the other day, that we could not allow this country to get back into the hands of the old system that allowed the wealth of the country to be concentrated in the hands of the few. Does anybody mean to say we have done anything here to decentralize wealth? Does anyone here mean to say we have done one thing that had not been done under Hoover to decentralize wealth? If so, I want someone to rise and tell me what it is. I pause to enable any Senator in this Chamber to tell me one thing that has been done since the 4th day of March 1933, that has in the remotest degree tended to decentralize the wealth of the country from the hands of the few rich into the hands of the masses. Just tell me one thing that has been done.

On the contrary, we have statistics to show that more little men have gone out of business steadily day after day, just like they had gone out of business before the 4th day of March 1933. The code has not stopped them, the N.R.A. has not stopped them, the P.W.A. has not stopped them, the C.W.A. has not stopped them, the E.R.A. has not stopped them. Day by day, week by week, month by month the little business men continue to vanish from the face of the earth, and what little pride in industry they had is being taken over and absorbed by the big industries.

When are we going to begin to do something? When are we going to start doing something to correct this condition? Are we going to sit here now saying that the Government is going to operate through the year 1934 by going further into the abyss of financial insolvency than it did in 1933? Are we going to say we ran about $2,000,000,000 behind our resources in 1933 and that we are going to run $6,750,000,000 behind our resources in 1934, but that we are not going to have anything like that in 1935?

I have been hearing that claptrap ever since I have been in the Senate, and I read it before I came to the Senate, that we were not going to permit the country to sink any farther into this quagmire; that some day we would have to call a halt.

When we declared the moratorium we said, "We are going to excuse the European countries from making this one payment, but after that we are going to collect it all"; and the next thing we knew, after we had excused Europe from paying us one time, we had practically excused them from paying us anything at all; so our action wiped out that debt.

Then we came along with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and we said, "We are going to lend some money to the railroads and the banks in 1932, but we are not going to lend them any after 1933"; and, lo and behold, we wound up with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation lending more money in 1933 than in 1932, and planning to lend more money in 1934 than it loaned in 1932 and 1933 both put together. That is probably what will be the estimate that will come to us for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Then we started an E.R.A.—an Emergency Relief Administration—which was nothing more than a dole. We were doling out to the people a little handful here and there to feed them. We said that we had to feed them through the winter of 1932. We said, "We will feed them through 1932, but when 1933 comes along we will have corrected this abominable and unjustifiable condition, and we will not have to feed people with a spoon any longer." Then we came along in 1933 and the winter of 1933–34, and we conducted a dole the like of which has never been seen since this has been a civilized country, which outdid 1932 four times over; and now we are going along in 1934, and have we corrected the condition which we said we would not have in 1933, but which we had worse than ever? Have we corrected it? No! We are going into it, full steam ahead, four times as strongly as the amount of deficit and expenditure we had in 1933. Are we going to end it in 1935? If so, how?

Tell me, someone, one single light, one single sign, one single thing that is ahead of us or behind us that indicates the remotest possibility of anything being done to put this country on its feet.

Ten million men are unemployed now. Ten million men are unemployed now that we know are unemployed. That does not take into account the little man who is holding on between the deep blue sea and some other place, hoping that eventually something is going to happen, and he is worse than if he were unemployed. That does not take into account the little business man whose expenses are greater than his income. That does not take into account the little man who is spending everything he had accumulated.

Mr. President, with 10,000,000 people unemployed today, with every form and kind and character of Government dole, relief, codes, and other operations trying to check the constant depletion of the Federal Treasury, the growing curse of the combinations of business, the steady vanishing of the little man from industry and enterprise, nothing points ahead today except the national deficit that grows and grows, while we take the best men we have in this country and place them on the lowest kind of relief.

I was handed a figure here a minute ago. I understand that there are 3,000 lawyers on the dole in America—3,000 lawyers; men holding college degrees, men who have graduated from college, men who became equipped in their profession, and I know some of them; 3,000 lawyers on the dole!

I was up at my old home town in Shreveport, La., the place to which I moved when I left that of my birth. There was a splendid little college up there known as St. Mary's, run by the Methodist Church—as fine a little college, and as fine young men came out of it from up in that old hill country as are to be found on earth. There I found the young men that I had seen there, some of them in the athletic games, and some of them I had seen because I lived within two or three blocks of St. Mary's College when I resided there.

Many of those young men had come out of there bearing Greek letters for the special honors they had won in their studies, seeking any kind of employment they could find. Some of them were waiting on tables in restaurants, and some of them were trying to get jobs even in the kitchens of the restaurants around the town—any kind of a job on the living face of the earth. Many of them have been to me from the State university, from Tulane University, from Loyola University in our State, and from others, asking for any kind of work. One young man there graduated from the college after having won every kind of honor that could be won in college, and when the time came that he had to leave college—we had got him some kind of a little job by means of which he worked his way through college—he came back and said, "Do not make me leave college here. I have been able to make a living in this college. I only drew about $25 or $30 a month to work my way through the university here; but if I have to go out, with all the letters and honors I have, there is not a place on God's earth where I can go and make $30 a month." Many of us were friends of his, and he has been there for 2 years since that time, taking all the special courses that we could dig up for him, one after the other, until he got a master's degree, and yet he has not been able to find a job in which he can get $30 a month.

Talk about reviving the country under conditions of that kind!—and the conditions are steadily growing worse and steadily growing worse, and you blink your eyes at the misery and distress and destitution that are rampant. You are unwilling to depart from the false gods that led you into this kind of an abyss of despair. You are unwilling to do what the Scriptures said it was necessary to do in such a situation. You are unwilling to pay any attention to the promises of the Democratic Party. You are unwilling to pay any attention to the resolutions that have been adopted, and the commission reports that have been made; and we come back here with a Congress that is supposed to be in its closing days, and there is not a single thing in a single bill that is proposed to decentralize the wealth of the country. Not a thing on God's earth is here that promises to balance the financial condition of the country; not a thing that is going to save the Treasury. On the contrary, Mr. President, instead of talking about how we are going to save the Treasury, instead of talking about how we are going to end unemployment, we hand out to the American people this nice little analysis, printed by the Senate Finance Committee, saying that if we pass this bill just as it is we are going to get in $3,259,000,000, and we are going to spend $10,509,000,000 to get it; and if we are to judge the future by the past, it simply means that unless we increase what we had to put out from 1933 to 1934 by two and a half times, we may have to come here and do worse in 1935 than we did in 1934.

LA FOLLETTE'S PROGRESSIVE LEADERSHIP

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] does not go a fourth far enough. It does not start to go far enough, but it is in the right direction. It does do some good. It is down the alley somewhere. Unfortunately, Mr. President, we have had to look over there into the State of Wisconsin, and over there into the neighborhood of the other States around there, for the progressive kind of leadership and advocacy that may be the bulwark that will save this country.

I have tried to do what little I could to see that the Democratic Party saved the country. We have promised the people to turn to the bright lights of hope that the elder Robert M. La Follette held out here in the United States Senate many, many years ago. The only thing we can follow now is down the alley of the La Follettes, and yet there is talk of trying to have the Democratic Party use its influence to get rid of that La Follette influence in the United States Senate.

We have a nice thing cooked up for the American people here. After all these promises have been made by the Democratic Party, there is talk to the effect that we are going to use the massive machinery of the Democratic Party to get rid of the wing of progressivism on which we managed to ride ourselves into the confidence of the American people. We will adjourn this session of Congress and go back to killing rats. We will not only fail to do what we promised the American people we were going to do if we were voted into power, but we will take the power and trust that have been reposed in us, and we will use our accumulated strength and the growing deficit that is in the United States Treasury to roll the powerful ball over and crush the spirit of progressivism that arose out there in the Middle West, and notably under the La Follettes, that gave us a chance to redeem this country. They kept the torch burning, and kept the light ahead when there were some of us who saw no hope to bring this country back on lines of progressivism; and it is only proper now that we should support the amendment offered here by the Senator from Wisconsin, not because it does anything like half what is needed to bring about a balanced country, but because it is in the right direction, and is a few steps down the road to financial solvency, and to spreading wealth more equally among the masses of the people.

Have we improved? Here are a lot of statistics read saying that we have improved; that we have steadily begun to improve; that things are on the upward turn; that at least we have begun to show a trend upward.

I want to know how. Does somebody mean to tell me that we have begun to show a trend upward when in 1933 we spent two dollars where we took in one? Does somebody mean to tell me, in this year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirty-four, that we have struck a trend upward when we are estimating that we are going to spend $10,000,000,000 in order to get in three billion and a quarter? Does somebody mean to tell me that we have signs of prosperity, confidence, resuscitation, restoration, or any other kind of relief or advancing program when we are going to spend more than three times the amount of our total income? Does anybody mean to tell me that we are on the lines of national solvency when we have a deficit here of $35,000,000,000 in bonds, past and present, that it would take the entire revenue of the United States Government to pay, without supporting the Army, the Navy, the Congress, the courts, or anything else, if we retired it in 20 years' time? Does somebody mean to tell me that that is a trend to anything that is stable, or is that a mere hypodermic injection that invigorates one for a moment, and leaves him all the weaker when its effects have had time to wear off?

You can spur a horse and make him go awhile. You can spur him one time and the horse will jump, and you can spur him a few more times and the horse will jump, and then you can spur the horse and make him run, and then you can spur the horse and make him trot, and then you can spur him and he will only walk; but after you have gone so long the spur applied to the horse will not do any good, because there is nothing to keep him going.

We have shot this hypodermic needle into the American people and exhausted $4,000,000,000 in one year, and we have shot the hypodermic needle into them and exhausted $3,000,000,000 the year before that, and now we are going to apply the needle and exhaust $10,000,000,000 more; and when we have finally spurred the old horse until we have drawn the last drop of blood from the credit structure of this Nation to the point where our bonds cannot be supported by the total revenues of the United States Government, what is going to keep the horse going? After we have hopelessly overloaded the ship of state, what is going to keep it afloat?

Nobody has any remedy. Talk about the United States Government coming out of this depression. Nobody proposes anything. On the contrary, it is proposed that we have another get together, adjourn, and go home and wait for something worse to happen. That is all the Congress is doing. It is simply the fall season, and we know winter is coming. Adjourn and go home and wait for something worse to happen! Nobody is waiting for anything to happen that is going to be any better. That is not in the cards.

When did things begin to grow better? I want to prove by statistics, in a line or two, that every man in the Senate who wants to see the facts may know that things are growing worse every day and every year.

In 1916—and I have read these statistics before—it was 2 percent of the people who owned three fifths of the wealth. In 1916 there was a middle class, 33 percent of the people, who owned 35 percent of the wealth. In that year 65 percent of the people owned 5 percent of the wealth. That was 1916.

When was the next time we heard about anything of the kind? When was the next time we got a report from the United States Government showing what the trend was? In 1930 the Federal Trade Commission said:

> The foregoing table shows that 1 percent of the estimated number of decedents owned about 59 percent of the estimated wealth, and that more than 90 percent was owned by about 13 percent of this number.

Mr. President, that was in 1930. Thirteen percent of the 1 percent owned 90 percent of the 59 percent. Figure that out. It simply means that a mere handful of people owned the mass of the American property, considerably more than half of it.

What do we hear next? We have some statistics for the year 1934 from the grand old Democratic State of Ohio. We have some statistics, I am glad to say, from a State over which we have had the good fortune to have a Democratic Governor, and from which there is one Democratic United States Senator, and several Democratic Representatives, I understand.

On March 8, 1934, a survey was made in the State of Ohio to see what was becoming of the incomes in that State. Here is what was reported:

An insight into the distribution of wealth in Ohio was given Thursday in results of a survey conducted by the research division of the special joint tax commission. The report made the startling observation that "75 percent of all productive income"——

Get this: Not only of the property, but "75 percent of all productive income is held by 5 percent of the people, and that 10 percent of the taxpayers hold 83 percent of the income."

Get that: 90 percent of them are left 17 percent of the income, "while less than 2 percent hold more than 60 percent of all the unearned income."

Get that: A survey was made the other day in the State of Ohio, the grand old State of Ohio. If others get any worse than Ohio, my friend from the other side of the Chamber representing that State [Mr. FESS] will probably come down to Louisiana, and when he does we will find him a little cabin on the bank of a creek, where he can live in the summertime and live in the wintertime, where, if he wants to, he can live without shoes and will not need many clothes. He can make enough Indian corn on the back of his little place to supply him with enough to eat, along with the fish he can catch in the stream, and he can live there in the sunshine and bask in happiness, and will not have to have any of the undistributed wealth to keep him going.

Ohio is better in the respect of which I am speaking than most of the States. I venture the assertion Ohio is much better than New York, I venture the assertion that Ohio is much better than Vermont, that it is much better than Massachusetts, that it is much better than New Jersey, and that it is much better than Pennsylvania. But in the State of Ohio, which is somewhat supposed to be liberally governed, in which there is supposed to be a rather liberal distribution of goods and property and income, in the State of Ohio, as we sit here today in the United States Senate trying to legislate for the relief of the balance of the people, in the good State of Ohio, where we can point to a measure of prosperity, it is said that 10 percent of the taxpayers have 83 percent of the income in the State and that 90 percent of them have the other 17 percent. God knows what happens to the bottom 50 or 60 percent of the people. The Lord Himself only knows. That is the condition in which they are.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LONG. I yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. FESS. Let us take the city of Dayton, for example. That is the home of the National Cash Register Co., builded by one man, which in time came to employ a very large number not only of general employees but of experts. That is only typical. The headquarters of the Delco System is also located in Dayton, built very largely by our mutual friend, Charlie Kettering. The finest compliment ever paid to an individual, I think, was when General Motors wanted Mr. Kettering to become a vice president. They did not care much for what he had, but they wanted him. He would not leave Dayton, but ultimately they purchased what Mr. Kettering represented, so he became connected with the General Motors Corporation. Those are two organizations in the city of Dayton which are representative. Very few of the men engaged in an industry of the kind I have cited are the owners of the industry. It is through them and their management that the money is made. A very large force of people employed by them are well employed, but they do not have anything like the amount of money, individually, the managers have.

I am wondering how the specific indictment the Senator is making can be justifiably applied to Mr. Patterson, the builder of the National Cash Register movement, or Mr. Kettering, once the head of the Delco, or what justification there is for the severe indictment of the managers who made possible these things because they have become very wealthy. At the same time they have given very large employment, lucrative, in many instances, to thousands upon thousands of people. The Senator is indicting them because the few will have the usufruct of that effort, while the many employed in it will have a small fraction of the return. I want to know from the Senator whether he thinks he is justified in making this severe indictment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not indict the men; I do not make any charge against the men. If there had not been a Patterson, there would have been somebody else who would have done just what Patterson is doing. I will assume that. But we must admit that we have operated under a system which has allowed the earnings and the incomes to go into a few hands, thereby concentrating the income in the hands of men who cannot wear the clothes and who cannot eat the food, as a result of which there are millions starving in a land of plenty.

A system of government which allows, first, half a million people to accumulate more than the other half, and then get so bad that 100 concerns accumulate more than 100,000,000 men, means destruction to any country. We cannot let this country get into the hands of a few people, I do not care who it is, Patterson, Rockefeller, Simeon D. Fess, George W. Norris, or anybody else, to such an extent that a handful of men have more of the income from the country than 120,000,000 people, without producing just what there is in this country today, too much to eat and people starving because they cannot buy, too much to wear and people shivering because they cannot put clothes on their backs, so many homes that the Government has to finance them so that they can keep them empty while people are walking the streets begging for a shelter above their heads.

That is no indictment against the man who engages in business under this system that the Government sponsors, encourages, and allows, but the indictment is against the Government itself. What we should have done with Mr. Patterson, I will say to the Senator from Ohio, was to have said: "There is a limit to everything. There is a limit to the amount of water you can drink. There is a limit to the amount of land you can own. Whenever you have accumulated to the point where you have so much of this Nation's income that you cannot use it yourself, that your children cannot use it, and that your children's children cannot use it; and whenever you get to the point where the income of 10 percent of you takes up seven eighths of the entire income of the country, leaving only one eighth to feed the other 90 percent, then we have reached a condition that means starvation in a land of plenty."

I believe the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is a Biblical scholar—I know he is a religious and a God-fearing man—and I want the Senator to let me speak to him from the Bible on that point. Let me read what the Bible said about it. I will give you what the Lord said, and He knew what He was talking about. I have it all here. Here is what the Lord said about it, and here is what the Saturday Evening Post said about it, too. [Laughter in the galleries] Here is what the Lord said would be the result of it:

> Go to now, ye rich men, weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you.
> Your riches are corrupted, and your garments are moth-eaten.
> Your gold and silver is cankered; and the rust of them shall be a witness against you, and shall eat your flesh as it were fire.

The Book of James in the New Testament, chapter 5, the first few verses.

Why did He say that? Because the Lord laid down the rule that had to be observed by humanity.

Without reading, I will refer my friend to Leviticus, chapter 25, verse 10, Deuteronomy, chapter 15, verses 1 and 2, Leviticus, chapter 25, verses 18 and 19, and to certain passages in the Book of Isaiah, and to certain other passages from our Lord, the Christ, when He was on earth, in which the principle is reaffirmed that we have to limit the amount of accumulation of men; that we have to see that the property is distributed back into the hands of the people, to keep it from becoming amassed by the few, in which it is stated that there had to be certain remissions of debt periodically, so that the human family could not be burdened down with debt as we are today. In Leviticus, chapter 25, verses 18 and 19, the Lord said:

> Wherefore ye shall do my statutes and keep my judgments, and do them; and yet shall dwell in the land in safety; and the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat your fill and dwell therein in safety.

That was the promise of the Lord, accompanied by a curse if we did not share the blessings of the land, there would be starvation, there would be destitution even in the midst of plenty.

We have gone ahead and done the things we were told not to do. We have gone ahead and ignored the commands of God, the teachings of Christ. We have gone ahead and done just what the Lord has said we should not do.

Our great statesman, Daniel Webster, took cognizance of the things I have just read. Here is what Daniel Webster said. He said we would last just so long as we observed those principles of the Bible. I will now read just what Daniel Webster said:

> I believe that the Bible is to be believed and understood in the plain and obvious meaning of its passages; for I cannot persuade myself that a book intended for the instruction and conversion of the whole world should cover its true meaning in any such mystery and doubt that none but critics and philosophers can discover it. If we abide by the principles taught in the Bible, our country will go on prospering and to prosper, but if we and our posterity neglect its instruction and its authority, no man can tell how sudden a catastrophe may overwhelm us and bury all our glory in profound obscurity (Gambrell's Baptists and Their Business, p. 62).

Mr. President, why did Daniel Webster say that? Let me read the balance of that quotation from Daniel Webster as to what he said about that, because he was speaking on the proposition that we had to keep the Government observing the Bible and the decentralizing of wealth. Here is the balance of the quotation from Daniel Webster in that connection from the speech that he delivered on December 29, 1820, in Plymouth, in which he said:

> The freest government, if it could exist, would not be long acceptable if the tendencies of the law were to create a rapid accumulation of property in few hands and to render the great mass of the population dependent and penniless.

That is Daniel Webster talking. Listen to the balance of it:

> In such a case the popular power would be likely to break in upon the right of property, or else the influence of property to limit and control the exercise of popular power.

We have had this influence of property to control popular power, and we know that it does control popular power.

I read on from Daniel Webster, in his exhortation that we carry on our Government along the lines of the precepts of the Bible.

> Universal suffrage, for example, could not long exist in a community where there was a great inequality of property.

Do the Senators hear that? I am reading to the Senate from the words of the greatest man who ever stood on the floor of the United States Senate in all its existence. I will again read the last line:

> Universal suffrage, for example, could not long exist in a community where there was a great inequality of property.

Do we have a great inequality of property in America, Mr. President, with 5 percent of the people owning 85 percent of the wealth and in the State of Ohio, with 10 percent of its people amassing 83 percent of the income? Let me read you what else Webster said:

The holders of estates would be obliged in such case, either in some way to restrain the right of suffrage, or else such right of suffrage would soon divide the property. In the nature of things, those who have not property—

Listen to this. Here is a warning that Webster gives us that comes right out of the book:

In the nature of things, those who have not property, and see their neighbors possess much more than they think them to need, cannot be favorable to laws made for the protection of property.

That is Daniel Webster. Those who need something to eat and those who need something to wear, who see the rich few in possession of things that they do not think they need, will not stand by and govern for the protection of property. Those are the words of Daniel Webster.

Did he have to go very far for his authority? No; he turns right over to the old Book of Isaiah, where Isaiah says:

Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? Did not the Lord, He against whom we have sinned? For they would not walk in His ways, neither were they obedient unto His law.

That is the reason for Webster's words, Mr. President, and that is the logic of Daniel Webster, which he tried to give us. He further said:

When this class becomes numerous it grows clamorous. It looks on property as its prey and plunder and is naturally ready at all times for violence and revolution.

I heard a Senator stand on the floor of the Senate the other day and state that he was afraid we should have a revolution of blood and murder. He is afraid of a revolution where somebody will get killed. My God, Senators, we have a revolution now. There are more people being killed right now in the United States; there are more people maimed and wounded and dying from starvation and destitution than would ever have been killed in a war that sacrificed the lives of a million people; there are more babies who are going to bed hungry at night and who wake in the morning still hungry; there are more men, Mr. President, riding the empty box cars without a place to lay their heads; there are more mothers taking their last pennies in order to buy milk for their babies, and starving themselves to death, and hiding their misery and discomfort, going to bed in distress and awakening in paralysis; there is more of that going on in this country today, by hundreds of thousands of cases, than all the carnage that would have resulted from a revolution.

If blood had flowed until it had drenched the streets of the city of Washington, if there had been people buried by the tens and hundreds of thousands, if there were maimed and wounded lying in the hospitals tonight as the result of a revolution, it would not equal the misery, the destruction, the malnutrition, the suicides, and the rapacity that has occurred from the concentration of wealth, which has been allowed to be piled up so high that we cannot see the sun, which has caused us to plow up the cotton because we have too much. Yet we sit in the United States Senate and prattle about prosperity coming back, when on the basis of our own estimates we are going to get in $3,000,000,000 this year, and spend $10,000,000,000 to get it. Talk about a country coming back under such conditions!

There are some places where you can make people think. You can go out to the forks of the creek and you can make people think there. You can go out in the highways and the byways and read people facts, and you can make them think. I have gone into the most hardened associations of various and sundry mercenary institutions, and still I could make those people think. But, Mr. President, you can come to the United States Senate, and it is like trying to swim in all the water in the Pacific Ocean.

I once heard an old preacher say that he went out in the ocean and swam and swam but he could not swim in all the water. And that in all his efforts to convert the human family he could convert one and know that there were 50 lost against the one that he could convert. You can blow against the wall, you can sound the clamor, you can sound the call of distress, and when they realize that they are in the very midst of calamity, when they realize that they are carrying a government, plunging it into an oblivion of financial inequality and of governmental insolvency, you cannot get the governing bodies of the American Congress to lift their fingers to correct the condition of concentrated wealth in the hands of the few, notwithstanding the fact that they went before the American people and promised that that was the one thing they were going to turn their attention to doing first.

We could not get that corrected. I would be ashamed to come here if I did not have to do it and to read these figures. I would do it from the standpoint of humanity alone, even though my ears were so deaf I could not hear the wails of the weeping, even though I was so blind I could not see the misery and destitution of the millions; but with it all, if I looked upon this only as a matter of Government statistics, I would hate to stand before the American people and say to them that I was presenting a revenue bill and a financial set-up that was going to allow the ponderous inequalities, that was going to allow a constant undernourishment.

I would hate to admit that I was going to plague this country again with a program that meant no more and no less than that we are going to pile from $8,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000 on the backs of the people in order to keep them in a doleful, charitable attitude through the few months that are soon to come and to pass, in order to keep them on a dole.

It is said there will never be a revolution as long as we feed the people; that as long as we can hand them out a little platter of grub now and then it will keep them satisfied. It is said that the people want to fight, but if we will give them a couple of dollars and let them get a little food so they can feed the baby once or twice a week, letting the horse die and the folks get along on some kind of a basis, whatever it may be, that everything will be all right.

Certain scientists, it is said, are going to bring this country back. I have never been able to see how they are going to bring anything back. It is said that we have adopted some relief measures to take care of the people. What have been the relief measures we have adopted? I have voted for the doles and for the special relief. We adopted them all. What else have we done? We have undertaken some remarkable expedients. We have tried some remarkable experiments. We have experimented along all lines exactly opposite to what we told the people we were going to do.

I remember when Herbert Hoover's Farm Board came out with its first pronouncement asking us to plow up every fourth row of cotton. I wonder how many Senators remember the time that Mr. Hoover and his Farm Board said that they wanted to get rid of this farm surplus by plowing up every fourth row of cotton? That was proposed by Mr. Hoover. That is one time our conservative Democratic leaders criticized Mr. Hoover. That is one time the coalition agreement did not work. They denounced Mr. Hoover and the Farm Board with every kind of ridicule that could be brought to bear, and I was one of the leaders in the procession.

I led the United States off with its "ha! ha!" at the idea that in a country with the people wanting something to wear, with the people starving to death, that the President of the United States had so little sense that he would come out with a proposition that we were going to plow up some of the stuff we wanted to clothe the people because the people did not have anything to wear. We Democrats led the country off with a "ha! ha!" and a merry dance of ridicule that went from one end of the country to the other, and caused Hoover to hide his face and go into retirement.

We went into office and what did we do? The next thing I knew I was marching along advocating a measure providing that every third row of cotton should be plowed up. We went the old boy, Hoover, 8 percent better than he knew! We found out he was right after he had been adjudged to be wrong. That is the wonderful way we have of facing the solution of these great problems involving the American people. A man proposes something and everybody cries,

"Lynch him", and then after he is lynched we take up what he was urging and advising and do exactly what he urged and advised, except that we usually do more and worse than he advocated in the beginning.

Let us bring Hoover back and enshrine him. Let us do what the Chinese did about Confucius. Let us do with Hoover what has been done with various great men of religion who have had accorded to them that great privilege. Let us put up a shrine to Hoover above the clock here in the Senate Chamber as used to be done with those who were leaders in the olden times who died without achieving the fruits of their prophecy. Let us admit that we in the United States Senate are disciples of Hoover today. Let us be honest with ourselves. The financial barons say that in hard times we turn to the Lord. Now we have times hard enough, God knows. Let us have the United States Senate set the example and enshrine Hoover above our clock and say we are following Hoover and stop this claptrap talk that we indulged in when we were trying to keep Hoover from doing everything he wanted to do, and from doing what we ourselves are now doing.

We did not stop there. We have a way in this country, when we find out that a man really was right, of going him one better. We do not stop half way. We found out that Hoover's was really the proper system. We said, "Inasmuch as Mr. Hoover advocated plowing up the cotton, let us do a little bit more." We said we have too much cotton and we will plow up part of it. That takes care of that trouble. The people are trying to get something to wear. The people are trying to get bed sheets.

I know what I am talking about, because I have been out in the country and slept in some of their beds. I tell you they are trying to get bed sheets, but they cannot get enough to put on their beds. They used to have a bed sheet on top of the mattress and another one to turn back, and then one on top of the bed after that—three of them in all. Now they do well if they have one. They have not enough bed sheets. They have not enough cotton socks. They have not enough cotton clothes. Yet we say there is an overproduction.

I do not know whether there is an overproduction or not. I cannot tell whether there is an overproduction until the people have bought the things they need to take them out of their misery. Then is when I will be able to tell how much more cotton we have than we really need. We never have had any more cotton than we needed in good times. Do not forget that. How many of us remember that? We never have had too much cotton when the masses had a purchasing power. If we had, it has been temporary at most. The people have a way of adjusting themselves by not working at it or by the people consuming more.

We said, "All right. We have a condition of calamity because the people are naked and wanting something to wear, so we will plow up some of the cotton. We have adopted the principle and enshrouded the principle of Hoover that we voted down at that time. Let us extend this principle that Hoover himself urged should be given to the country."

What is the next thing? Let us take up the hog next. The people are crying for pork. The people are crying for ham. The people are crying for backbone. They are crying for side meat. They are crying for liver, for chitlings, and for sausage. [Laughter.] What are we going to do with that problem? Somebody said, "Let us kill the hogs." Kill the hogs? All right; that settles that problem. Was it not proved that if a man were freezing to death and needed something to put on his back, the thing to do was to burn up the cotton? That worked, did it not? All right! Now you are hungry and you want something to eat. You want sausage, you want ham, you want bacon. How are we going to get it for you? We will get it by killing 2,000,000 hogs. That will solve that problem.

So we took hold. We worked that thing out; and now we have begun on cotton again, and this is all we can do, I am sorry to say. I paired myself in favor of the Bankhead cotton bill after amending it the best I could. I had to shut my eyes, cross my toes and my fingers, as the Senator from Kentucky said he did, and I had to do worse than he did; I had to get out of the United States Senate when the roll was called, because I just could not stomach the bill. [Laughter.] I got out and let myself be paired in favor of it, however, because it was the only plague-take-it thing rolling through here that even claimed to have the whiskers of anything like recovery on it. So I had to let the thing go; and we have gone along now with the proposition of saving this country on the basis of burning up the cotton when we have too much, and we are going along on the basis of killing the hogs and destroying the meat and putting it in the deep, blue sea and in the rivers and bayous and the streams when we have too much meat to eat.

Foolish! Foolish! Children would be an honor to that kind of a thing. It is not what you would expect of 21-year-old men. Here we stand, and I am 21 years old. [Laughter.] Think of it! Think of it in a civilized country—standing in the United States Senate with people starving to death all around us, with people freezing to death all around us, and we say that with a condition presented where 10 percent of the people get 83 percent of the income, and only 17 percent of the income goes to the other 90 percent, with a condition prevailing in which people starve in a land of plenty, instead of distributing the plenty among the many we burn up the plenty to keep the many from getting it! Instead of distributing this surplus, instead of feeding these people, instead of spreading these various and sundry products of food and wearing apparel, instead of distributing the blessings of God, instead of letting the people share what God promised them—good crops in due season, so that they might eat their fill—instead of sharing them among the people we have adopted the ridiculous experiment of destroying the surplus; and I voted for some of it. It looked as though it was the only thing that could be done.

I was in somewhat the same frame of mind that my friend from Iowa [Mr. DICKINSON] said he was the other day. I have reached the point where I do not mind complimenting a Republican. [Laughter.] I was 25 years old before I learned that "damned Republican" was two words [laughter]; but I shall have to admit what was denounced on this side of the Chamber by my friend from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] as being a very bad spirit. I shall have to admit that in the back of my head at times I have said, "The quicker we let these people have their way and find out that they are going to hell with it, the better off we will be and the quicker we can turn back and do something that will save this country."

I have had to draw on my imagination, and I did not look heavenward, because I would not dare to speak to God with some of the kind of votes I have been casting here. Oh, no; I would not fall down to pray to the Lord, because I was afraid I would not be able to get up if I did, when I was casting votes of this kind. I have drawn on my imagination to try to get some kind of a scintilla by which I could justify my conscience; and the only way I could do it was to say, "Well, maybe it is best to let them have it. When they see they are going right straight to oblivion, maybe they will turn about a little bit quicker and save a few more than they might otherwise; and maybe if they get there real quick there will be more people alive than there will be if they take too long to get there and starve them all to death before they find out where they are at." So I managed half-way to pour some little balm of Gilead on my conscience, and we have gone around here in this way, all contrary to what we have told the people we were going to do.

Does anybody remember the wonderful speech that our President-elect delivered at Topeka, Kans.—the farm speech? I heard that speech over the radio. I was sitting in a restaurant and I heard the speech over the radio, and I heard the farmers cheering, and I joined in and cheered with them as I heard the candidate of the Democratic Party, of whom I was so proud, give utterance to what I conceived to be correct and sound doctrines, and he said:

> The idea of such foolish propositions as destroying the very wherewithal needed to clothe the people, as has been advocated by Mr. Herbert Hoover in his program to plow up cotton!

I heard that speech and it was a sound piece of logic, Mr. President, being delivered to the American people. It was something they ought to have heard. Then our Presidential candidate did not mince any words about it. He came right out and said that that was not what we needed. He said that what we needed was to break up this condition by which a few men have everything, and to distribute the property among the masses. That is what Mr. Franklin Delano Roosevelt said. God bless his soul! God give him good health as he cruises on the yacht in the waters of Florida; and God bless those companions, Mr. Vincent Astor, and those brilliant gentlemen, in the hope that they will be a consolation to President Roosevelt in these hours when he is wrestling with the problems of the country! But what he said at Topeka was that it was foolish, the rottenest kind of philosophy, to be advocating the digging up and destruction of part of the property existing in the country. What we ought to do, said Mr. President Roosevelt, and what he wanted Congress to do if he should be elected, was to break up this condition by which a few men had everything, and distribute this property among the masses.

Those are the words of the President, in effect; and those are not merely the words that he has uttered as a candidate. Those are the words that I read on the floor of the Senate that he has uttered since he has been elected President.

I do not want to detain the Senate, Mr. President. When I started I had no idea I was going to talk so long; but I am so deeply impressed by the soundness and the urgent necessity of a decentralization of the goods and property needed to sustain the people that I have felt that I should not be performing my duty unless I discussed the matter in detail. I do not want to keep the Senate here by making this speech too long. If the Senator from Mississippi wishes to have the Senate take a recess, I shall have no objection to yielding the floor. I do not suppose he intends to ask for a vote on this matter tonight.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the Senator can finish his remarks tonight.

Mr. LONG. There are a few more things that I want to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield the floor?

Mr. LONG. I want to read just a few lines. I will abbreviate my remarks as much as possible. I do want to read into the RECORD part of an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post of September 23, 1916; and I want the Senators to whom I am appealing to take these statistics home with them tonight and think of them. I want them to think of this editorial as I read it here tonight.

Here is what this magazine said in its editorial column in 1916—and conditions in 1916 were not half as bad as they are now. Wealth was not concentrated to anything like the extent that it is right now, as I have already shown from statistics.

Here is what this magazine said:

> The man who studies wealth in the United States from statistics only will get nowhere with the subject because all the statistics afford only an inconclusive suggestion.
> Along one statistical line you can figure out a nation bustling with wealth; along another a bloated plutocracy comprising 1 percent of the population lording it over a starveling horde with only a thin margin of merely well-to-do in between.

That was the Saturday Evening Post of 1916, which said that along one statistical line you could figure out a nation that was bustling with wealth, but that along another line it was a bloated plutocracy comprised of 1 percent of the population that was lording it over a starveling horde with only a thin margin of well-to-do in between. The same magazine in the year 1919, along the latter part of that year, made a complaint and undertook to prescribe some kind of a remedy for that condition, and here is what they said:

> We want big rewards for men who do big constructive things and jail sentences for the big fellows who steal the fruits of their work and savings of small investors.

In other words, they were willing to have big men, just as we all are willing, but they did not want to allow them to rob the workingman of a fair share of the return of his toil, as had been done in this country, to the point where the wealth has been accumulated in the hands of a few. Said this magazine:

> There have been altogether too many mavericks loose on the range, sucking cows on which they have no claim.
> There would be no real railroad mess, no necessity for trying to pare down wages in basic industries, if there had been no banker control and no flagrant watering of the stocks of these corporations.
> Yet more menacing was the concentration of power proceeding in the banking world, which even the conservative capitalistic Wall Street Journal described in 1903 as "not merely a normal growth, but concentration that comes from combination, consolidation, and other methods employed to secure monopolistic power." Not only this, but this concentration has not been along the lines of commercial banking. The great banks of concentration are in close alliance with financial interests intimately connected with promotion of immense enterprises, many of them being largely speculative.

Mr. President, now we come to a little sermon on this matter. We have been told by these big financiers that we ought to go back to church, that when the people become impoverished, and when destitution is spread amongst the entire population of the land by reason of everything being in the hands of a few, people are encouraged to go back to church. So now, whether you go to church or not, I am going to read you a little sermon that was delivered by the pastor of John D. Rockefeller, senior and junior, in New York City. I quote from the Reverend Harry Emerson Fosdick, pastor of this Baptist Church, in a sermon he delivered on the 28th day of December 1930. This is what the Rockefeller Baptist Church pastor said:

> See the picture of the world today—communism rising as a prodigious world power and all the capitalistic nations arming themselves to the teeth to fly at each other's throats and tear each other to pieces. * * * Capitalism is on trial. * * * Our whole capitalistic society is on trial.
> First, within itself, for obviously there is something the matter with the operation of a system that over the western world leaves millions and millions of people out of work who want work, and millions more in the sinister shadow of poverty.
> Second, capitalism is on trial with communism for its world competitor.
> The verbal damning of communism now prevalently popular in the United States will get us nowhere. The decision between capitalism and communism hinges on one point: Can capitalism adjust itself to the new age?

Mr. President, I believe I am not going to be able to conclude this afternoon.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I am wondering whether we can reach some understanding about a vote at a definite time tomorrow on the pending amendment, or any other amendment which may be offered to the section, without further debate. The Senator from Louisiana tells me that he will talk about 30 minutes more. I understand the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] may want to speak. May we not get an agreement that a vote be taken at not later than 2 o'clock p.m. tomorrow. I should like to occupy about 30 minutes, as no one has spoken in behalf of the committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. What does the Senator propose?

Mr. HARRISON. I was about to suggest that at not later than 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon the Senate vote on the pending amendment, or any other amendment which may be offered to this section, without further debate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will not the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Has the Senator from Louisiana concluded his speech?

Mr. LONG. No; I have not. I have considerable data which I wish to put into the RECORD.

I was in no hurry for the provision at this particular point in this bill to be passed, to be frank with the Senator. I think we have considered it entirely too lightly. We have not given very much consideration to it. Unfortunately, most of the Senators have been busy with committee work. This is the most important section of the most important bill the present session of the Congress will deal with. I do not see why we have to hurry through it. Why should we not adjourn now and take it up tomorrow? We can pass it in 2 or 3 days.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I had understood from my conferences here that the Senator would be perfectly willing, if we took a recess this evening, to take 30 minutes tomorrow, and that with that kind of an understanding we could reach an agreement.

Mr. LONG. I said I would take 30 minutes, but I did not say anything about limiting debate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the proposal of the Senator from Mississippi presents a very awkward and very unusual request for unanimous consent, when he suggests parceling out the time and giving one individual a large part of the time.

Mr. LONG. That is the trouble.

Mr. McNARY. To meet the situation sensibly, and at the same time conform to the rules, let me suggest that we meet tomorrow, as usual, at 12 o'clock, that the debate be limited to 15 minutes on the pending amendment, that the Senator from Louisiana be given 30 minutes, and that a vote be taken at 2 o'clock p.m.

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator would find that we would get along very slowly under such an arrangement. If there is any other Senator who wishes to speak, I am perfectly willing to give up my time. I want to get along with the revenue bill. The Senator from Louisiana has occupied nearly 2 hours of time this afternoon, and he wants 30 minutes more, and I am willing that he shall have it. I was going to try to get recognition for the Senator from Nebraska immediately following the speech of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. McNARY. The proposal I have suggested would take care of the Senator from Louisiana and would limit debate to 15 minutes on the pending amendment. It also would provide an opportunity for the Senator from Nebraska, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Mississippi to have a certain portion of the time.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator does not know whether we are to get a vote or not.

Mr. McNARY. I suggested that debate be limited to 15 minutes on any amendment, and that then the vote should be taken at 2 o'clock or before 2 o'clock p.m.

Mr. HARRISON. That is very satisfactory to me.

Mr. LONG. I should not think the Senator from Nebraska would want to be limited to 15 minutes. I certainly hope he will not limit himself to 15 minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi accept the modification suggested by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HARRISON. The modification, as I understand, is that no Senator shall speak longer than 15 minutes on the bill nor longer than 15 minutes on any amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that the debate shall close at 2 o'clock p.m.

Mr. HARRISON. And that the debate shall close at 2 o'clock p.m., at which time a vote shall be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. I object.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, I think we had better proceed.

Mr. LONG. It will not do a bit of good. I have plenty of time.

Mr. HARRISON. I have tried to deal courteously with the Senator on this proposition.

Mr. LONG. It does not make a bit of difference. It does not bother me. I object, because I think we have rushed through with this legislation entirely too fast. I seriously tell the Senate that we have let America go to the "demnition bowwows", refusing to correct what we said we were going to correct, and I think entirely too little consideration is being given to the bill, particularly the phase of it that I have been discussing. We have the Finance Committee submitting a report showing that this year we are going to spend about ten and a half billion dollars, and they estimate we will get in three and one quarter billion dollars, and last year we spent $4,000,000,000 and got in $2,000,000,000.

I think we are putting through an abominable and abnormal bill. We are paying no attention to it, and we are fixing to skip over the only section of the bill where we can correct a condition which needs correction. I think the so-called "conservative" Members of the Senate ought to think more about this measure than they appear to have done—putting such a bill as this through, when it is estimated that every year our expenditures get three times bigger than our income. I wonder where this conservative bloc of the Senate is. The financial, sound-money men, where are they? When do they expect to stop this thing?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I submit the request that after the Senate shall convene tomorrow no Senator shall speak longer than 30 minutes on the pending amendment or on this section of the bill.

Mr. LONG. On the pending amendment?

Mr. COUZENS. On the pending amendment; not the section.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought we would vote tomorrow at some time definitely on this amendment or any other amendment that may be offered to this section, and that the debate should close on this section at that time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I withdraw any request, and I may say to the Senator from Louisiana that I understood the suggestion came from him.

Mr. LONG. The Senator understood wrongly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi withdraws his request. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. LONG. I will show good faith by proposing what I agreed to myself. I will propose a unanimous-consent agreement that, beginning tomorrow, we limit the debate on the La Follette amendment to 30 minutes to each Senator. I propose that myself if the Senator has no objection to it.

Mr. HARRISON. I have objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. LONG. Very well; that suits me. I want to be as nice about it as I can.

Mr. President, I want to find out if the so-called "sound-money men" have studied what we are about to vote on. I do not care what Senators' political leanings are. I do not care what Senators' views of this Nation's finances are. I have always advocated more liberal expansion of the guarantee and remonetizing of silver. But I want to know where the sound-money men are. The sound men that say that if we vote the soldiers' bonus of $2,000,000,000 we are going to bankrupt the United States Treasury, but who are coming here with a bill which means that we are going to take in three and one-quarter billion dollars this year and spend $10,000,000,000 to get it. I want to know where the so-called "sound advocates of Government" have gone to, who have presented us with a report which says that in order to get in $2,000,000,000 we spent four and one-half billion dollars last year, and now instead of doing as well in 1934 as we did in 1933, in order to raise the income to three and one quarter billion dollars, we will have to spend $10,000,000,000 to keep the Government afloat while we are doing it.

I think we have entirely too much of this blood-and-thunder government. I think we have had too much of this general "bust-'em-open" government around here. It is time the people from the forks in the creeks and the wide-open spaces were heard from. We have run this thing a good long way. We have been pretty liberal, we have all ducked out, covered our heads and taken to our heels, sent our votes back by mail and express, and I think we have had entirely too much of this general "bust-'em-open" government around here. We have yielded and yielded and yielded entirely too much.

I have a few feelings about this matter myself. I have tried to extend every courtesy to some, but it must be dotted just exactly right at the exact place where they tell you to dot the "i", and cross the "t", and that nothing else is going to satisfy them, and if it is going to be this or nothing, then I am not in favor of that kind of business. I have had enough of that here. I have seen too much of it. I do not have to spend my time that way. I would just as soon talk here as talk away from here as far as that is concerned.

Mr. President, I speak with all propriety, I hope, and with the best motives, and without intending to impugn anyone's good intentions and desires, but I say we have had less brain thought given to our work than we have had in any Congress since I have been here.

We have sat here waiting for somebody to label the bottle and send it to us to take, and we have waited long enough. It may have been the best thing that we come in here and decide to wait and let somebody give us a capsule that would do the work, and we have swallowed them just as fast as we could.

But, Mr. President, where do we find ourselves? We find ourselves just like the old man's frog, where they rolled buckshot down the gangplank and the frog swallowed all the shot they sent down there thinking he was eating something good to eat, and finally he had swallowed so much buckshot that he could not make one hop.

We have sat here taking restoratives, and sundry concoctions and nostrums which are sent to us, and we have about loaded the old buggy down to the point where it cannot go one yard.

I want Senators, the sound, conservative men, to think about saving this Government and saving the people of our country. We have not given any of our own thought to it. Mr. President, I want the Senators to remember what I am telling them now. I want to call them to witness something that happened in the Senate. The Senators came in here on the 4th day of March 1933 with an order to close every bank in the United States, and with a bill that was not going to open up any bank except a national bank which was a part of the Federal Reserve, and very few of them. I stood on the floor of the Senate on the 4th day of March 1933 when I was practically guilty of treason for doing so, to try to show what an absolute wrong we were doing to this country to close up one half of the bank deposits of the United States, and maybe more than that. I stood on the floor of the Senate, and it looked like it was a most treasonable thing to do, and I fought that thing. I drew up an amendment that day in order to try to keep the administration from closing up the State banks, and I came back here on March 5 and took up some more time; I came back on March 6 and took up some more time, until the thing blazed over in this country, and it was at the point of the gun that we few fellows who fought for the State banks made the administration back up and save the State banks of the United States and guarantee those banks. There have been but a few of us here who have dared to open our mouths when these nostrums have been pouring in like a stream.

I have swallowed just as many of these concoctions as anybody else has swallowed, but the time has come to stop swallowing these things that are weighting the frog down until he cannot hop any farther. It is time to assert in the United States Senate something of what appears to be sound sense. I do not propose to have anybody tell me that the "t" has to be crossed here and the "i" has to be dotted there. I think a Member of the United States Senate is a United States Senator, and the sooner the Congress comes back to a realization that it is to have to take a hand in pulling the country out of its fix, the sooner that Senators decide they are going to have to use the mental capacity that God Almighty blessed them with and that the people sent them here to use, the sooner they decide to stand on their own intelligent understanding and their own initiative, the better it is going to be for the country.

I know the Senate so well that I could tell anyone that if we had relied on our own independent judgment without so many recommendations, we would not have been here with this kind of financial set-up to go to the country. It is not going to work. According to the schedule that has been submitted, we are going to take in $3,500,000,000 and spend $10,500,000,000, and after we have spent all of that money we know there is not going to be a thing done that will make conditions any better next year than they are now. When we know the country has gone from bad to worse as compared with 1933, I think we have taken entirely too much time to consider the matter.

I am willing that the people shall know that the time has come that the intelligence of the Senate has got to be used. That is a revolutionary statement. [Laughter.] I realize that is a departure from our understanding of the prerogatives of the Senate, but I repeat, at the risk of being considered revolutionary, that the time has come when the intelligence of the United States Senate is going to have to be used. It may appear on the face of things that I mean to be more or less treasonable, but I do not. I mean to say that the time has come that swallowing this kind of nostrums, such as is presented here, is not going to save the country. When I find things going from bad to worse I always try to check up and see how I can bring about a better balance of conditions. That has been my way of doing.

Now, I will continue my speech. We have been asked to swallow this Ohio report. Why, Mr. President, if this report had come out from Woodrow Wilson's commission, if in 1916 when Woodrow Wilson was President of the United States we had had a report coming out like that from the State of Ohio, he would have shaken in his boots. The idea of the great Democratic leader, Woodrow Wilson, and the commission which he appointed, headed by one of the great Democrats of the country, Frank P. Walsh, who at that time lived in Kansas City and who has since moved to New York City, rendering a report of this kind, and after the presentation of that report we come in and find nothing done to correct conditions. Eighteen years later, almost to the day, we have come here with this kind of a proposal staring us in the face. We find that the State of Ohio, one of the most prosperous of the whole Union, reports that 83 percent of its income is in the hands of 10 percent of the people.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that after we convene tomorrow, following a recess of the Senate today until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, no Senator shall speak longer than 30 minutes on the pending amendment——

Mr. REED. Or more than once.

Mr. HARRISON. Or more than once, and that a vote be taken at not later than 2 o'clock p.m. tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business today it recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, and that after the convening of the Senate at 12 o'clock noon tomorrow no Senator shall speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the amendment, and that the Senate shall vote thereon at not later than 2 o'clock p.m. Is there objection?

Mr. LONG. I object to the 2 o'clock part of it. I am willing to have a 30-minute limitation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana objects.

Mr. LONG. Many Senators have gone who ought to be here if we are to enter into that kind of an arrangement. I do not think the vote will be delayed longer than 2 o'clock, but several Senators have left who spoke to me about the matter, and perhaps some of them may want to speak on the amendment. I do not know that they will.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] had conferred with the Senator from Louisiana and that the Senator from Louisiana said he would be agreeable to such an arrangement. That is why I submitted the request.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Oregon did not mention 2 o'clock to me.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not going to become involved in any controversy among the Democrats. I thought it was understood that a vote would be had not later than 2 o'clock, but if that is objectionable, I am through.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to connect up my speech so it may appear in its logical order. Here is a statement of the receipts and expenditures for the year 1933 on the basis of figures furnished by the Government.

For 1934–35 the receipts from internal revenue are estimated to be $1,600,000,000; for 1934, estimated, $2,663,-600,000. For 1935—and here is where we get into the realm of the imaginary. I want to show how unsound these figures are. They will not hold water. They will not even hold sirup, let alone water. Anything goes through this kind of an estimate.

We are going to have prosperity in 1935. We are getting around the corner. They are starting this just-around-the-corner business again. Next year we are going to have many more on the dole, but we will throw them off because prosperity will be just around the corner. We are going to move around the corner apparently.

For 1935 the estimate is $3,333,000,000. That is the way they have it estimated. They are going to help the situation along. Catch this scientific analysis and see how this thing is figured out. Just follow me for a moment and see how it is all figured out. It is said that in 1933, $1,600,000,000 were the receipts from internal revenue, in 1934 the receipts will be $2,663,000,000, and in 1935, next year, $3,333,000,000.

Now, let us take another little paragraph out of this book.

In 1933, the year these people said they received $1,604,000,000, they had total expenditures of $4,681,000,000. In other words, in order to get $1,604,000,000 in 1933 they spent $4,681,000,000. You know and I know that they had to spend that money, according to the way they have been running things, because under the kind of set-up they have here the only way in the world they have been able to decrease the suffering at all has been by throwing out the public funds, and they have thrown them out to the wild winds of the earth and said, "Come hither, come yonder, one and all", just as we went out in the woods and threw out corn in the days when there was not much mast, or perhaps in the summertime, when the hogs were poor, and maybe there had been very little rain. We would give a great, big, loud cry—I used to be able to make them hear me as much as two miles and a half at one time—and bring them up from the land side, and throw out the corn to them.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no desire to inconvenience Senators who have made engagements otherwise. It is getting quite late. There are very few Senators remaining here; so I am about to submit a unanimous-consent request.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its session tonight it take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow, and that after the convening of the Senate tomorrow at 12 o'clock no Senator shall be permitted to speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the pending amendment.

Mr. LONG. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMERCE COMMITTEE

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina. I shall yield the floor in a short time.

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 214.

Mr. LONG. I should like to have the fact noted that I yield the floor for that purpose so that I will have the floor tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read Senate Resolution 214, submitted by Mr. Stephens on March 23, 1934, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce hereby is authorized to employ for the remainder of the session of the Senate an assistant clerk, to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not rise to oppose the resolution, if I understand it aright.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield to me for a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNES. The resolution applies only to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ASHURST. I understand that. I do not rise to oppose the resolution. In fact, I believe it should be agreed to; but I wish to call attention to a situation which is within the common knowledge of every Senator.

I think the committee should bring in a resolution authorizing every Senator to employ an additional stenographer for the remainder of the session. Personally, I doubt if I need such additional assistance; but I do know of other Senators who need an extra stenographer, but who hesitate to speak for it. Not particularly requiring one myself, I am at liberty to speak more gracefully on the subject.

I hope the Senate will pardon me if I refer to a personal situation in my own office. Within the past fortnight there have been received in my office over 5,000 letters regarding the Wagner-Costigan antilynching bill. It, of course, is impossible to reply to all the letters. Other Senators, from more populous States, doubtless receive a still larger number of letters.

This is a hard-working Congress. The Senate is diligent and industrious. We are well advanced with our work. I think the Senate should have the courage and the forthrightness to give to every Senator an additional stenographer for the remainder of the session; and, whilst I shall not offer an amendment to the pending resolution, I wish to say that our constituents have a right to have replies to the letters they have addressed to us. They have a right to know what is going on.

Take the case of my esteemed friend here, the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. I doubt not that the senior Senator from New York employs, out of his private purse, three or four additional stenographers.

Mr. COPELAND. Five.

Mr. ASHURST. Five, the Senator says; and I doubt not that the same thing is true of his colleague [Mr. WAGNER]. The same thing, no doubt, is true of the Senators from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Texas, Missouri, and Illinois. I know of two Senators from Pacific Coast States who each receive 1,000 letters daily.

I say that the Senate owes it to its own dignity, it owes it to itself, to give to each Senator an additional stenographer for the remainder of the session.

There are thousands of worthy people willing to work. I do not pretend to prescribe the amount of compensation; but I regret that the committee has not brought in such a resolution. So far as I am concerned, the committee may exempt me from the operation of the resolution; but I am speaking for other Senators, some of whose States have many times the population of mine.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Arizona that on the calendar at this time there is a resolution reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with reference to the subject referred to by the Senator from Arizona. The proposal suggested by him, however, is different from that contained in the resolution; and since the members of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate are not in the Chamber at this time, I do not think any action should be taken on that subject until they can be conferred with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Carolina for the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection to the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HARRISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 4, 1934

The House met at 11 o'clock a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we would be silent in the Lord. Verify Thy promise unto us: They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength. May we abide in waiting and find our joy and our power in the heights. Let us not doubt these moments, but doubt gloom, depression, the perverse, and the crooked creatures of despair. Let Thy glory grow upon our vision; determine and establish our goings this day. We pray, our Heavenly Father, for our country. Soothe the distresses of want and poverty and mitigate the pangs of hunger and hardship. Direct this Congress to so labor that these days shall be signal tokens of divine providence and fatherly care, ordained for the good and happiness of all. With us, O God, allow not evil thinking or wrongdoing to become devouring habits that shall scorch and burn the furniture of our souls. O strengthen our moral muscles so that they cannot be broken by any temptation which may assail us. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 3209. An act limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in the case of the United States of America against Weirton Steel Co. and other cases.

UNITED STATES v. JAMES CANNON, JR., AND OTHERS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 320

Whereas in the case of the United States against James Cannon, Jr., and Ada L. Burroughs (No. 51159, Criminal Docket) pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, subpena duces tecum was issued by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and addressed to South Trimble, Clerk of the House of Representatives, directing him to appear as a witness before Criminal Court, Division No. 1, on the 10th day of April 1934, and to bring with him certain and sundry original papers in the possession and under the control of the House of Representatives: Therefore

Resolved, That by the privilege of this House no evidence of a documentary character under the control and in the possession of the House of Representatives can, by the mandate of process of the ordinary courts of justice, be taken from such control or possession but by its permission;

Resolved, That when it appears by the order of the court or of the judge thereof, or of any legal officer charged with the administration of the orders of such court or judge, that documentary evidence in the possession and under the control of the House is needful for use in any court of justice or before any judge or such legal officer, for the promotion of justice, this House will take such order thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistently with the privileges and rights of this House;

Resolved, That South Trimble, Clerk of the House, be authorized to appear at the place and before the officer named in the subpena duces tecum before mentioned, with certified copies of the documents and papers mentioned in the said subpena, but shall not take with him any papers or documents on file in his office or under his control or in his possession as Clerk of the House;

Resolved, That the said court, through any of its officers or agents, have full permission to attend with all proper parties to the proceeding, and then always at any place under the orders and control of this House, and take copies of any documents or papers in possession or control of said Clerk, and any evidence of witnesses in respect thereto which the court or other proper officer thereof shall desire, so as, however, the possession of said documents and papers by the said Clerk shall not be disturbed, or the same shall not be removed from their place of file or custody under said Clerk;

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the said court as a respectful answer to the subpena aforementioned.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, this is the same resolution we passed once before under similar circumstances.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, it is the same resolution except this resolution carries language authorizing the Clerk of the House to appear with certified copies of the documents. This is the only difference.

Mr. SNELL. That part of the resolution, of course, does not materially affect any of our records here.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. No. In just one or two minutes I can very briefly explain the resolution and its origin. The Clerk of the House was served with a subpena from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, where the case is being adjudicated. The subpena begins, "The President of the United States to Hon. South Trimble", and so forth.

Two resolutions have been adopted by the House under which the Clerk of the House is not privileged in the event of a subpena duces tecum to take any of the documents of the House to the court. The former resolution which was adopted by the House in a similar situation authorized the attendance of the Clerk and authorized also an examination and taking of copies by officers of the court of any documents of the House, but the Committee on the Judiciary, upon examining the matter, felt that clearly the Clerk of the House, who is the custodian of the documents, should certify them. This is a criminal case.

Mr. SNELL. I cannot see any objection to that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The Supreme Court of the District of Columbia is the trial court, which corresponds ordinarily to our district or circuit court?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not the highest court, because the appellate court is the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is right.

This is a matter being litigated in this court, and the resolution is simply for the purpose of enabling the court to have the advantage of the documents referred to.

I submit herewith the following statement of the clerk of the court:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
CLERK'S OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., March 28, 1934.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I beg to inform you that I have received from the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a subpena duces tecum directed to me as Clerk of the House of Representatives commanding me to appear before said court on the 10th day of April 1934 at 9:45 a.m. as a witness in the case of The United States v. James Cannon, Jr., and Ada L. Burroughs (no. 51159 Criminal Docket), and to bring with me certain and sundry papers, therein described, in the files of the House of Representatives.

The papers in question were filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives pursuant to the Federal Corrupt Practices Act and are now in possession of the House of Representatives in the custody of the Clerk.

Your attention and that of the House is respectfully invited to a resolution of the House adopted in the Forty-sixth Congress, first session (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 680), upon the recommendation of the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

"Resolved, That no officer or employee of the House of Representatives has the right, either voluntarily or in obedience to a subpena duces tecum, to produce any document, paper, or book belonging to the files of the House before any court or officer, nor to furnish any copy of any testimony given or paper filed in any investigation before the House or any of its committees, or of any other paper belonging to the files of the House except such as may be authorized by statute to be copied, and such as the House itself may have made public, to be taken without the consent of the House first obtained."

And to a resolution adopted by the House in the Forty-ninth Congress, first session (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 1295), from which the following is quoted:

"Resolved, That by the privilege of this House no evidence of a documentary character under the control and in possession of the House of Representatives can, by the mandate or process of the ordinary courts of justice, be taken from such control or possession but by its permission.

"That when it appears by the order of a court or of the judge thereof, or of any legal officer charged with the administration of the orders of such court or judge, that documentary evidence in the possession and under the control of the House is needful for use in any court of justice or before any judge or such legal officer for the promotion of justice, this House will take such order thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistently with the privileges and rights of this House."

These resolutions resulted from the issuance of subpenas duces tecum upon the Clerk of the House to produce certain original papers in the files of the House.

Permission to remove from their place of file or custody any documents or papers was denied by the House, but the court was afforded facilities for making certified copies. This seems to have been the uniform practice in respect to subpenas duces tecum issued by a court upon the Clerk of the House to produce in court original papers from the files of the House.

The subpena in question is herewith attached and the matter is presented for such action as the House in its wisdom may see fit to take.

Very respectfully,

SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

SUPREME COURT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

[SEAL] FRANK E. CUNNINGHAM, Clerk.
By B. ELOISE NAPHEN, Assistant Clerk.

[Endorsement]

Criminal no. 51159. United States v. James Cannon, Jr., and Ada L. Burroughs. Summons for the United States; Criminal Court No. 1.

Let this writ issue:

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MR. ANONYMOUS RECEIVES A LETTER

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter addressed to Mr. Anonymous, Holdenville, Okla.:

Mr. ANONYMOUS, Holdenville, Okla.

DEAR MR. ANONYMOUS: You were good enough to send me an editorial from the Daily Oklahoman criticizing my vote on the veto of the veterans' bill, and you say that it is the sentiment of Hughes County.

I think it is the right of every citizen to criticize the action of any public official, but the criticism should be based upon the truth. I would take no notice of this editorial but for the fact that it is so full of erroneous and false statements which reflect upon one's integrity that I am impelled to write you this letter.

In the first place, the Budget, which was approved by the President, recommended the restoration of 5 percent of the pay of Government employees, effective July 1. On the first passage of the bill the House sent it to the Senate in the form as requested by the President. The Senate Committee on Appropriations amended it, making 5 percent payable February 1 and 5 percent more on July 1. Then the Senate restored the full pay. The House compromised on 5 and 5, as recommended by the Senate committee. If the veto of the President had been sustained the full restoration would have taken place on July 1 instead of 10 percent as provided in the bill, unless other legislation intervened, which was doubtful. Therefore those who voted to pass the bill over the veto of the President really voted for 5 percent less increase than those who voted to sustain the veto. This editorial says that we who voted to override the veto voted to take money from the mouths of desperate men and hungry women and children.

Now, what are the facts? The facts are that the bill does not take any of the money away from the persons on the relief rolls, because that money has already been appropriated and much of it wasted, and many millions of dollars are in that fund now. But we did provide food, raiment, and medicine for several thousand sick, helpless, and penniless men and their families who fought for the honor and preservation of their country. The increase in appropriation over what was recommended by the President for veterans amounted to only $20,000,000—quite a large sum, but a small sum in comparison with other appropriations.

You never saw any editorial in this paper criticizing the Congress for making available millions upon millions of dollars for railroads, banks, and insurance companies.

Now, Mr. Anonymous, with the exception of my vote to override the veto of this veterans' bill, I have voted for the constructive measures in the President's recovery program, outside of the miscalled "Economy Act" which was amended by the administration even before the first session had ended, so I must have not been very far wrong on that vote. In addition, I voted to pass the currency-expansion bill, generally called "the bonus bill", even though it was not recommended by the administration, and I proposed a bill whereby the Government of the United States would receive back into the Treasury a billion eight million dollars, and the soldiers would have received circulating note issues good in their communities in payment for the balance of their certificates.

I am not a rubber stamp here. I am here to support the administration and am doing that, but I do not agree with what every Government official does. For example, I do not approve the action of the Secretary of the Interior as head of the public works in allotting all of the $3,000,000,000 to a favored group of States and leaving Oklahoma and other Southern States to receive the crumbs that may be left.

I protested his action in cutting the money allocated for needed public buildings in Oklahoma and making it necessary to draw new plans and thus delaying the work and at the same time using $2,000,000 to build 20 post-office substations in his home city of Chicago.

I think the furnishing of work to the people is one of the things that should be continued until private industry and public works can absorb every idle man, and I do not agree with the idea that men should be kept in idleness on public-relief rolls when projects could be provided whereby they could earn their own livelihood until called into permanent employment.

I believe that no man, woman, or child should be permitted to go hungry or without clothing. There should not be a big absorption of the relief funds by overhead and office expenses, and there should not be any favoritism shown to anyone.

I think that the helpless and the aged should not only be cared for temporarily but should be cared for permanently by a contributory pension law that would provide for a person's contributing in their earning days to take care of themselves in their declining years.

Of course, Mr. Anonymous, the real question involved in this particular vote for which I am taken to task was whether the soldiers who gave up lucrative positions in many cases and their future welfare in all cases to take their places in the ranks of the Army during the World War are to be given consideration. They went to the camps where the ravages of the influenza so decimated their number until their corpses were piled like cordwood, and into the mud and slime of the trenches in France, where death hovered in the very air they breathed and the engines of death blew men into atoms. They contracted weakened lungs, and thousands of them can never know a well moment again, and yet a great many of them cannot make proof under the requirements of the Economy Act of 1932. They must have subsistence and medical care.

Now, Mr. Anonymous, in all fairness, do you not think that newspapers like the one from which you send this clipping, who urged this country into war, and the editor who ballyhooed the boys into the Army and enjoyed prosperity during its course, should be willing to help care for these who are not able to care for themselves and are victims of that terrible conflict? I am unwilling to believe this represents the sentiment of the honest citizens of Hughes County, or of any other county in the Fourth Congressional District.

Thanking you for sending me this editorial from such an outstanding paper, I am,

Very truly,

TOM D. MCKEOWN.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, would it be consistent for the Speaker at this time to give us the titles of the bills that he expects to have taken up under suspension of the rule this afternoon?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do that presently.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, there are some 60 bills upon the Consent Calendar, and there will probably be half a dozen suspensions—I do not know how many—but it is exceedingly important to run through the calendar and also to dispose of these suspensions. Members are anxious, of course, to have these bills considered. It has been 4 weeks since this calendar was called. It is my purpose later on to ask the House for consent to continue the calling of the Consent Calendar and the consideration of suspensions on tomorrow.

The House is aware of the fact that it is necessary on account of previous arrangements to take an adjournment on Friday and Saturday, and it seems to me we ought to finish consideration of this calendar if we can.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order, in the consideration of the Consent Calendar, to call first bridge bills and Senate bills.

There are a number of bridge bills upon this calendar, and the Members tell me it is exceedingly important they be passed promptly, and I think we can dispose of them in a very short time.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman mean that we are to go through and pick out all the Senate bills?

Mr. BYRNS. Pick out the bridge bills and the Senate bills and then go back to the calendar and call the calendar all the way through.

Mr. SNELL. What is the special reason we should give any advantage to all the Senate bills?

Mr. BYRNS. There is only one advantage, I will say to the gentleman, and I have none on the list myself——

Mr. SNELL. And the gentleman knows I have not.

Mr. BYRNS. They have passed the Senate, and, of course, action by the House, if it is favorable, will cause them to become law at once.

Mr. SNELL. Are they taking up our bills and passing them over there, or does the gentleman know?

Mr. BYRNS. I am sorry I do not know.

There are some of these bridge bills that, I am informed, are quite important.

Mr. SNELL. I think the bridge bills should be taken up first.

I want to ask one more question if I may. I have no disposition to interfere in any way with the program, but I do think that some of the bills that are coming up under suspension should come up under the general rules of the House, so as to give wider opportunity for debate and also more opportunity for amendment. There are some of these measures that our people are not entirely opposed to, but they would like to have an opportunity to amend them under the general rules of the House.

It has gotten so that everything is coming up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think everything is coming up under suspension.

Mr. SNELL. Not quite all, but pretty nearly all.

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think there have been any more suspensions this session than usually occur.

Mr. SNELL. I think there have been a good many more. Take the sugar bill, I do not know much about it, but I think the bill should really come up under the general rules of the House and give Members an opportunity for full discussion and amendment.

Mr. BYRNS. There are several features in regard to that legislation that make it important that it be quickly disposed of. If the gentleman opposes the calling of the Senate bills first——

Mr. SNELL. I am not going to object.

Mr. BYRNS. I think it would be of advantage to call the Senate bills and the bridge bills and then go back to the Consent Calendar generally.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. I will yield if I have the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I agree with the gentleman as to calling the bridge bills first. But does the majority leader think it is fair to Members of the House who work hard to get their private bills through the committee and reported to the floor, placed upon the calendar, and then have another body take them up—and the majority leader knows how they are disposed of—pass them as a matter of course, and then take away the credit from Members of the House, whatever little credit there may be? I think the Members of the House ought to have the credit for their own bills. They introduced them as soon as Congress met; then they are taken away somewhere else and denied what little credit belongs to the Members of the House. That has been the practice for 20 years, and I think that ought to be corrected.

Mr. BYRNS. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman. I do not know what Senate bills there are on the calendar. Someone says there are 15. My only object in making that request was that these bills having been passed by the Senate would be finally disposed of by this action. We do not know when Congress is going to adjourn.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that when a Senate bill is called up, the Member of the House having a similar House bill on the calendar ought to get up and call attention to it and say, "This is my bill." He ought to get some credit for it. I have no bills myself on this calendar.

Mr. BYRNS. The gentleman will have that oportunity when the bills are called up. If the Members of the House feel that it is not proper to call the Senate bills with the bridge bills, one objection will govern it, and I will withdraw my request and confine it to the bridge bills.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it the intention to call the Consent Calendar before the suspensions?

Mr. BYRNS. I am not authorized to say this, but I think it is the intention of the Speaker to proceed with the Unanimous Consent Calendar for a time before taking up the suspensions.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman state his request again?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I submitted a unanimous-consent request that in the calling of the Consent Calendar bridge bills and bills which had passed the Senate be first considered. There seems to be some objection to the latter request.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, if there is objection, I will withdraw that part of the request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNELL. Will the Chair now give us the list of bills which he proposes to take up under suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. Today the Chair hopes to permit Senate Joint Resolution 74 to be called up under suspension of the rules. That is the so-called "Rankin resolution." That will be taken up as soon as we finish with the bridge bills and the Senate bills.

The sugar bill, H.R. 8861, will be the next to be taken up.

Senate bill 682, the Johnson foreign securities bill, and perhaps Senate bill 770, the Minnesota fire bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair permit a parliamentary inquiry?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Has any Speaker ever heretofore permitted a private bill to be taken up under suspension of the rules? I do not know of any such suspension.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of one instance when it was done. While this bill is on the Private Calendar, it seems to the Chair that it embraces more than a private bill. The Chair believes that this bill is more in the nature of a public bill than a private bill, and for that reason has agreed to recognize a motion to suspend the rules on it.

Mr. BLANTON. It is a bill that has been strenuously fought by several of us for 10 years.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that, and the Chair thinks it should be heard before the House.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow morning, Thursday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, I be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will defer that request. As I said a while ago, we must adjourn over Friday and Saturday, by a previous arrangement. It is extremely important that we finish this calendar and the suspensions which the Speaker expects to take on tomorrow. It is my purpose later on to continue the order of business for today on tomorrow, and I shall have to object.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. I do not desire to hold up the business of the House, Mr. Speaker, and if I may be permitted to address the House on Monday morning, I shall make that request.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated to one or two that I could not consent to such requests.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. But I have changed the request to next Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman not wait until tomorrow to prefer that request?

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Very well. But I want to be permitted to address the House on next Monday or Tuesday.

FEES IN NATURALIZATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 3521) to reduce certain fees in naturalization proceedings, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill and the Senate amendments as follows:

Page 2, line 9, strike out "(a)."
Page 3, line 1, after "amended", insert "as follows: Wherever in said subdivision the words 'a fee of $10' occur they shall be amended to read 'a fee of $1'; and."
"SEC. 6. Subdivision (b) of section 1 of the act of March 2, 1929 (45 Stat. 1513), as amended (U.S.C., supp. VII, title 8, sec. 106 (a) (b)), is amended as follows: Whenever in said subdivision the words 'a fee of $20' occur they shall be amended to read 'a fee of $10'."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know what this is. I should like to have an explanation of the changes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, this House a few weeks ago passed this bill almost unanimously. There was only one amendment which the House attached to it, and that was an amendment to fix the attorneys' fee at $10 instead of $25.

Mr. SNELL. What fees are those?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Attorneys' fees in naturalization cases. But the bill as a whole reduces the naturalization fees in State courts and Federal courts. The Senate has added amendments. We fixed a charge for a certified copy $5 and the Senate has by amendment reduced that to $1. That is agreeable to the committee. It has been adopted unanimously by the Senate and there seems to be no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The bill which we passed provided for a reduction from $25 to $10?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is true.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand the Senate amendment, they have put that back from $10 to $25?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; that is the section which fixes a limitation upon attorneys' fees which may be charged for legal service in naturalization cases before courts.

Mr. SNELL. Does the minority member of the committee know that the gentleman expected to call this up?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes. I have spoken to him.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I am the minority member. It is satisfactory to me.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. If the gentleman will permit, I might state that a veteran who has lost his certificate is now required to pay for a duplicate. The bill as passed by the House eliminated this charge upon the veteran and the Senate left that provision of the House bill alone. A veteran under this bill would not be required to pay anything for a certified copy of that certificate. Any other person who has lost his certificate, instead of paying $5 for a new certificate, according to the Senate amendment, must pay only $1. I wish to concur in that amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand it, this amendment does not deal with anything except the reduction in fees?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is all.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Another question. Has the gentleman taken this up with the committee or the minority representatives on the committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I have.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. And the gentleman states that it is satisfactory to them?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It is satisfactory to them.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, with that assurance, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how large fees are provided for loss of naturalization certificates?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. One-dollar fee for a new certificate of declaration in lieu of a lost, destroyed, or mutilated certificate of citizenship or declaration of intention.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN]?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it shall be in order tomorrow to continue the call of the Unanimous Consent Calendar and to consider bills under suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have included in my remarks on the resolution this morning a letter from the Clerk of the House, in order that the information contained therein may be available for the benefit of the Members.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the bridge bills on the Consent Calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS LAKE SABINE AT PORT ARTHUR, TEX.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4870) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across Lake Sabine at or near Port Arthur, Tex.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER AT RANDOLPH, MO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2308) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge across the Missouri River at or near Randolph, Mo., authorized to be built by the Kansas City Southern Railway Co., its successors and assigns, by the act of Congress approved May 24, 1928, heretofore extended by acts of Congress approved March 1, 1929, May 14, 1930, February 6, 1931, and May 6, 1932, and January 19, 1933, are hereby further extended 2 and 4 years, respectively, from May 24, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER AT THE DALLES, OREG.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7060) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River near The Dalles, Oreg.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River near The Dalles, Oreg., authorized to be built by The Dalles Bridge Co., a Washington corporation, by the act of Congress approved March 4, 1933, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 8, strike out "the date of approval hereof" and insert in lieu thereof "March 4, 1934."

Mr. PIERCE. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word in order to read a telegram in regard to the two bridge bills, one granting a franchise to the Chandler interests and one granting a franchise to the city of The Dalles, the bridges being 6 miles apart:

THE DALLES, OREG., March 18, 1934.

Hon. WALTER M. PIERCE,
Member of Congress,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Report to you that Dalles City would drop its application for extension of bridge franchise is incorrect. Dalles city agreed to not oppose extension of bridge franchise for Chandler bridge on condition that Chandler interests not oppose the extension of Dalles city franchise. No extensive effort has been made to start Chandler bridge, but a small work has been started evidently to preserve franchise. Dalles city still desires to construct bridge and has merely been delayed by reasons given you in previous telegrams, particularly difficulty in financing proper plans. If both franchises are extended and Chandler bridge is actually built, Dalles city might later decide to not construct because of location of other bridge, but such decision has not been made and it is present desire of city to have franchise extended and to have bridge at this point.

FRED F. THOMPSON, Mayor.

There are two bridges. Two franchises have been granted. We are seeking an extension of time for both, although one is a toll bridge. The Chandler bridge, the one under discussion, is a toll bridge. The other is to be a free bridge to be built by the city of The Dalles. There is no objection to the passing of this bill. I hope there will be no objection on the part of anyone representing the Chandler interests against the bill extending the franchise of the city of The Dalles to build its bridge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Had I known that this bill granted a franchise for the building of a toll bridge by private parties, I would have objected. If the city wants to build a free bridge, why should it want a privately owned toll bridge built anywhere near it? The stage of objection has passed. I thought the other bill was under consideration.

Mr. PIERCE. The city is asking that its franchise, too, be extended.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER NEAR THE DALLES, OREG.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7801) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near The Dalles, Oreg., authorized to be built by Dalles City, by an act of Congress approved February 20, 1931, heretofore extended by act of Congress approved February 11, 1932, and further extended by act of Congress approved February 14, 1933, are hereby further extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from February 20, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TOLL BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT ST. LOUIS

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 7803) authorizing the city of East St. Louis, Ill., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the sponsor of the bill whether this is a toll bridge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It is not my bill. The gentleman from Illinois will be here in a moment. However, it is not a question whether it is a toll bridge or a private bridge. The question is whether it should be permitted to be built.

Mr. ELTSE of California. In the report it is stated that this is designed to relieve one of the worst cases of traffic conditions found anywhere. Is this bridge to come in competition with an already operating toll bridge?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SCHAEFER] introduced this bill. The situation in front of St. Louis is that we have a toll bridge at the northern end of the city owned by a private individual. That bill was passed before I was in Congress. At the time the bill was introduced I begged the man that was going to construct the bridge not to have the bill introduced, feeling that he would not make any money, and what I told him at that time proved to be true. The bridge is in the hands of a receiver. Then we have a private bridge belonging to the McKinley system between this bridge and the proposed bridge.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is that a toll bridge?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A toll bridge. Then we have the Eads Bridge, which is a toll bridge, but St. Louis has a deal on to make it a free bridge. We have a city-owned bridge that we spent over $10,000,000 to build in order to let everyone come to St. Louis free. I do not believe this bridge here will ever be built, nor do I think it a necessity, but I again repeat I do not object when a city desires to build a bridge.

Mr. ELTSE of California. If the other bridges have not paid and are at the present time in the hands of receivers, why should another toll bridge be built there?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think we have seven bridges across the Mississippi River between Peoria and Cairo, and every one of them in the hands of a receiver. I am trying to stop private toll bridges from being built. The bonds on the bridges referred to sold at par, $100, and you can go out now and buy the bonds for $5. My constituents bought the bonds. I want to protect them from the private toll-bridge promoter.

Mr. ELTSE of California. If the other bridges are in the hands of receivers and we add another bridge to the list, that will make the situation worse.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. A city will be responsible for the bonds, not a private corporation. This bridge will connect the heart of the city of East St. Louis and the heart of St. Louis. As I said I do not think the bridge will ever be constructed, but the fact that a municipality wants to build it makes me withdraw my objection. I have no objection when a municipality, a State, or a subdivision thereof wants to build a bridge. I started the fight on the privately owned toll bridge promoter 7 years ago. I have him out of the picture, and I want to keep him out. I am opposing the construction of a toll bridge by private parties in south St. Louis. They flood me with letters. They have the labor unions after me now, but I feel the principle for which I stand is sound, and I will continue my opposition. You should realize I am trying to protect the public from being sold bonds that will eventually be worthless.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask our colleague from Missouri what there is about this toll bridge that connects his St. Louis with East St. Louis that makes it different from any other toll bridge that has been stopped here so frequently?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In order to answer the gentleman from Texas I must repeat what I have said so often on the floor. May I say to the gentleman from Texas and the Members of the House that I have at no time objected to the construction of any kind of a bridge, toll bridge or otherwise, where a municipality, a State, or a subdivision thereof desired to build it, but I do object to private individuals building toll bridges. A city desires to build this bridge.

Mr. BLANTON. I have no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I do not care whether the gentleman has or not. It does not make any difference to me. I am like the gentleman from Texas, when I think my argument is sound I go through with it.

Mr. BLANTON. This may mean something to "the forty-ninth State" of the Union.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It does not mean a thing to me. I am telling the gentleman my position, just as he would do if he viewed this situation as I do.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the city of East St. Louis, Ill., its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets, in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the city of East St. Louis, Ill., its successors and assigns, all such rights and powers to enter upon land and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, maintenance, and operation of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The said city of East St. Louis, Ill., its successors and assigns, is hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge, and the rates of toll so fixed shall be the legal rates until changed by the Secretary of War under the authority contained in the act of March 23, 1906.

SEC. 4. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to amortize the cost of such bridge and its approaches, including reasonable interest and financing cost, as soon as possible, under reasonable charges, but within a period not to exceed 30 years from the completion thereof. After a sinking fund sufficient for such amortization shall have been so provided, such bridge shall thereafter be maintained and operated free of tolls, or the rates of toll shall thereafter be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 5. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill authorizing the city of East St. Louis, Ill., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Sts. in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "its successors and assigns."

Page 2, line 1, strike out the word "toll" and after the word "bridge", insert "and approaches thereto."

And amend the title so as to read:

"A bill authorizing the city of East St. Louis, Ill., to construct, maintain and operate a toll bridge across the Mississippi River at or near a point between Morgan and Wash Streets in the city of St. Louis, Mo., and a point opposite thereto in the city of East St. Louis, Ill."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FREE BRIDGE ACROSS THE DES MOINES RIVER NEAR THE CITY OF KEOKUK, IOWA

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 8040) granting the consent of Congress to the Iowa State Highway Commission and the Missouri Highway Department to maintain a free bridge already constructed across the Des Moines River near the city of Keokuk, Iowa.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Iowa State Highway Commission and the Missouri State Highway Department, and its successors and assigns, to maintain and operate, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, a bridge and approaches thereto already constructed across the Des Moines River near the city of Keokuk, Iowa, which bridge is hereby declared to be a lawful structure to the same extent and in the same manner as if it had been constructed in accordance with the provisions of said act of March 23, 1906.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 8477) authorizing the State Road Commission of West Virginia to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Potomac River at or near Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, W.Va.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to promote interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State Road Commission of West Virginia be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Potomac River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, W.Va., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER AT OR NEAR ASTORIA, OREG.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2545) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I object.

FREE HIGHWAY BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER AT CLOQUET, MINN.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2593) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the St. Louis River at or near Cloquet, Minn.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Louis River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Cloquet, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

FREE HIGHWAY BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER AT LAKE BEMIDJI, MINN.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2594) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the southerly end of Lake Bemidji, Minn.

There being no objection, the bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Minnesota to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the southerly end of Lake Bemidji, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OHIO RIVER NEAR CAIRO, ILL.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2675) creating the Cairo Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I object, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER NEAR ATCHISON, KANS.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 6898) authorizing the city of Atchison, Kans., and the county of Buchanan, Mo., or either of them, or the States of Kansas and Missouri, or either of them, or the highway departments of such States, acting jointly or severally, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Missouri River at or near Atchison, Kans.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Ohio will withdraw his reservation of objection.

This is an authorization for a free bridge at Atchison, over the Missouri River. We have every need in the world for this bridge. There is no free bridge there. There is one at St. Joe and one at Leavenworth, and there is only a 15-foot bridge here where two trucks cannot pass. The two highway departments of the States involved, apparently, are willing to build this bridge.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I may state to the gentleman that I have no objection personally, but I am making this reservation of objection at the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER], who is the ranking member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and who asked me to make this request. Later in the day, or at some other time, if the bill can be returned to, I shall have no objection, but I promised the gentleman from Ohio that I would make this reservation of objection.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Is there any way we can return to the bill today?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I do not know whether we can effect that sort of agreement or not.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I hope the gentleman will not object to the bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over, to be taken up later today or tomorrow, when we call the Consent Calendar.

Mr. McFARLANE. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman object to the building of a free bridge in Kansas, if they want to build it?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman, apparently, did not hear my statement. I am making this reservation of objection at the request of the ranking member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, who is detained in a committee meeting. I feel I must take this course, because I promised the gentleman I would do it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER NEAR CAIRO, ILL.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we may return to Senate 2675, creating the Cairo Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill., for the purpose of asking a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman why he objected to the construction of this bridge by a State commission?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have no objection to the construction of the bridge, but on page 3 of the bill the gentleman will notice that the bonds are retired solely from the sinking fund, which would prohibit the State highway department from putting any money into this bridge, if it saw fit, and then I believe that 40 years is too long a period to allow these bonds to run. The other objection which I have is the fact that you provide a yearly salary of $2,500 to the chairman of the commission, providing a job for this man for 40 years.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. May I make this statement to the gentleman: I tried for years to prevent the construction of a private toll bridge across the Mississippi River at Cairo by private interests, but the bridge was finally constructed. Like all the other private toll bridges it is now in the hands of a receiver.

This bridge will be an outlet to Kentucky. If you do not let the States do this job, some private individual is going to come in here and is going to get a franchise one of these days and then there will be sold to the people a lot of bonds which will some day be worthless.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I may say to the gentleman that if the bill is amended in that particular, and is also amended so that the bonds will be tax exempt, I shall have no objection to the bill.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I think such an amendment should be put in the bill, but I want to repeat I think whenever a municipality wants to construct a bridge it should be allowed to do it and we should not let some private promoter come along and get the franchise. That is what will happen if you do not pass this bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. If the gentleman will submit such amendments to the bill in the meantime, I shall not object when it is called again, but I feel I must object to it at this time.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I shall take that up with the author of the bill; he just stepped in the cloakroom.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection and ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MINNESOTA RIVER NEAR JORDAN, MINN.

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2592, granting the consent of Congress to the State of Minnesota, and Scott County and Carver County in the State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Minnesota River at or near Jordan, Minn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, the report of the Secretary of War states that this is not necessary.

Mr. ARENS. The law does not affect the Minnesota River. The court has held that it is not confined to the Minnesota River.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It seems there is a conflict between the authorities.

Mr. ARENS. The War Department has reversed its opinion.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the State of Minnesota, and Scott County and Carver County in the State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a free bridge and approaches thereto across the Minnesota River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Jordan, Minn., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE COLUMBIA RIVER NEAR ASTORIA, OREG.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I was greatly surprised to hear the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] object to the extension of time for the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River near Astoria, Oreg. Two years ago my colleague Mr. Hawley got that bill through the House, and at that time he answered satisfactorily every question. They want to construct the bridge if they can get the authority and the money. I am surprised to hear the gentleman from Missouri object.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. The bill the gentleman refers to was passed by the House in an omnibus pension bill on a roll call, after that bill had been objected to for several years on the floor of the House. It was opposed because it granted private individuals the right to construct a toll bridge. Some of us felt if a bridge was to be erected the States should build it.

A promoter by the name of Elliott sold them the idea of constructing the bridge. Elliott was promoting toll bridges all over the country. He had as many as 50 bills, some in his own name, others in names of companies he organized, asking for franchises before Congress. I secured his record and put it before the Congress, and as a result he went out of business. I have two objections to this bill. In the first place it is a toll bridge, to be built by private parties, not by the county, State, or municipality. Another thing, it is right at the mouth of the Columbia River, a great stream where our warships could find a safe harbor if necessary.

The gentleman from Oregon was a general in the Army. Does the gentleman realize what could be done to our national defense if we put a bridge across the mouth of the Columbia River? If that bridge were destroyed in time of war, how would our ships get up the river, and if they were up the river at the time, how would they get out? I do not believe that a bridge should be built at the mouth of the Columbia River, and I think the War and Navy Departments should take a hand and oppose one, but if the bridge is to be constructed, by all means let the counties or States construct it and not private parties. I hope I have explained my opposition to my friend from Oregon.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

BRIDGE ACROSS CUMBERLAND RIVER NEAR CARTHAGE, TENN.

The Clerk read the bill (S. 2953) granting the consent of Congress to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Cumberland River at or near Carthage, Smith County, Tenn.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill was originally introduced into the House by me, and I am most anxious to have it passed. The report of the Secretary of War is on file and is favorable.

The bill grants the consent of Congress to the highway department of the State of Tennessee to construct and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, near the town of Carthage, Tenn., in Smith County, in my district.

This bill was introduced by me on March 2, 1934, and is H.R. No. 8439.

The report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to which the bill was referred, having considered the same, reported favorably and recommends the passage of the bill. It has the approval of the War and Agricultural Departments. I move the immediate passage of the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Cumberland River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Carthage, Smith County, Tenn., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS BLACK RIVER NEAR POCAHONTAS, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8237, to legalize a bridge across Black River at or near Pocahontas, Ark.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Reserving the right to object, I notice that the language on the calendar is a little different with reference to that bill. We have not had an opportunity to go over all of these bills. What is the difference between that and the regular bill?

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. The highway department proceeded to construct the bridge, after the original time had expired, under agreement with the War Department that the bill would be passed legalizing what would be done.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Has the bridge been built?

Mr. MILLER. It is practically finished now.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Are there any complications about it?

Mr. MILLER. None whatever.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the bridge now being constructed across Black River at or near Pocahontas, Ark., by the Arkansas State Highway Commission, if completed in accordance with the plans accepted by the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War as providing suitable facilities for navigation and operated as a free bridge, shall be a lawful structure, and shall be subject to the conditions and limitations of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, other than those requiring the approval of plans by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers before the bridge is commenced.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER NEAR NEW BOSTON, ILL.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8429, to revive and reenact the act entitled "An act authorizing D. S. Prentiss, R. A. Salladay, Syl F. Histed, William M. Turner, and John H. Rahilly, their heirs, legal representatives, and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the town of New Boston, Ill.", approved March 3, 1931.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this is a private bridge?

Mr. MILLIGAN. A private toll bridge.

Mr. CARTER of California. Reserving the right to object, is it constructed by a private concern?

Mr. MILLIGAN. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. FRANCIS RIVER NEAR LAKE CITY, ARK.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8438, to legalize a bridge across St. Francis River at or near Lake City, Ark.

Mr. MOTT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, one of the most important bridge bills, a bill providing for a toll bridge which will be of vital interest to everybody on the Pacific coast, a bridge which links the Pacific Coast Highway between San Diego and Victoria, British Columbia, has just been objected to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] on account of the fact that it was a private toll bridge. In a technical sense it is, of course, a private toll bridge, but the corporation which will build this bridge holds the title to it in trust for the people of Clatsop County, Oreg., and the city of Astoria, Oreg., and when the bridge is paid for by the tolls charged it is to be deeded to the public body. No toll bridge in the United States could be more important than this one at the mouth of the Columbia River. There are at least a dozen bridges on the Pacific Coast Highway over navigable streams. Such bridges have become necessities, and they must be built, whether by public or private corporations, and if that is to be the attitude of gentlemen here, that objection must be raised to every toll bridge not directly built by a public body, then I wish to give notice now that I shall object to every toll-bridge bill that is offered at this session of the Congress. I will object to every toll-bridge bill on the calendar today.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOTT. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It was about 6 or 7 years ago when Mr. Hawley, of Oregon, introduced that bill. The bill was prevented from passing for years, and finally it passed this House when a number of bills were put in an omnibus bill and passed by a roll call.

I investigated this proposed franchise very thoroughly. I had much correspondence with the people at Astoria. Ever since that time I have been opposing private toll bridges on the floor of this House. I stand for a sound principle. In this instance there is more objection than one to this bridge. I must go back and repeat what I said a few minutes ago. In the first place, an individual wants to build a toll bridge. If it is feasible from a financial standpoint to build that bridge, let me ask the gentleman why the State of Oregon and the adjoining State or the city of Astoria does not build the bridge?

Mr. MOTT. If I can convince the gentleman, will he withdraw his objection and let this bridge bill go through now, without waiting for the next Consent Calendar day?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Well, will the gentleman just answer my question: Where is the submarine base located with reference to this bridge? Is it up the river or down the river?

Mr. MOTT. It is up the river.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. It is up the river from the point where you want to build the bridge?

Mr. MOTT. Yes.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Now, just suppose this bridge were constructed and it is a concrete bridge.

Mr. MOTT. No; it is not a concrete bridge. It will be a steel bridge.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. That is right, it must be a steel bridge, because it must have a clearance of nearly 300 feet, but suppose the bridge is constructed and we have trouble, and the enemy destroys that bridge, how are the submarines going to get out? How will they get in? Suppose our warships would want to get in?

Mr. MOTT. If there is any chance of having the gentleman withdraw his objection, I should be delighted to make a statement in that regard, and I think I can convince the gentleman. Will the gentleman agree to withdraw his objection today and let the bill pass now if I can convince him that this bridge will not interfere with the submarine base, in case the bridge should be blown up in war time, and if I can further convince him that the bridge is being built in the public interest and is not a hindrance to navigation?

Mr. MILLIGAN. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I shall be willing to talk to the gentleman about it, but today I cannot withdraw the objection, because I know too much about it. If the gentleman can convince me that the bridge should be constructed, I will not object to it on next Consent Calendar day.

Mr. MOTT. I thank the gentleman for that assurance, but the next regular Consent Calendar day is two weeks from now.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I want him to explain fully why local communities do not construct the bridge, and also want him to give me his views on my argument that it would not be to the interests of our national defense to build this bridge.

I assure the gentleman there is nothing personal in my objection. The RECORD will show I have consistently opposed the construction of this bridge. He should not oppose meritorious projects simply because of an objection to this bill. His people know how I have opposed the bill for years.

The SPEAKER. Regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object. I desire assurance from the gentleman that if I meet his objections today he will withdraw them when we continue the Consent Calendar tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Regular order is demanded. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS PEARL RIVER IN THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8516, granting the consent of Congress to the Board of Supervisors of Leake County, Miss., to construct a bridge across the Pearl River in the State of Mississippi.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, may I get this plain from the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE ST. CLAIR RIVER AT PORT HURON, MICH.

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 8577) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Oregon will reserve his objection. This is simply an extension and does not change the status at all.

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS WABASH RIVER

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 8834) authorizing the owners of Cut-Off Island, Posey County, Ind., to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge or causeway across the old channel of the Wabash River.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS WABASH RIVER

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 8853) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Wabash River at a point in Sullivan County, Ind., to a point opposite on the Illinois shore.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill, Calendar No. 109, was passed over without objection, to be called up later. The Clerk will now report the bill no. 109 on the calendar.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER AT CAIRO, ILL.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2675) creating the Cairo Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DRIVER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. This concludes the call of the bridge bills.

EMERGENCY AID FOR REPAIR OF EARTHQUAKE DAMAGE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 7599) authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to nonprofit corporations for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes and for other purposes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman make a brief explanation?

Mr. McCORMACK. This is a matter with regard to which everybody is in harmony. The gentleman from California [Mr. EVANS] is in complete agreement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7599) to provide emergency aid for the repair or reconstruction of homes and other property damaged by earthquake, tidal wave, flood, tornado, or cyclone in 1933 and 1934 having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert:

"That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered, through such existing agency or agencies as it may designate, to make loans to nonprofit corporations, with or without capital stock, organized for the purpose of financing the acquisition of home or building sites in replacement of sites formerly occupied by buildings where such sites are declared by public authority to be unsafe by reason of flood, danger of flood, or earthquake, and for the purpose of financing the repair or construction of buildings or structures, or water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood control, communication or transportation systems, damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, or flood in the year 1933, and in the months of January and February 1934, and deemed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be economically useful or necessary.

"Obligations accepted hereunder shall be collateraled—

"(a) In case of loans for the acquisition, repair, or reconstruction of private property, by the obligations of the owner of such property, secured by a paramount lien except as to taxes and special assessments on the property to be acquired, repaired, or reconstructed, or on other property of the borrowers;

"(b) In case of loans for the repair or reconstruction of privately owned water, gas, electric, communication, or transportation systems, by the obligations of the owners of such water, gas, electric, communication, or transportation systems, secured by a lien thereon; and

"(c) In case of loans for the repair or reconstruction of property of municipalities or political subdivisions of States or of their public agencies, including public-school boards and public-school districts, and water, irrigation, sewer, drainage, and flood-control districts, by an obligation of such municipality, political subdivision, public agency, board, or district, payable from any source, including taxation or tax-anticipation warrants.

"In any case in which any such loan is made, in whole or in part, for the acquisition of land in replacement of land privately owned and declared by public authority to be unsafe by reason of flood, danger of flood, or earthquake, such unsafe property shall be conveyed by the owner thereof, without cost, to the county, municipality, or district in which such property is situated.

"The Corporation shall not deny otherwise acceptable applications for loans for repair or reconstruction of buildings or structures, or water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood control, communication, or transportation systems of municipalities, political subdivisions, public agencies, boards, or districts because of constitutional or other legal inhibitions affecting the collateral. The collateral obligations shall have maturities not exceeding 10 years in case of loans made under paragraph (a) of this act and not exceeding 20 years in case of loans under paragraphs (b) and (c) of this act.

"The Corporation shall prescribe such regulations as will most effectively expedite the repair and construction provided for this act and effectively carry out the emergency-relief purposes of this act.

"The aggregate of loans made under this act shall not exceed $5,000,000."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

CHARLES WEST,
W. E. EVANS,
Managers on the part of the House.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H.R. 7599) to provide emergency aid for the repair or reconstruction of homes and other property damaged by earthquake, tidal wave, flood, tornado, or cyclone in 1933 and 1934, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill amended section 203 of the National Industrial Recovery Act to authorize loans by the President through the Administrator of Public Works to nonprofit corporations to finance projects for the repair or reconstruction of buildings, private homes, structures, lands, and public-service systems damaged or destroyed by earthquake, tidal wave, flood, tornado, or cyclone in the years 1933 and 1934 and deemed by the Administrator to be economically useful.

The Senate amendment, which is in the nature of a substitute for the House bill, makes provision for similar loans through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and in addition authorizes loans to finance the acquisition of home or building sites in replacement of sites formerly occupied by buildings where such sites are declared by public authority to be unsafe by reason of flood, danger of flood, or earthquake. The application of the provisions of the Senate amendment is limited, however, to cases of damages occurring in 1933 and during the months of January and February 1934, and the aggregate of loans made for the purposes of the act by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are not to exceed $3,000,000.

The conference agreement retains the provisions of the Senate amendment with respect to the making of loans but increases the aggregate loan limit to $5,000,000. Provisions are also included to the effect that the corporation may designate an existing agency or agencies for making the loans and authorizing the corporation to prescribe regulations to effectively expedite and carry out the purposes of the bill.

The Senate amendment amends the title of the bill to correspond to the changes made to the text of the bill, and the House recedes.

JOHN W. MCCORMACK,
CHARLES WEST,
W. E. EVANS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported out of the Committee on Ways and Means unanimously; it passed the House by unanimous consent; it went over to the Senate, where a substitute was provided; and the conferees have agreed unanimously.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize loans to be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for emergency aid for the repair or construction of homes and other property damaged by earthquake, tidal wave, floods, acts of God, during the year 1933 and January and February of 1934.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The bill provides for loans and not for grants?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; it provides for loans.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. EVANS. It provides for loans secured by liens on the property to be improved.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts has correctly stated the purpose of the bill. It is almost identical with the bill which was passed by the House except it places the administration of the fund under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation instead of the Public Works Administration. It accomplishes the very same purposes as undertaken by the House bill. Speedy action is of great importance in the administration of the law, and that is why the loan power is transferred to the R.F.C.

The reason this change was made by the Senate was because nonprofit organizations have already been organized to administer such relief during the year 1933 and can administer this relief without any reorganization. This will expedite the giving of relief under the measure.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. What was the limit on the amount that might be loaned?

Mr. EVANS. The House bill did not limit the amount of relief that could be granted. The Senate bill limited it to $3,000,000. The conference report raises this amount to $5,000,000, and we hope that amount will be sufficient. I hope the conference report may be approved. It will mean a great deal to many home and property owners who have suffered greatly.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the Senate bills on the Consent Calendar.

CLAIM OF TURTLE MOUNTAIN BAND OF CHIPPEWA INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 326) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there is no Department report on this bill.

Mr. SINCLAIR. I may say to the gentleman that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was present before the Indian Affairs Committee when hearings were held on this bill, and he suggested the amendment that the gentleman will find there, and the bill was recommended unanimously by the committee.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Why is it necessary to have this bill passed? Why does not the Department have power to handle this matter rather than the Department referring it to the Court of Claims?

Mr. SINCLAIR. This is the usual way of handling claims of this nature where the Indians have felt aggrieved. Where a particular band of Indians has felt aggrieved and that they have certain claims that must be adjudicated, the matter cannot be taken up properly by the Department. The Department is not authorized to make complete and final settlement. This is the only method provided for presenting the claims and having them finally adjudicated.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Over a period of years it would appear that there are two branches of this tribe of Indians?

Mr. SINCLAIR. Yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The particular tribe making this claim has never been recognized by the Department?

Mr. SINCLAIR. They have been recognized, but they have never themselves acceded or agreed to the settlement made by the main body of the tribe. I may say that this group of Indians are a branch of the main tribe and have not been properly taken care of.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I withdraw my reservation.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That jurisdiction be, and hereby is, conferred upon the Court of Claims, with right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States by either party, notwithstanding the lapse of time, statutes of limitations, waiver, release, settlement heretofore made or directed by any act of Congress, to hear, adjudicate, and render judgment according to right and justice and as upon a full and fair arbitration, on any and all claims not heretofore determined and adjudicated on their merits by the Court of Claims or the Supreme Court of the United States, arising under any treaty, ratified or unratified, act of Congress, agreement or understanding, verbal or written, Executive order, or treaty with any other tribes or nations of Indians by the authorized agents or representatives of the United States relating to, affecting, or violating the land occupancy or other rights of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota, including the band of Chief or Thomas Little Shell, and other isolated bands of Chippewas of North Dakota and Montana.

SEC. 2. Any and all claims against the United States within the purview of this act shall be forever barred unless suit be instituted or petition or petitions filed as herein provided in the Court of Claims within 5 years from the date of the approval of this act, and such suit shall make the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota party or parties plaintiff and the United States of America party defendant. The claim or claims of the band or bands aforementioned may be presented separately or jointly by petition, subject, however, to amendment. The petition or petitions shall be verified by the respective attorney or attorneys employed to prosecute such claim or claims under contract with the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians, approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, as provided by law. Official letters, papers, documents, reports, and records, or affidavits on file in the Interior Department, or certified copies thereof, may be used in evidence; and the departments of the Government shall furnish to the attorney or attorneys of said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands such treaties, agreements, papers, reports, correspondence, affidavits, or records as may be needed by the attorney or attorneys of said band or bands of Indians.

SEC. 3. That if any claim or claims be submitted to said court it shall determine the rights of the parties thereto, notwithstanding lapse of time, statutes of limitation, waiver, or release, and any payment which may have been made by the United States upon any claim so submitted shall not be pleaded as an estoppel, but may be pleaded as a set-off in any suit; and the United States shall be allowed credit subsequent to the date of any law, treaty, or agreement under which the claims arise for any sum or sums heretofore paid or expended for the benefit of said Indians.

SEC. 4. That if the Court of Claims shall determine that the United States, under the provisions of any agreement or understanding, verbal or written, Executive order, law, or treaty referred to in section 1 hereof, has unlawfully appropriated or disposed of any property belonging to the said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians, or its or their members, or to which the said Indians had the right of title by occupancy; or if the said court shall determine that the United States, under the provisions of any such agreement, Executive order, law, or treaty, herein referred to, under mistake of fact or duress obtained title to or the cession of any land from the said Indians for an inadequate consideration; or if the court shall determine that the United States obtained cessions of land from said band or bands of Indians without obtaining the consent of a majority of the male adult members thereof; or if the court shall determine that the United States, to the loss of said Indians, appropriated to its own use or to the use of any other Indian tribe or band, or permitted white settlers to occupy and acquire title under the public land laws of the United States, to any lands in North Dakota, the title and occupancy of which by long possession by the said Indians had been acknowledged by other tribes and by officials of the United States; or if a portion of the land so claimed by the said band or bands was taken from them by an Executive order for the benefit of any other band or tribe of Indians, without compensation to the said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians, the damages shall be confined to the reasonable money value thereof at the time of such appropriation: Provided, That if the Court of Claims shall determine that the United States, by reason of any delay on the part of its agents or authorized representatives, in submitting for ratification any agreement with the said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians, for the purchase or cession of any land so occupied and possessed by them, or that the Congress of the United States, contrary to the understanding of or oral promise made to said Indians, unduly delayed the ratification of any such agreement whereby any such lands were ceded to the United States, to the detriment and loss of the said Indians, then the said court is hereby authorized to award and enter judgment, as justice and equity may demand, for damages due to such delay at 4 percent per annum of the stipulated or agreed amount set out in any such agreement ceding such lands to the United States, and to compute such interest from the date the said agreement was signed or executed by the said Indians; and with reference to all claims which may be the subject matter of the suits herein authorized, the decree of the court shall be in full settlement of all damages, if any, committed by the Government of the United States and shall annul and cancel all claim, right, and title of the said Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians and to such money or other property.

SEC. 5. Upon the final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 percent of the recovery in each instance, together with all necessary and proper expenses incurred in preparation and prosecution of the suit, to be paid to the respective attorneys employed by the said band or bands of Indians, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said band or bands of Indians. The court shall have jurisdiction and is hereby further authorized to determine what amount of the recovery, if any, shall be awarded to the respective bands who bring suit hereunder.

SEC. 6. The Court of Claims shall have full authority by proper orders and process to bring in and make parties to such suit any other tribe or band of Indians deemed by it necessary or proper to the final determination of the matters in controversy. A copy of the petition shall, in such case, be served upon the Attorney General of the United States, and he, or some attorney from the Department of Justice to be designated by him, is hereby directed to appear and defend the interests of the United States in such case.

SEC. 7. The proceeds of all amounts, if any, recovered for said band or bands of Indians less fees and expenses shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians decreed by said court to be entitled thereto, and shall draw interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum from the date of the judgment or decree: Provided, That actual costs necessary to be incurred by the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians as required by the rules of court in the prosecution of this suit shall be paid out of the funds of said Indians in the Treasury of the United States, upon proper vouchers, to be examined and approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 7, after the word "decree", strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF RATES CHARGED FOR ELECTRICAL ENERGY

The Clerk called the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 74) authorizing necessary funds to conduct investigation regarding rates charged for electrical energy and to prepare report thereon.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask what the purpose of this resolution is? It appears to me that the Federal Government or the Federal Power Commission will have but little authority.

Mr. RANKIN. May I say to the gentleman that it will save time to go ahead and pass this resolution now, because the Chair has agreed to recognize me to move passage of this bill under suspension. It will save a lot of debate to pass this resolution now.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. This is a resolution that the Speaker has indicated he will allow to be called up under suspension. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. RANKIN. Why not go ahead and pass the resolution now? There will be little, if any, opposition.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I shall object to it under these circumstances. If this resolution is going to come up under suspension——

Mr. RANKIN. It will come up under suspension.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. If the gentleman does not agree to have it passed over without prejudice, I shall have to object.

Mr. RANKIN. We are going to put it through, if possible, and, if the gentleman objects, I am going to ask recognition to move to suspend the rules. The Chair has agreed to recognize me on that motion, so it will save time to let it go through this way.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Inasmuch as the Speaker has declared his intention to take this up under suspension, I shall object.

GRANT OF EASEMENT TO THE COUNTY OF GREENE, MO.

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2550) granting an easement over certain lands to the Springfield special road district in the county of Greene, State of Missouri, for road purposes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask why it is the Federal Government has to pay $5,000 in taxes on land that it owns? There is consideration involved here of $5,000 for a strip of land which the Federal Government is needing for an easement.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUFFIN] introduced this bill. We had this matter up in committee and the facts are that this road is being built by an improvement district which raises its funds by taxation of benefits assessed against the individual abutting property. The road runs around this particular hospital of the Government and this is the amount that the engineers have agreed that the Government ought to contribute.

Mr. ELTSE of California. This is an investment rather than a tax?

Mr. MILLER. It is in the form of an assessment.

Mr. ELTSE of California. It is not delinquent taxes?

Mr. MILLER. No.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Or a claim for taxes on the part of the State government?

Mr. MILLER. No. This is not a claim for taxes. It is simply a payment by the Government as its contribution toward the building of the road.

Mr. ELTSE of California. As an improvement assessment?

Mr. MILLER. That is right.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an easement over the following-described land, to wit: A strip of land 30 feet wide off the right side of the following-described center line: Beginning 40 feet south of the northeast corner of the northwest quarter northeast quarter section 34, township 29 north, range 22 west; thence south 2,509.91 feet; thence to the left on a curve with 146.19 feet radius 225.91 feet, except that part of the curve lying in the southwest corner southeast quarter northeast quarter of said section; thence east on east and west half section line 376.89 feet; thence to the right on a curve with 146.19 feet radius 92 feet; thence continuing on same curve but with 30 feet on both sides of the center line a distance of 41.5 feet; thence continuing on the same curve but with 30 feet on the right of the center line a distance of 92.41 feet; thence south 2,235.707 feet; thence on a curve to the right with 287.9 feet radius with 30 feet on both sides of the center line a distance of 446.417 feet; thence west with 30 feet on the right or north side of the center line to the southeast corner of the west half southeast quarter southwest quarter of said section; also a strip of land 30 feet wide off the west side of the northwest quarter southwest quarter; also a strip of land 30 feet wide off of the west side of the northwest quarter of said section except the north 324 feet; also a curve with a 100-foot radius on the center line at the northeast corner of the northwest quarter northeast quarter. All of the above described is in section 34, township 29 north, range 22 west, and is a strip of land 30 feet wide off the east, south, and west sides of the United States Hospital for Defective Delinquents, Springfield, Mo., except that at two places where curves occur the full 60-foot width of the right-of-way is included, be, and the same is hereby, granted to the State of Missouri for public-road purposes; and the Attorney General is, upon the passage of this act, authorized to execute a deed containing such restrictions consistent with the character of the grant for public-road purposes as he deems necessary.

SEC. 2. The said easement is granted solely for road purposes, and shall revert to and become the absolute property of the United States of America if used for any purpose whatsoever other than that for which this donation is made, or in the event it is abandoned or vacated as a public road.

SEC. 3. Not to exceed $5,000 of the unexpended balance of any appropriation available for the construction or maintenance of the United States Hospital for Defective Delinquents shall be available in the discretion of the Attorney General for payment to the proper authorities of the Springfield special road district of Greene County, Mo., as representing the full amount to be contributed by the Government toward the cost of constructing the road herein provided for, and in lieu of accrued taxes, if any, assessed against said property, and the said amount shall remain available for this purpose until expended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LOSS OF INTEREST-BEARING BONDS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1528, to amend section 3702, Revised Statutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we on this side have had no opportunity to study this bill. May I ask what the bill covers?

Mr. WALTER. This bill is designed to take care of cases where Government bonds have been lost and where it is impossible to prove that the exact bond has been lost. Under existing law it is necessary to prove that a certain bond was lost or destroyed. This bill was designed to take care of certain cases where a shipment of mail, for instance, is destroyed, and to prove that the bond was in that shipment. The Treasury Department has recommended that this bill be passed with an amendment as suggested.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Of the Committee on Claims?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is this bill designed to cover any certain individual case?

Mr. WALTER. No. It is to take care of a general situation. Under existing law it is necessary to prove that bond no. so-and-so was actually burned or destroyed at a certain place on a certain date. It is impossible, under the law, as I understand it, to show, for instance, that I sent a bond by mail and the entire shipment of mail was destroyed.

Under such circumstances, under the present law, it would be impossible to be reimbursed unless you knew the actual number of the bond.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Has the Treasury Department made any report in the matter?

Mr. WALTER. Yes; the Treasury Department has reported recommending the bill, with an amendment which I have included in the measure.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3702 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(2) Whenever it appears to the Secretary of the Treasury by clear and unequivocal proof that any interest-bearing bond of the United States, fully identified by number and description, has, without bad faith on the part of the owner, been lost to such owner under such circumstances and for such period of time after it has matured or has become redeemable pursuant to a call for redemption as in the judgment of the Secretary would indicate that it had been destroyed or irretrievably lost, is not held by any person as his own property and will not be presented by a bona fide holder for value, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to make payment of the amount which would have been due on such bond had it been presented at the time it became due and payable. But no payment shall be made on account of interest represented by coupons claimed to have been attached to a missing coupon bond at the time of its loss or destruction, unless the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that such coupons have not been paid and are in fact destroyed or can never be made the basis of a claim against the United States: Provided, That where relief is authorized under the provisions of this paragraph the bond of indemnity required by section 3703 of the Revised Statutes shall be in a penal sum of double the amount to be paid and shall be executed by an approved corporate surety. The Secretary of the Treasury is further authorized to make from time to time such regulations and restrictions as he may prescribe with respect to the administration of this paragraph.

"(3) The term 'bond' wherever used in this section and in sections 3703, 3704, and 3705 of the Revised Statutes shall be deemed, for the purposes of these sections, to include any interest-bearing obligation of the United States or those issued on a discount basis."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2347) to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection? This simply amends the bill to include the Columbia River and the Snake River and put them in the same category as the Mississippi and Warrior Rivers. The bill is recommended by the Department and has been reported unanimously by the committee. It also has the sanction of the Inland Waterways Corporation, and I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I renew my objection, because I am opposed to any extension of the activities of the Inland Waterways Corporation beyond what they are at the present time.

I object, Mr. Speaker.

THE WHALING INDUSTRY

The Clerk called the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 15) extending to the whaling industry certain benefits granted under section 11 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we on this side have had no time to study this measure, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OF RADIO ACT OF 1927

The Clerk called the bill (S. 2660) to amend the Radio Act of 1927, approved February 23, 1927, as amended (44 Stat. 1162).

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request with respect to this bill; that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The SPEAKER. That concludes the calling of the bridge bills and Senate bills on the Consent Calendar. Motions to suspend the rules will be next in order, and the Chair desires to say that on two of these bills a longer time than 20 minutes on the side has been given. The Chair hopes that with respect to other bills there will be no requests to extend the time, as this defeats the object of the rule entirely. If no one else objects to such requests, the Chair will have to object.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

ELECTRICAL-ENERGY RATES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (S.J.Res. 74) authorizing necessary funds to conduct investigation regarding rates charged for electrical energy and to prepare report thereon.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas accurate and comprehensive information regarding the rates charged for electrical energy and its service to residential, rural, commercial, and industrial consumers throughout the United States is required by the Congress and other governmental agencies; and

Whereas no compilation of such rates and charges has been made by any official body: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Federal Power Commission be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate and compile the rate charged for electric energy and its service to residential, rural, commercial, and industrial consumers throughout the United States by private and municipal corporations and to report such rates, together with an analysis thereof, to the Congress at the earliest practicable date.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this investigation the Federal Power Commission is authorized and directed to utilize, as far as may be practicable, information relating to electric rates and rate schedules filed with the public-service commissions of the several States and shall have power to require, by general or special orders, corporations engaged in the sale of electricity to file with the Commission, in such form as the Commission may prescribe, schedules of rates charged to all classes of consumers and to submit to the Commission reports, or answers in writing to specific questions, furnishing such information as the Commission may require relative to the sale of electrical energy and its service to consumers. Such reports and answers shall be made under oath, or otherwise, as the Commission may prescribe, and shall be filed with the Commission within such reasonable period as the Commission may prescribe, unless additional time be granted in any case by the Commission. The Commission, or its duly authorized agent, or agents, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any documentary evidence relative to the sale of electrical energy or its service to consumers by any corporation engaged in the sale of electricity.

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to make available from the funds which have been or may be appropriated for expenditure subject to his discretion the amount which, in his judgment, is necessary for the purposes of this investigation and preparation of a report.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from Ohio, who is coming over in a moment, I demand a second.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this measure is identical with House Joint Resolution 236, introduced by me sometime ago. The object of it is to empower and direct the Federal Power Commission to investigate, compile, and publish the rates charged for electrical energy to residential, rural, commercial, and industrial consumers by private and municipal corporations.

This is one of the most important measures that has come before this Congress. We have today in this far-flung country, hundreds, and possibly thousands of different producers of electric power which is being distributed and sold at retail, and there is no way on earth, except by a resolution of this kind, to get a correct and complete report of the rates which are being charged in the various localities.

We find that in some places producers are charging two or three times as much for electric energy as is being charged in other places, even in the same State.

I read into the RECORD last night a statement showing that certain farmers in Minnesota were being charged 10 or 15 times as much for electrical energy as was being charged in the State of Washington or as is now being charged in Tupelo, Miss., under the T.V.A. yardstick. I read into the RECORD several days ago statistics showing that the power rates were all out of line in nearly every State in the Union.

In my own State it is impossible to find out what the power rates are in all municipalities, because the power companies in the small publication they issue give only a few of the larger towns. I showed that in one town in Mississippi 4,000 kilowatt-hours of electrical energy for 1 month would cost $20.90, and in another town in the same State they would cost more than $200. The same condition prevails in other States.

In the State of Maine, for instance, I find that in Portland and Old Orchard, 100 kilowatt-hours of electric energy will cost the residential consumer $82, while in Tupelo, Miss., or any other municipality in that area served by the T.V.A., it will cost $8.90.

Inequalities in power rates prevail in every section of the country. We have tried every way to get a complete report of the rates charged, and the only way we have found to get these rates is through a resolution of this kind.

We first asked that these rates be taken by the Bureau of the Census. It was agreed that the C.W.A. would furnish the funds, but on investigation the administration decided that these rates should be collected by the Federal Power Commission, and for that reason I changed the resolution before it was introduced. Senator NORRIS introduced it in the Senate, where it was passed several weeks ago.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman has time.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman to answer the question.

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will yield me 3 minutes, then I will yield to him.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if this information is not now available in the Federal Trade Commission or in some of the State commissions?

Mr. RANKIN. No; it is not. If it were, I certainly would not ask for the passage of this resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is not available in the State commissions?

Mr. RANKIN. No; it is not. Besides that, there are several States which do not have public-utilities commissions with jurisdiction over electric rates. Therefore, it has been impossible to get this information from those States. I will say further that in those States which do have utilities commissions which gather this information, we can get it from them, and it will greatly reduce the expense of this investigation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman any knowledge of what the cost of this resolution would be?

Mr. RANKIN. No; the Census Bureau estimated that if they had to go out in the field and collect the information as they do the census, it would cost something under $300,000, but the Federal Power Commission will have access to the channels to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers, and, therefore, in my opinion, it will not cost anything like that amount but a great deal less; for the reason that where that information can be gathered in the way the gentleman indicates, it will be furnished to the Federal Power Commission by the utilities commissions of the various States where it is available.

Mr. EVANS. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. EVANS. Will this apply to concerns doing business entirely within a State?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; if they furnish it. Of course, if they are doing business entirely within a State, it may be that they would not volunteer to furnish this information.

Mr. EVANS. Does the gentleman understand that the Federal Power Commission would have jurisdiction to make an investigation of utilities operating entirely within a State?

Mr. RANKIN. I think they would, where they voluntarily furnish it. Some of the utilities, at least, are anxious to have this resolution passed, because they want this information themselves, and they cannot get it.

Mr. EVANS. I am not intending to express any opinion of my own, but I was wondering if that question had been raised?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. After this information has been obtained, can the gentleman from Mississippi explain what use or benefit will be derived from it insofar as the people of the country getting some benefit from it is concerned?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; I shall be glad to do that. When this information is obtained it will be published in book form. It is very necessary for the Federal Trade Commission itself to have this information. The Tennessee Valley Authority wants this information. Various State governments and many of the State utilities commissions desire to have this information. It will be furnished to them. It will be furnished to the Governors of the various States. It will also be furnished to the various municipalities that desire this information. There are a great many of them today that are begging for it. It will also be furnished to Members of Congress. It will be furnished as a public document in order that the American people in every locality may have access to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has answered my questions quite thoroughly, and I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. The object is to establish a yardstick to show what the cost of electricity should be.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. We are trying to bring uniform rates to the American people.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman realizes that the capital stock of these companies, which has been greatly written up, is a factor in making these rates; is it not?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; but we do not propose to investigate the capital structure. That would be impossible. I notice that the National Electric Light Association, which has been succeeded by the Edison Electric Institute publishes a volume, a copy of which I have in my possession, in which they give the rates in a few municipalities in each State, but they do not give any of the costs on which the rate structure is based. We talked that matter over and decided it was best not to try to go into that because it would be interminable.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman is aware that the Federal Trade Commission is in the midst of an investigation which shows a tremendous write-up of values upon which rates are based.

Mr. RANKIN. A tremendous watering of stocks.

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes. I am aware of that.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Mississippi 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. BAKEWELL. I notice your resolution provides that the Federal Power Commission shall have power to require corporations engaged in the sale of electricity, and so on, to furnish certain information. This power could not be given provided the electricity was all sold within the limits of one State?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman may be correct about that.

Mr. BAKEWELL. And therefore there should be a change in the wording of the resolution.

Mr. RANKIN. That cannot be done under suspension of the rules.

Mr. BAKEWELL. This commission is to find what the charge for electricity is in different parts of the country, from both publicly owned utilities and privately owned utilities; the gentleman himself has referred to it as giving a measuring rod of values.

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; a yardstick.

Mr. BAKEWELL. My question is whether this commission in the case of a publicly owned utility will, in seeking to ascertain the actual charge, seek also to determine what, if any, allowance has been made for interest on the investment, and for taxes, which would have had to be paid were it a private corporation? In other words, is the set-up going to be such that there will be any real comparative standard? That makes a great difference in the value of any report that may be made as a result of the investigation.

Mr. RANKIN. I may say to the gentleman from Connecticut that the Federal Power Commission could not afford to go into an examination of all the elements of cost and, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania said, all the stock issues, all the holding companies and all the subsidiaries. What is sought to be accomplished by this resolution is a compilation, what might be called a census, of the power rates now charged; and it is our hope that this can be done at little expense and that the information may be brought down to date from time to time and kept on file so that all the American people may have access to it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does the gentleman know how many States already have this information readily available?

Mr. RANKIN. I think all but seven or eight have such information, or are in position to obtain it.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Then the cost of compiling this information should not reach a great figure?

Mr. RANKIN. My honest opinion is that this information can be furnished largely through the mails, and that it could be secured at a very small cost.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. And has the Department the personnel available to collect this information?

Mr. RANKIN. I think so.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. As I recall the resolution when it was before the committee it provides that the Federal Trade Commission shall not only make a compilation of the rates charged for electric energy throughout the country, but it is also required to make an analysis of the different rates.

Mr. RANKIN. That means this, I will say to the gentleman from Michigan, that the different systems of charges, for instance, such as the "block system", the "Wright demand system", the "step system", and others, will be expressed in the terms of some common, simplified form so that a man of ordinary intelligence can look at it and tell just exactly what that energy costs the ultimate consumer.

Mr. MAPES. That is what I had in mind.

Mr. BAKEWELL. I fear the gentleman has not yet answered my question. I would like to know how these statistics are to be made of any value when it is not known what the true cost is, by reason of concealed factors. For instance, the publicly owned utilities pay no taxes, pay no interest on the investment, and make no provision for depreciation.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Connecticut that I am surprised that an educator should ask how these statistics are to be made of any value.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Unless you get the full facts.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

You take a census of other things; you take a census of manufacturers, a census of agriculture.

Mr. BAKEWELL. They are all working under the same conditions.

Mr. RANKIN. In investigations such as those to which the gentleman refers the investigator asks none of the manufacturers of a given article what it costs to produce the article. We do not ask farmers what it costs to produce the articles they grow in taking an agricultural census. This is a compilation of statistics showing rates that are charged to the ultimate consumers of electricity throughout the country.

Mr. BAKEWELL. That is perfectly true, but it is of no value to us if important factors are left out of consideration entirely. It would be analogous to a comparison of the cost of furniture manufactured by a private concern with the cost of furniture manufactured at the proposed Government plant at Reedsville, W.Va.; the two factories are not working under the same conditions at all; and the comparative figure means nothing.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Connecticut that he is not in agreement with the private producers of electric power, because they publish a large book to give their people information as to what rates they are charging; but they say not a single word as to costs.

Mr. BAKEWELL. That has nothing to do with it, because they are all working on a private basis.

Mr. RANKIN. But private bases differ.

Mr. BAKEWELL. They are working on bases different from those of publicly owned utilities.

Mr. RANKIN. They have some publicly owned plants recorded in this book.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. SADOWSKI. In my opinion the information to be developed as a result of this investigation will be of value to every Member of the House.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Oh, it would be interesting.

Mr. SADOWSKI. My city, Detroit, is charging three times the rate that is being charged in Washington. I did not know that before. I would like to have some comparative figures as to the rates being charged all over the United States.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Michigan that the record shows that the city of Detroit pays practically three times as much for electricity as is paid right across the river in Windsor, Canada; yet Windsor transmits her power 250 miles from Niagara Falls. If the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BAKEWELL] will take the address I made in the House here on February 7 and read the rates which I quoted from his own State and take the comparisons in the various States as between municipalities or as between different points served by the same company, he will see where this information will be very, very valuable to the people of a locality in arriving at a determination as to what would be a reasonable charge for electric energy.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Now the gentleman is getting down to the point, namely, a reasonable charge.

Mr. RANKIN. A reasonable charge; yes.

Mr. BAKEWELL. May I ask the gentleman this question? When the Tennessee Valley Authority was set up there was an effort made at the other end of the Capitol to have the same system of accounting used that is required in the District of Columbia, which did not succeed. My only point is that unless we have something of that sort these comparisons are not going to mean very much to us, and we will be misled by the fact one pays a little less and one pays a little more. The total charges must be taken into consideration.

Mr. RANKIN. We want electric energy charges based on the cost of production and not based on all this watered stock that has been referred to here. [Applause.] It was that element of promoters headed by Samuel Insull that was approaching the men at the other end of the Capitol, attempting to hamstring the Tennessee Valley Authority in every way possible. We want to get the facts as to the rates charged, and that is all we can get. That is all the National Electric Light Association gives you. We want the facts as to what they are selling energy for, then it is up to the man who is producing it to show that he is basing a certain class of energy on the cost of production. That is what we are after.

Mr. BAKEWELL. May I interrupt a moment? I have no quarrel with the gentleman on that point. We are all in agreement. My only point is I want to see that the report to be made will give the cost of production in both cases, as well as the rates charged.

Mr. RANKIN. That question is not involved here. What we want is a full and complete report of the rates charged in every locality. Let us turn in this blessed sunlight of publicity and you will see a lot of watered power stock evaporate like mist before the morning sun.

When these rates are published and the American people realize how they have been robbed and plundered to pay dividends on watered power stocks, the force of an outraged public opinion will not only squeeze the water out of those stocks, but it will force these power rates down all over the country. My prediction is that the passage of this resolution will save the ultimate consumers of electric energy in this country not less than $50,000,000 a year.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The question was taken; and two thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

SPECIAL STATISTICAL STUDIES

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 2689) to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon payment of the costs thereof, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, let the bill be reported.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Department of Labor be, and hereby is, authorized, within the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, upon the written request of any person, to make special statistical studies relating to employment, hours of work, wages, and other conditions of employment; to prepare from its records special statistical compilations; and to furnish transcripts of its studies, tables, and other records, upon the payment of the actual cost of such work by the person requesting it.

SEC. 2. All moneys hereinafter received by the Department of Labor in payment of the cost of such work shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation of that bureau, service, office, division, or other agency of the Department of Labor which supervised such work, and may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and notwithstanding any other provision of law, for the ordinary expenses of such agency and/or to secure the special services of persons who are neither officers nor employees of the United States.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Labor shall prescribe rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act; and the Secretary of Labor shall make a report to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, giving a detailed statement showing (1) the name of every person for whom work has been performed under the authority of this statute, (2) the nature of the services rendered to him, (3) the price charged for these services by the Department of Labor, and (4) the manner in which the moneys received were deposited or used.

SEC. 4. This act shall cease to be effective 1 year after the date of its enactment.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I say the gentleman from Massachusetts did not speak to me about this bill. May I ask the gentleman why he is asking for the passage of the bill at this time?

Mr. CONNERY. I spoke to the Speaker about this matter two or three days ago, and told him that this was a bill which had unanimously passed the Senate. The bill was referred to the Committee on Labor of the House and received a unanimous report of the Committee on Labor. The Secretary of Labor is very anxious that this bill be passed immediately. If anyone wants to get statistics from the Department of Labor in reference to any industry, hours, wages, or anything else, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor this information may be furnished, but the person requesting the information will have to pay the cost. That is the whole purpose of this bill.

Mr. BYRNS. I have no objection, but I wish the gentleman had spoken to me first.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I did not catch the answer to the gentleman from Tennessee. Will the gentleman tell us how much this bill is going to cost?

Mr. CONNERY. It will not cost the Government a nickel.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The subscribers will pay the cost?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. It will not cost the Government a nickel. The person requesting the information will pay the bill.

Mr. DUFFEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

THE SUGAR BILL

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 8861) to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, with amendments.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding after the word "tobacco" a comma and the words "sugar beets and sugar cane", followed by a comma.

SEC. 2. Subsection (d) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding after paragraph (4) thereof the following:

"(5) In the case of sugar beets and sugar cane—

"(A) The term 'processing' means the processing of sugar beets or sugar cane into refined sugar or into any sugar which is not to be further refined (or improved in quality). When raw sugar is produced by one person and the final refining is done by another person, the final refining of the sugar shall be deemed to be the processing.

"(B) The term 'processor' means the person completing the processing.

"(C) The term 'sugar' means sugar in any form whatsoever, derived from sugar beets or sugar cane, including also edible molasses, raw sugar, direct-consumption sugar, sirups, and any mixture containing sugar (except blackstrap molasses and beet molasses). Such edible molasses, raw sugar, direct-consumption sugar, sirups, and sugar mixtures, included within the word 'sugar', as herein defined, shall be considered to constitute sugar to the extent of their total sugar content as determined in regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture.

"(D) The term 'blackstrap molasses' means the commercially so-designated 'by-product' of the cane-sugar industry, not used for human consumption or for the extraction of sugar.

"(E) The term 'beet molasses' means the commercially so-designated 'by-product' of the beet-sugar industry, not used for human consumption or for the extraction of sugar.

"(F) The term 'raw sugar' means sugar, as defined above, manufactured or marketed in, or brought into, the United States, in any form whatsoever, for the purpose of being, or which shall be, further refined (or improved in quality).

"(G) The term 'direct-consumption sugar' means sugar, as defined above, manufactured or marketed in, or brought into, the United States in any form whatsoever, for any purpose other than to be further refined (or improved in quality).

"(H) The term 'raw value' means a ratio of 107 pounds of raw sugar testing by the polariscope 96 sugar degrees to 100 pounds of refined sugar testing by the polariscope 99.9 sugar degrees and above; for the purposes of determining quotas, all sugar except beet sugar produced in continental United States shall be adjusted to this ratio; in the case of such beet sugar, 100 pounds of refined sugar as produced will be deemed the equivalent of 107 pounds of raw sugar."

SEC. 3. Subsection (b) of section 9 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence, and inserting a colon and the following: "Provided, however, That in the case of sugar beets and sugar cane, the processing tax shall be imposed upon the production of the products and/or by-products resulting from the processing thereof, and the rate of the processing tax, as applied to each such product or by-product, shall be in accordance with the total sugar content thereof as determined by, and under regulations prescribed by, the Secretary of Agriculture, but the rate of the processing tax so established in accordance with the requirements of this subsection shall in no event be in excess of the amount of the reduction by the President of the rates of duty on sugar in effect on January 1, 1934, under paragraph 501 of the Tariff Act of 1930."

SEC. 4. Section 8 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 8a. (1) Having due regard to the welfare of domestic producers and to the protection of domestic consumers and to a just relation between the prices received by domestic producers and the prices paid by domestic consumers, the Secretary of Agriculture may, in order to effectuate the declared policy of this act, from time to time, by orders or regulations—

"(A) Forbid processors, handlers of sugar, and others from importing sugar into continental United States for consumption, or which shall be consumed, therein, and/or from transporting to, receiving, processing or marketing in, continental United States, sugar from the Territory of Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, the Canal Zone, American Samoa, the island of Guam, and from foreign countries, including Cuba, respectively, in excess of quotas, for any calendar year, based on average importations or receipts therefrom into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein, during such 3 years, respectively, in the years 1925–33, inclusive, as the Secretary of Agriculture may, from time to time, determine to be the most representative respective 3 years, adjusted (in such manner as the Secretary shall determine) to the remainder of the total estimated consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, determined pursuant to subsection (2) of this section, after deducting therefrom the quotas for continental United States, provided for by paragraph (B) of this subsection: Provided, however, That in such quotas there may be included, in the case of the Territory of Hawaii, the Virgin Islands, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, the Canal Zone, American Samoa, and the island of Guam, direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding the respective importations or receipts of direct-consumption sugar therefrom into continental United States for consumption, or which was actually consumed, therein during the years 1931, 1932, or 1933, whichever is greater, and in the case of Cuba, direct-consumption sugar up to an amount not exceeding 22 percent of the quota established for Cuba: And provided further, That any imported sugar, with respect to which a drawback of duty is allowed, under the provisions of section 313 of the Tariff Act of 1930, shall not be charged against the quota established by the Secretary of Agriculture hereunder for the country from which such sugar was imported, and the Secretary of Agriculture may, by orders or regulations, allot such quotas and readjust any such quota or allotment in any aforesaid production area and/or in continental United States, from time to time, among the processors, handlers of sugar, and others; and/or

"(B) Forbid processors, handlers of sugar, and others from marketing in, or in the current of, or in competition with, or so as to burden, obstruct, or in any way affect, interstate or foreign commerce, sugar manufactured from sugar beets and/or sugar cane, produced in the continental United States beet-sugar-producing area, the State of Louisiana, the State of Florida, and any other State or States in excess of the following quotas, for any calendar year, except as provided for in subsection (2) of this section: United States beet-sugar area, 1,550,000 short tons raw value; the States of Louisiana and Florida, except as may be provided under paragraph (C) of this section, 260,000 short tons raw value; and the Secretary of Agriculture may, by orders or regulations, allot such quotas and readjust any such allotment, from time to time, among the processors, handlers of sugar, and others; and/or

"(C) For any calendar year, determine the quota for any area producing less than 250,000 long tons of sugar raw value during the next preceding calendar year; and/or

"(D) Establish a separate quota or quotas for edible molasses and/or for sirup of cane juice produced in continental United States, in addition to the quotas established pursuant to paragraphs (A) and (B) of this subsection.

"(2) (A) The consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, for the calendar year 1934, and for each succeeding calendar year, shall be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture from available statistics of the Department of Agriculture. The consumption requirements so determined shall, at such intervals as the Secretary finds necessary to effectuate the declared policy and the purposes of this act, be adjusted by him to meet the actual requirements of the consumer as determined by the Secretary.

"(B) In the event that the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, for any calendar year, exceed the amount of the consumption requirements determined for that year, or exceed the amount of the consumption requirements determined for the year next preceding, the Secretary of Agriculture may prorate such excess amount on the basis of the respective quotas determined by and pursuant to subsection (1) of this section: Provided, however, That the percentage of such excess prorated for continental United States shall be not less than 30 percent thereof.

"(C) In the event that the consumption requirements of sugar for continental United States, for any calendar year, are less than the amount of consumption requirements determined for that year, or are less than the amount of the consumption requirements determined for the year next preceding, the amount of such deficiency may be proportionately deducted from the respective quotas determined by and pursuant to paragraph (A) of subsection (1) of this section.

"(D) If, during any calendar year, any producing area is unable to produce and deliver its full quota of sugar, the Secretary of Agriculture may prorate this deficiency among the other areas on the basis of their respective quotas and ability to supply the deficiency.

"(E) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraphs (A) to (C), inclusive, of subsection (1) of this section, the Secretary of Agriculture may, in order to effectuate the declared policy of this act, from time to time, by orders or regulations, deduct from the quotas for production, importing, receiving, and/or marketing, and/or from the allotments thereof, established pursuant to said paragraphs, in any given year, an amount for each year, respectively, representing the surplus stocks of sugar produced in that area, or a portion of the total surplus stocks of sugar produced in that area, in whole or in part, which may have accumulated in the year next preceding, over and above the quotas established for such year.

"(3) In order more fully to effectuate the declared policy of this act, as set forth in its declaration of policy, and to insure the equitable division between producers and/or growers and/or the processors of sugar beets or sugar cane of any of the proceeds which may be derived from the growing, processing, and/or marketing of such sugar beets or sugar cane, and the processing and/or marketing of the products and by-products thereof, all agreements authorized by this act may contain provisions which will eliminate child labor and will fix minimum wages for workers or growers employed by, or under the control of, the producers and/or processors who are parties to such agreements, and the Secretary, upon the request of any producer, or grower, or worker, or of any association of producers, or growers, or workers, or of any processor, of sugar beets or sugar cane, is hereby authorized to adjudicate any dispute as to any of the terms under which sugar beets or sugar cane are grown or are to be grown and/or marketed, and the sugar and by-products thereof are to be marketed. The decision and any determination of the Secretary shall be final.

"(4) Any person willfully violating any order or regulation of the Secretary of Agriculture issued under this section shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 6 months.

"(5) Any person willfully exceeding any quota or allotment fixed for him under this section by the Secretary of Agriculture, and any other person knowingly participating or aiding in the exceeding of said quota or allotment, shall forfeit to the United States a sum equal to three times the current market value of such excess, which forfeiture shall be recoverable in a civil suit brought in the name of the United States. All sums recovered shall be paid into the Treasury and are hereby authorized to be appropriated to be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the purposes named in section 12 (b) of this act.

"(6) The several district courts of the United States are hereby vested with jurisdiction to prevent and restrain any person from violating the provisions of this section, or of any order, regulation, agreement, or license heretofore or hereafter made or issued pursuant to this title.

"(7) Upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture, it shall be the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States, in their respective districts, under the directions of the Attorney General, to institute proceedings to enforce the remedies and to collect the forfeitures provided for in this title.

"(8) The remedies provided for in this subsection shall be in addition to, and not exclusive of, any of the remedies or penalties provided for elsewhere in this title or now or hereafter existing at law or in equity.

"(9) The term 'person' as used in this title includes an individual, partnership, corporation, association, and any other business unit."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the gentleman from Texas is entitled to 40 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas is entitled to 40 minutes.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, in view of the limited time and the great interest, I am not going to undertake to explain the bill in detail, but if anyone is interested in a detailed explanation, a rather full one is embodied in the report. In view of the great number who desire to be heard on this subject and those who are directly and vitally interested, I shall undertake to explain only the general outline and purpose of the bill.

It has been a rather difficult task to secure a bill that would, in a measure, satisfy the various and sometimes conflicting interests of those who are engaged in this far-flung business. However, the more the different groups have studied the difficulties which have faced them during the past, and which possibly the future might hold in store, the more they are inclined to feel that some measure is necessary and that this bill probably embodies the best compromise that can be obtained.

A number of us who undertook to work out these provisions are not directly interested in sugar, but we undertook to listen to all who are interested, and I believe the resulting measure is a fair one. I believe the industry, in all areas, will be better off with this provision than it would be if there were no such provision.

Briefly, in view of the sugar production throughout the different areas, this bill undertakes to allocate a fair division to the different producing areas. It specifies the quota for continental beet-sugar production at 1,500,000 tons. This is somewhat less than the peak production of the past year, but it is somewhat above the average production of the past 3 years, and most of the beet-sugar people are willing to go along with the proposal.

It allots a quota to Louisiana and Florida of 260,000 tons and it contains a provision that where there are less than 250,000 tons raw value, the quota may be made without regard to the 3-year basis. It then provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may allocate quotas for the different producing areas on the basis of any 3 years between 1926 and 1933, inclusive.

There is also a limitation placed on the percentage of refined sugar or, I may say, direct-consumption sugar, that may be brought in from Cuba, and this includes refined sugar in all its forms. This limitation is placed at 22 percent.

There is also a limitation on the amount of direct-consumption sugar which may be brought in from the other producing areas outside of continental United States. This limit is the maximum amount of production of that kind of sugar that was brought into this country, in direct consumption form, in 1931, 1932, or 1933, whichever is greatest. Nineteen hundred and thirty-three, I understand, is probably the greatest in all of these areas.

This provision was inserted to keep refiners from breaking down their plants elsewhere and going to other producing areas and bringing in a larger amount of direct-consumption sugar, and was inserted in order to deal fairly with the American refining industry. There is also a provision which protects the sugar-consuming public.

I believe this explains the various provisions of this bill in a general way.

Mr. LANZETTA. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Just for a question because I want to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANZETTA. With respect to direct-consumption sugar, this bill allows Cuba to export to the United States 22 percent more than the quota?

Mr. JONES. No; it limits it to an amount not in excess of 22 percent of its quota. Whatever their quota is they are allowed not exceeding of that quota in the form of direct-consumption sugar. It reduces the percentage of direct-consumption sugar from Cuba. Cuba last year brought in 31 percent and the average of the last 3 years is 23.88 percent. So the Cuban percentage of direct-consumption sugar is not only several points below 1933, but it is below the last 3-year average. I think it is about the fairest we could get.

Mr. LANZETTA. Is there a discrimination against Puerto Rico with respect to this item?

Mr. JONES. No; we give Cuba nearly two points below the last 3-year average and we give Puerto Rico the highest of any one of the last 3 years.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The bill also provides that continental United States may profit in their quota allotments if the consumption of sugar increases.

Mr. JONES. Yes; not less than 30 percent of any increase in consumption is to be allotted to continental growers.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield for a question.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. If this bill goes through, will it help the sugar refineries that are now closed throughout our country?

Mr. JONES. I think if this measure goes through, it will do more to stabilize the sugar industry in all its activities than perhaps anything else that has been done, and I believe if it goes through in substantially its present form, sugar will probably be the best stabilized of any commodity.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. This is one of the two industries that have been hurt in my district.

Mr. JONES. Of course, I cannot assure the gentleman as to specific refineries.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But it will be of some benefit?

Mr. JONES. I will state to the gentleman that, in my judgment, the sugar producers will be in a better position than they would be without this bill. The same is true of American refiners.

Mr. HASTINGS. Is this a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. JONES. It is not a unanimous report from the committee, but there was no minority report filed. I feel that most of the members of the committee will support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHASE].

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, this bill is one of the most astounding proposals ever made to any Congress.

The administration calmly proposes to limit American production of a nonsurplus commodity in the interest of increased importation from Cuba of the same commodity.

The proposition is almost too silly to discuss.

No American producer wants this bill. No American organization wants this bill. All that the American sugar industry wants is to be let alone. But having been told that the tariff on sugar will be reduced, American sugar producers say that this bill will be necessary if the home industry is to survive. The sole commendatory statement on this measure from any American sugar producer is, "Well, it is the best that we can get."

Demand for this bill is based squarely and solely upon expected violation by President Roosevelt of two of his campaign pledges:

First. To protect American workers against those countries which employ cheap labor, or which operate under a standard of living which is lower than our own great labor groups.
Second. To protect American agriculture by effective duties.

On October 30, 1932, at Wheeling, W.Va., the President, then a candidate for the Presidency, said:

I have advocated a lowering of tariffs by negotiation with foreign countries. But I have not advocated, and I will never advocate a tariff policy which will withdraw protection from American workers against those countries which employ cheap labor or who operate under a standard of living which is lower than that of our own great laboring groups.

That statement was a concise, definite, formal pledge to America and American workers, easily understandable and not capable of misinterpretation.

Yet administration leaders now, less than 18 months after the pledge was made, have introduced and are trying to force through Congress, legislation unnecessary if the pledge is to be kept, and asked for only because it has been publicly announced that the pledge will be broken. Apparently, our Democratic friends deem the preelection promises of their great leader mere idle chatter to be disregarded at will.

The pledge was to protect American workingmen against countries employing cheap labor or operating under a standard of living lower than that of American workers.

Cuban labor is cheap labor, and Cuban living standards are lower than American living standards. But less than a year and a half after the promise of protection was made to American workers—and American workers include workers at Chaska and East Grand Forks in the State of Minnesota—the Democratic Party proposes to reduce production at Chaska and East Grand Forks for the sole purpose of importing more sugar from Cuba. The proposal is an outrage.

PROMISE NO. 2

At Baltimore, Md., on October 26, 1932, President Roosevelt, then the Democratic nominee for the Presidency, said this:

Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I declared that all prosperity in the broader sense springs from the soil. I promised to endeavor to restore the purchasing power of the farm dollar by making the tariff effective for agriculture and raising the price of farmers' products. I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

This statement, too, is an absolute, unequivocal promise to American agriculture. The candidate declared it to be "absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products." "I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered", and then he said, "To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived." Yet our friends of the opposition across this center aisle have so little confidence in the unequivocal pledges of their President that they plan today to force through Congress a bill which can be justified upon no other ground than that the definite, absolute, and unequivocal promise of the President when asking the votes of the American people shall now be broken by him.

If sugar were not a nonsurplus crop, the proposal would not be so outrageous. But American sugar producers do not raise sufficient beets to supply sugar for the American market. In a time of agricultural distress when the farmers of Minnesota are complying with the demands of the administration to take land out of production, sugar beets offer an available and practical source of revenue.

Every communication from my home State has condemned this measure. Not one communication from Minnesota, or from any Minnesota individual, group, or interest, has supported or in any way favored this bill. Here is a letter from John G. Gerlich, route 3, Mankato, Minn., a prominent widely known farmer of my home State:

Yesterday in the press I read the proposals of our President relative to the strict control of sugar. This article stated that the intention is to reduce the sugar tariff and to cut the acreage of the beet growers of the United States.

As a sugar-beet grower and a member of the board of the Southern Minnesota and Northern Iowa Beet Growers Association, I do not favor any such legislation even down to a processing tax because our sugar-beet industry is limited now and we can plant only the number of acres allotted to us by the sugar-beet company in this district, and, further, this is the only crop that I have been able to realize any profit on for the last 3 years.

I would rather see some legislation put through that would increase the tariff on import sugar and then maybe we farmers of southern Minnesota, where the soil is particularly adapted to the raising, could get enough acreage to make us a fairly good profit without having to subscribe to the wheat-acreage cut or the corn-hog-raising plan.

I hope you will use whatever influence you can to protect the sugar-beet industry for us in Minnesota, inasmuch as we do not now produce enough sugar to meet the demand for the city of Minneapolis for 1 year, and the whole United States produces only 25 percent of the sugar consumed. Minnesota could support three or four sugar refineries, whereas now we have only one. If we had unlimited sugar-beet acreage for only 2 years, we farmers would not have to ask the Government for any help.

Here is a letter from Robert A. Wiegand, manufacturer, of Albert Lea, Minn. I quote in part only:

We understand the purposes of the Agricultural Act are:

(1) To reduce the acreage and production for market.

There is no surplus of beet and cane sugar produced in this country. Why reduce acreage and production?

(2) To provide rental or benefit payments upon that part of the production of any basic agricultural commodity required for domestic consumption.

Why compel the people of this country to pay someone rental for land to be left idle when we use more sugar than we produce in this country? Ask the gentleman that proposed this bill where he got that idea.

(3) To expand markets and remove surplus agricultural products. The market for our sugar is expanded. There is no surplus of domestic sugar on hand to be marketed, because the United States consumes far more sugar than produced.

This is one of the hundreds of bills that is unwarranted and unreasonable, and we trust that you and your associates from Minnesota that are down there to represent the best interests of the people will strenuously oppose this measure.

We have always been told the high tariff on sugar is to promote and increase domestic production of cane and beet sugar in the United States. Now along comes a man with a brain storm to reduce the production of sugar and put a tax on it. It appears the Federal Government started something, but no one really can conceive the finish.

Here is a letter from a civic organization, the Automobile Club of Chaska, Minn., by its president and secretary:

Current press notices indicating the attitude of Secretary of Agriculture Wallace toward the domestic beet-sugar industry are very discouraging to the farmers of this section.

Contrary to the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture that the beet-sugar industry is inefficient, we submit that if labor in Cuba and the Philippines were paid on the same basis as labor in this country the domestic industry would be found to be more efficient. Beet labor in this section receives 35 to 50 cents per hour and fully 85 percent employed are local people. Over a half million dollars was paid in this State to beet workers during the past year.

In this section farmers generally are signing up for the corn-hog and wheat-reduction campaign on the theory that there is a surplus of these export crops. They cannot see the logic that would require that they reduce their acreage of a crop, only 25 percent of which is produced in this country and which has given them their only cash return during the past 2 years.

The members of this civic organization respectively request that you use your influence to protect the beet-sugar industry for the farmers and labor in Minnesota.

And here is a brief quotation from another extended letter from Mr. C. T. Lund, general agriculturist, American Beet Sugar Co., of Chaska, Minn.:

Just why Secretary of Agriculture Wallace wants to cut down on the one crop that can be expanded without overproduction and at the same time eliminate other crops is rather difficult to understand. It would certainly be a means of doing away with a tremendous amount of employment and employment that would be given would be very profitable. Please do not misunderstand me when I again say that beet workers working under conditions we have in Minnesota and Iowa can earn from 40 to 60 cents per hour. Many of them earn from $6 to $12 a day, depending on how many hours they care to work. We have no difficulty in competing with any labor in any other industry during the season this work is carried on.

Here is the position of the American Farm Bureau Federation on this unfortunate bill:

There should be no restriction on domestic production of sugar so long as the product is far below the surplus point. The imported sugars from the Philippines, Cuba, and Puerto Rico, by proper authority given the Secretary of Agriculture, should be allowed to be imported annually only in such quantities as will supply whatever deficiency in the domestic market is not produced by American farmers. This will give an automatic plan of expanding home production and retarding foreign imports. First attention must be given to the American producer of sugar, whether cane or beet, in amending the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and this act must not be made an instrument to try to settle international questions to pacify discontented citizens abroad or to liquidate American investments abroad or in our colonies.

The list of such communications could be extended indefinitely. These are typical. They are definite, positive, and exact. They represent the thought of my home State.

There is no enthusiasm for this measure and there never has been—just a hopeless, despondent, "it is the best we can do. The President proposes to lower the tariff and without that protection we cannot survive."

In brief, the situation is this: It is generally thought that in spite of his campaign promises to the contrary, the President now proposes to lower the tariff on sugar importations from Cuba. Should he do so, it is believed by American sugar men that this bill is necessary to preserve the industry in America.

Should you pass this bill, the administration will then be put in a position to say to American producers, "You are now protected by a processing tax so that you will not be harmed if we do lower the tariff."

In other words, each proposition is used, or will be used, as a basis for putting through the other proposition.

It is diplomatic, but it is dishonest.

In the brief time allowed for debate it is impossible to discuss this bill in detail, but on page 4, lines 8 to 11, inclusive, is found definite admission that the administration proposes to lower the duty on sugar. On pages 9 and 10 is found the usual Soviet provision found in all the legislation sponsored by the young group of academic advisers, that the decision of the Secretary of Agriculture shall be final and that any person willfully violating an order or regulation of his is a felon and liable to a fine of $1,000, or a 6 months' term in jail.

American sugar men may well note also the provision of section 16, found on page 16 of the bill, which provides that the processing tax shall cease at the end of 3 years or earlier, but makes no provision as to restoration of the present protective tariff.

As the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] well said before the Committee on Agriculture:

This bill, for American beet sugar, is a shot in the arm, lulling the industry into unconsciousness while it is shot into eternity.

In brief, this bill is bad. If the Democratic Party keeps its campaign pledges it is unnecessary.

Also, it is only another of the many steps we are taking along the Soviet highway. It looks to internationalism. It seeks to comfort Cuban sugar producers and Cuban labor. It would sacrifice the farmers, the industry, and the products of Minnesota in the interest of a foreign nation.

It is as contrary to the spirit of America and Americanism as the proposed reduction in tariff is to the campaign pledges of the President.

In short, it is just another silly bill forced through Congress in line with the ideas of the young professorial group—just one of those bills of which all of us will be heartily ashamed when conditions return to normal and hysterical people to their proper senses.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS].

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Speaker and ladies and gentlemen of the House. It is impossible in 5 minutes to make an intelligent talk on the sugar bill, but I want to say that I cannot agree with the gentleman who just preceded me, who said that he had heard no good word from any member of the committee on this sugar bill. I represent the largest beet-sugar district in the country. I have been president of the Mountain State Beet Growers' Marketing Association since it started. I was president of the National Beet Growers' Association when I was elected to Congress. I grow sugar beets, and I think I know the sugar-beet industry. I know that the sugar-beet industry has largely increased in the world in the last 10 years.

I say that the real trouble with the sugar industry of the United States is not lack of the tariff, but with the production in the Philippine Islands, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico increasing by more than 300 percent in the last 10 years, we have reached the point where we have a potential production in the United States and its island possessions of 5,400,000 tons of sugar. The importations from Cuba last year were a million and three quarters tons. They have produced as high as five and a half million tons. They have imported three and a half or four million tons into the United States.

That makes ten and a half or eleven million tons of sugar seeking a market in the United States, and we just cannot use it.

Now, without this bill it means that if those people are allowed to offer their sugar for sale it will ruin the sugar business in the United States. We cannot continue to pay the high wages which we pay and compete with the cheap foreign labor in those tropical islands.

I agree with what some people have said, that there should be no restriction placed on the continental production of any crop in the United States unless we produce a surplus, but I also remember that a great many years ago my old Scotch grandmother said to me, "Laddie boy, remember this: It is not what you want in this world that does you good; it is what you get." If we have protection for a reasonable amount, which this bill gives us, we can get along. This bill gives us more production than we have usually had. Last year we had a large production. We had the best year we have ever had. We had the largest acreage we ever had. In addition to that, we produced more per acre than we ever did.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. What class of people are employed in the beet-sugar country? How much are they paid? We have read newspaper reports concerning that.

Mr. CUMMINGS. This bill provides that the wages paid the laborer in the beet fields shall be subject to arbitration by the Secretary of Agriculture, and his decision shall be final. In other words, if this bill is passed, for the first time in the history of the sugar business in the United States, labor is protected.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. But what class of people are employed there now?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will answer that, but it will not be a fair answer, because until times became so hard in 1929 we employed a great deal of labor from Mexico. I do not mean old Mexico, but I mean largely from New Mexico. Since we have had hard times, probably 75 or 80 percent of the labor is American labor. Ninety percent of them are American citizens who vote in this country.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. As a matter of fact, is it not true that the people who work in the beet fields of this country today receive the same wage as people who work in other farm fields? In other words, it does not make any difference whether a man works in the beet fields or in the hay fields, his pay is the same?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think the man who works in the beet fields receives the same wages per hour.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 5 additional minutes. The gentleman is making a very interesting statement. I make that request with the understanding that it not be taken out of the time on either side.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I join in that request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. CARTER of California. Is the gentleman satisfied with the quota given to Cuba?

Mr. CUMMINGS. If, as some people contend, this Nation owes a duty to Cuba, the entire Nation owes it to Cuba and not the sugar industry alone. I am not conceding that we owe them anything. The idea that Cuba furnishes a great market for our corn and hog products is wrong. Last year Cuba exported 160,000 bushels, and if it were not for the tariff, Cuba would be shipping corn into the United States today.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Has the gentleman figured out what the additional cost of sugar will be to the housewives of this country after this bill passes?

Mr. CUMMINGS. If it increases it 50 cents a hundred, we will be more than satisfied. If sugar were selling in the United States today at 6 cents a pound, which is not high, if you compare other food products with it on the same basis, butter would be worth 10 cents a pound, bacon 8 cents a pound, lamb would be worth 3.9 cents a pound, sirlion of beef would be worth less than 3 cents a pound, milk would be 2.4 cents a quart, a dozen eggs would be worth about 3 cents, a can of peas would be eight tenths of a cent, a can of tomatoes would be worth three tenths of a cent.

Mr. DOCKWEILER. If this bill passes, sugar will go up to 10 cents a pound, will it not? Will that not be the effect of this bill?

Mr. CUMMINGS. If this bill passes, it should not go to 10 cents a pound. In 1922 we were out of sugar. Cuba had the sugar market, and you paid 25 cents a pound for sugar. In October, November, and December, when the beet sugar came on the market, you bought it for 5 and 6 cents a pound. That is the answer. You ruin the continental industry in regard to sugar, and you will pay for it and you will pay well. [Applause.]

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. What percentage of the cultivated area of the United States is devoted to sugar?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Last year there were 1,060,000 acres.

Mr. HASTINGS. What percentage is that?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not know what the total area was.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman in his argument agrees that this is intended to raise the price of sugar to the consumer?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; I did not say that.

Mr. HASTINGS. I thought in answer to an inquiry which was just made, the gentleman agreed to that?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman stated 60 cents a hundred. I suggested 50 cents a hundred would be plenty.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman does agree that it raises it that much to the consumer?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I agree that it ought to raise the price, because it is too cheap.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the gentleman agree that it will?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; I do not know.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. The question was asked as to how many tons of beets were raised in this country last year?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not know what the tonnage was, but I do know that 1,760,000 tons of refined sugar were manufactured.

Mr. WOODRUFF. More than 11,000,000 tons of beets were raised in this country last year, I may say for the benefit of the gentleman who asked the question.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. The administration has assured the consuming public of this country that the price of sugar will not be raised under any condition. That statement was contained in the President's message to the country, and I assume that we are more or less willing to accept the proposition that the price will not be raised. Is it not true that this bill accomplishes for the beet farmer and the cane farmer of this country the things they have been trying to negotiate with the processor but which, owing to their unorganized condition, they have not been able to effectuate; this bill makes those things available to the farmer.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It does.

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. How does it make it available?

Mr. CUMMINGS. How does this bill make what available?

Mr. TRUAX. The matters mentioned in the observation made by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It provides that any dispute between the processors and the growers of beets or cane shall be arbitrated by the Secretary of Agriculture, and that his decision shall be final. It also provides with regard to the conditions of labor in the production of beets that if they are not satisfied with their working conditions or wages they may take the matter up with the Secretary of Agriculture and his decision shall be final. So agricultural labor is protected for the first time in the history of the United States. Also the producers of sugar beets and sugar cane are protected against the processors for the first time in the history of the United States.

Mr. TRUAX. How much will this bill elevate the price of beets to the refineries?

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 2 minutes without being taken out of the time allotted to the discussion of this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, I may say that the Delegate from Hawaii who is probably as well versed on sugar as any man on the floor of the House, was able to get only 3 minutes.

I ask unanimous consent that he may be allowed 5 additional minutes also not to be taken out of the time. I understand the gentleman from Texas has granted him 3 minutes. I should like to see him have 5 minutes additional.

Mr. JONES. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman kindly inform us how much this bill will elevate the price of beets?

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is a hard question to answer, for the reason that in California last year they received better than $5.50 a ton for beets because their beets tested about 20 percent. We, in Colorado, with beets testing 16½ percent, were paid $4.50. In Michigan they received about $5 because of a better contract. My judgment is that on an average the price of beets will be raised about $1.50 a ton.

Mr. TRUAX. That is an average for the entire country?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes; that is what we hope for.

Mr. TRUAX. And the gentleman thinks there will be no corresponding increase in price to the consumers of sugar?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The President in his message said the price to the consumer would not be increased, and this bill provides that any processing tax can in no way exceed the amount by which the tariff against Cuban sugar is lowered.

Mr. TRUAX. And under this bill the production of beets will be cut down?

Mr. CUMMINGS. No; I will not concede that for the reason that all the acreage that was planted to beets last year might be planted again in 1934, and there is only one chance in a hundred that we would exceed the production of 1,550,000 tons of sugar for the reason that it is not likely that again in a period of 10 years such an unusually large tonnage will be produced plus an unusually large sugar content. It took the combination of large acreage, plus large tonnage, plus large sugar content to produce the 1,760,000 tons of sugar refined from our sugar beets last year. So I want to say again that I believe this bill as now drawn will benefit the sugar-cane and sugar-beet growers. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to extend their own remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, it seems inconsistent and abhorrent to me to cut down or limit the amount of sugar beets that the farmers in my district, for example, can raise when the total amount of sugar produced in the United States is only about 26 percent of the total consumption and we import two or three times as much as is raised in the United States.

It is this sort of thing, it seems to me, that the critics of the "brain trust" have in mind when they say that the country is having a new social order inflicted upon it.

This bill goes further than the cotton control bill. It not only authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to say to the individual farmer how many sugar beets he can raise, but it also requires him, in order to get the benefits of this act, to agree to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to tell him what other agricultural products and how much of them he can raise for market.

It goes further than that. It goes further than the cotton-control bill in that it also requires him to sign an agreement to allow the Secretary of Agriculture to tell him how much he must pay his farm labor, or to fix the minimum wages that he must pay and to determine whether or not he can let his own children help him in the fields in the production of sugar beets.

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BOILEAU. May I say that the committee amendment on page 16 strikes out the language relating to the production of other crops, to which the gentleman referred, and, as I understand it, the bill that we now have before us has that language stricken.

Mr. MAPES. I did not know the committee intended to offer that amendment. I am glad to know that. It will improve the bill some, but the fundamental principle of the bill remains the same.

Of course, it is impossible adequately to discuss the bill under the limited time allowed under suspension of the rules, but I want the record clear as far as my position is concerned. I have not heard from any of the sugar-beet growers in my district or from any of my constituents in regard to the bill, but I cannot conceive that they would want me to support it.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BOILEAU].

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, personally I regret very much that this bill is brought up under suspension of the rules. Although the rules of the House provide for bringing bills up under suspension, nevertheless, in my opinion, it is one of the most flagrant gag rules provided for in the rules of the House. A bill of this importance should be brought on the floor of the House where we can have free and open discussion and an opportunity for amendment. However, may I say that so far as I am concerned, there is no amendment I have in mind offering. I am personally in favor of the bill. I believe it is essential and in the interest of the beet farmers of this country.

I call the attention of the membership of the House to the fact that in all of these controlled-production bills which we have enacted as a result of our agricultural policy, we have insisted upon reducing the production of the various commodities below the normal production of those particular commodities. With reference to sugar beets, however, we have made an allotment for domestic sugar beets of 1,550,000 tons, which is larger than has been produced in this country in any year except last, when they had an unusually favorable season, a high yield per acre, and a large sugar content for beets. There was an unusual amount of beet sugar produced last year, but with the exception of that one year this bill gives an allotment for the domestic beet growers in excess of that produced in any other year during the history of our country.

I believe that this is very fair, and that this bill will not have the effect of reducing the sugar-beet acreage one single acre during the coming year. I do not believe that the beet growers of this country will reduce their acreage below what they planted in beets last year. Further, I believe this bill is necessary because it is intended in this bill to increase the price of beets to the pre-war parity price. It will give a substantially higher price for beets to the farmers and there is no question but that the beet growers will receive a better price. They will be able to produce as many beets as are normally produced.

This is for their benefit; and I believe the sugar interests of this country, when they fully appreciate and understand the provisions of this bill, will admit that it is of decided advantage to them, particularly in view of the fact that the Department of Agriculture and the present administration have taken a rather unusual attitude toward the sugar-beet industry. They have taken the position that the sugar-beet industry is an inefficient industry, and they are not particularly anxious to protect it. With these people in charge of the agricultural program, and having the views they have, it seems to me it is essential that we have a bill that does protect the beet-sugar industry and gives a definite quota to American sugar producers. I believe this bill protects them amply, and I hope it will pass. It is especially necessary because of the avowed intention of the administration to permit the importation of foreign sugar.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it has been contended that there is no relationship between the tariff measure which we passed last week and the bill which we have now under consideration to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Anyone who will approach this subject from the standpoint of the American sugar-beet producer, having in mind his foreign competition, can readily see such a close relationship between the two bills that the one can hardly be considered without taking into consideration the other. It is a fact which cannot be disputed that it is economically unsound to pass this bill except as a protection to the American farmer against the lowering of the tariff on sugar by the President, under the authority which this House has given him under the tariff act, and I dare say that there are few Members of this body who would even consider this radical departure from a heretofore sound policy of protection unless it were to protect the farmer from the inevitable results which will follow such a lowering of the tariff on sugar.

Going back to October 25, 1932, we find that President Roosevelt made a speech at Baltimore, Md., in which he guaranteed to the farmer the continuance of the protective-tariff policy which has kept the American market for the American farmer up to the present time. In that speech he said:

> Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I declared that all prosperity, in the broader sense, springs from the soil. I promised to endeavor to restore the purchasing power of the farm dollar by making the tariff effective for agriculture and raising the price of farm products. I know of no excessive duties on farm products. I do not intend that any duties necessary to protect the farmer shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

We must assume that he meant what he said at that time, and if the tariff on sugar is not to be lowered, then there is no justification for the passage of this bill.

Possibly he did not have in mind, when these words were uttered, the American sugar-beet grower, but at least this administration should not deny the sugar-beet farmer the same protection as is accorded under this announced policy to the producers of other staple crops. The production of sugar beets has become an integrant element of our domestic agriculture and should be considered as such. The sugar produced in the United States constitutes about 26 percent of the total amount consumed within the country. It is one of the few agricultural products of which there is no domestic surplus. This bill provides for a definite limitation on the production of domestic sugar. It is economically unsound to place any restriction on the production of any commodity, either agricultural or industrial, when the domestic consumption of that commodity is less than the domestic production.

Before we embark upon a new and untried policy which will prevent the normal expansion of an industry as important to the economic life of the Nation as the production of sugar seems to be, we should at least take the time to discuss it much more fully than has been allowed here today.

It has been said that the domestic sugar industry is an expensive industry, and the President in his message to Congress on this subject called attention to the fact that it cost the American consumer about $200,000,000 annually to protect a $60,000,000 industry. I regret the fact that our President has been so ill-advised in this matter, but if it were true, it surely is not reflected in the price of sugar to the consumer. The price of sugar in the United States is lower than in any other country of the world, with the exception of Denmark, England, Java, and Japan, in which countries the retail price of sugar is a fraction of 1 percent less than the retail price here. In other words, one result from the passage of this bill will be to decrease the revenue to the United States in proportion to the decrease of the tariffs, and if this loss is to be recompensed in any manner, it must be by transferring the burden of this tax from the importers of foreign sugar to the domestic sugar producer by the levy of a processing tax. This is decidedly unfair and un-American.

Is it common sense to take from the American farmer and give to the Cuban peon? But will we give to the Cuban peon? Since we have had an opportunity to study the testimony before the Tariff Commission in this respect, we are forced to the conclusion that any advantage given to Cuba would not result in a benefit to the Cuban people but would result only in further safeguards to the investment of American capital in Cuba. Personally, I cannot see the logic of asking our American farmers to make this sacrifice for the purpose of protecting American financiers who have seen fit to take the money which they have made in the United States and invest it in a foreign country. The reason for this investment in Cuba lies in the fact that, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, sugar can be raised in the island of Cuba for 26 percent of what it can be produced in the United States. As an example, may I call attention to the fact that in the island of Cuba on a 12-hour basis they pay $1.20 to the melters in their refineries, whereas on a 12-hour basis we pay our melters $5.53.

You will vote against this bill unless you want to reduce the standard of living of the farmers of America and those employed in our refineries to that of the living of the growers and workers of Cuba.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The gentleman knows that practically all of the sugar companies in the State of Michigan, with the exception of the Michigan Sugar Co., were sold under the hammer within the last 4 years?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes; and that was due to this competition. The reason why the industries of Michigan, Colorado, and the West are not producing today more than 26 percent of the sugar consumption in the United States is because they have been giving encouragement to the importation from these foreign countries to the prejudice of our domestic industry, and we have not given our domestic industry adequate protection. Otherwise you would have seen the position reversed, and the growers of these Western States would be growing today 80 percent of the sugar consumed in the United States.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MARSHALL].

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, we all realize that this sugar question is one which is difficult of solution. This is not the first Congress that has been vexed by this same question. Under this bill we are approaching the matter from an entirely different angle from which it has been approached before. We are amending the A.A.A. Act to make beet sugar and cane sugar basic commodities, assessing processing taxes and curtailing production by assignment of quotas in relation to an industry that does not produce a surplus. This is the feature of the bill I do not like.

The curtailments of other products under the A.A.A. have been voluntary. On page 10 of this act it provides for a fine and imprisonment for one who violates the terms of the act. My chief objection to this measure, expressed in the few moments that I have, is that we are placing authority over this industry largely in the hands of an administration that feels this is an expensive industry which should be eliminated from the United States.

In the message of the President in regard to this bill, there is something that appears to me to be misleading. The President would have you believe that it is costing the people of the United States $200,000,000 a year to protect an industry that amounts to only $60,000,000 a year. In the first place, I think this is misleading in that $60,000,000 is not a proper value to put upon this industry, even though this may be the price for which this sugar sells. There are other allied industries that furnish materials to this industry. For instance, I saw somewhere the other day, I cannot recall where just now, a statement of the additional cost of the cotton sacks that are manufactured in this country to sack this sugar. Due to the increased price of cotton the statement gave the thousands of dollars that it was costing the sugar industry in sacks alone. So you can see that it does affect, in a beneficial manner, many other industries, including the railroads.

Then the statement, apparently, is based on the assumption that this tariff of 2 cents costs us $200,000,000 a year, but Mr. Weaver, who is the chief of the sugar and rice division of the Department of Agriculture, in his testimony answered this very question. He was asked if he thought we would be spending a whole lot more for our sugar if it had not been for the protection and building up of the sugar industry in the United States, and he said, "No, sir; I do not."

My idea is that the sugar industry in this country has not increased the price of sugar to our people, and my idea is that if this sugar industry is curtailed and eventually wiped out—and that is what this Department of Agriculture of ours wants to do to the sugar industry—we will pay more for our sugar. If you will read the testimony before our Agriculture Committee of Professors Tugwell and Weaver you will know that this administration does not believe in permitting the sugar industry to continue to operate in the United States. I believe that by curtailing this industry we throw American people out of work, we take American acres out of production, and I for one am in favor of using American land and employing American labor to produce as much as we can of any product of which we are not now producing a surplus.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. DONDERO. Can the gentleman tell the House why he thinks the administration intends to eliminate the sugar industry in this country?

Mr. MARSHALL. I am basing that on the fact they say it is inefficient and should not be continued.

Mr. DONDERO. Does the gentleman think he can make the American beet farmer and the American sugarcane farmer believe that?

Mr. MARSHALL. All they have to do is to read the testimony of those who are supposed to be in authority and speaking for the administration.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Is it not a fact that the Secretary of Agriculture stated definitely before the gentleman's committee that he had no intention of eliminating the sugar business in the United States?

Mr. MARSHALL. I will answer the gentleman by asking if he disputes the fact? And if the gentleman wants to, I will go with him to the Secretary of Agriculture, and I believe he will tell the gentleman he thinks this is an expensive industry and one that should never have been fostered in this country.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. But he did not say definitely he wanted to eliminate the industry.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am not saying he stated he wanted to eliminate the industry, but I do not wish to put the control of such an industry in the hands of anyone who is opposed to it; and, furthermore, the sugar industry of this country would not be ostensibly and half-heartedly supporting this measure if it were not for the authority that this Congress gave the President of the United States in the tariff act which this House recently passed. They fear that if this bill is not enacted into law they may suffer very materially at the hands of the President of the United States in a reduction of tariff, and they are taking this bill for fear they might get something worse.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. MARSHALL. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I think we are both alike——

Mr. MARSHALL. I would like to be like the gentleman, because I respect him.

Mr. CUMMINGS. In that we want this industry continued, and does not the gentleman know that this is the first time in the history of the sugar industry of the United States that the principle has been recognized that we could place a limitation on the importation of sugar from our tropical island possessions, and does not the gentleman know that if that limitation is not placed, with the tariff benefits which they enjoy, the continental sugar industry will be absolutely ruined?

Mr. MARSHALL. The only difference between the gentleman and me in this respect is that I would go along with the gentleman in placing this curtailment of sugar on countries outside of continental United States and let our people, who need all the business they can get, produce as much sugar as they can.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I would agree with the gentleman absolutely, but give us this measure now and next session we can amend it and put in what we want, but do not kill the industry in the meantime.

Mr. MARSHALL. But I am not willing to go on record as favoring this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KLEBERG].

Mr. KLEBERG. Mr. Speaker, of course, we on this side cannot be responsible for the interpretation that is given to the various statements of the Democratic administration with reference to the sugar industry by those on the Republican side of the aisle. My colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MARSHALL], who just preceded me, called attention to the fact that the Secretary of Agriculture and the administration had determined to sacrifice the sugar industry.

I propose to lay before the House, briefly, the facts as to the why of this bill.

The sugar industry supplying this market has suffered from overproduction from within and without, particularly from without, for a number of years. Successive tariff increases for the past 15 years have certainly not solved—and, in all probability, could never solve—this problem. While the tariff has steadily reduced importations from Cuba, it has also increased in greater amount productions within our tariff walls. Even if Cuba were totally eliminated from our market, within the next few years increased production within the tariff walls would leave our beet and cane farmers worse off than before, and the tariff would become as ineffective to help them as it has with respect to other agricultural commodities of which we produce a domestic surplus.

All important elements in the sugar industry have recognized for a long time that the problem could be solved only by a quota system. The industry met in Washington last summer and worked several months developing a marketing agreement to establish such a system, but the problems made it impossible to reach a solution acceptable to the administration because sugar was not a basic commodity under the Agricultural Adjustment Act. The proposed bill seeks to correct the situation by making sugar a basic commodity and establishing a quota system. Without the bill the industry faces chaos and the beet and cane farmers face tremendous loss. With the bill the farmers will be greatly benefited and a satisfactory stable condition can be established for the entire industry. It has been estimated that the beet farmers alone, through this bill, will benefit to the extent of approximately $30,000,000 on their coming crop of beets as compared with what they would receive if this legislation is not passed.

As the amount of the processing tax contemplated by this bill is to be offset by a reduction in the general tariff on sugar to be made by the President on the basis of the Tariff Commission's report, this bill establishes a system whereby these great benefits can be given to the beet and cane farmers without forcing the consumers over the next 3 years to pay an equivalent higher price for their sugar as compared with what they are now paying.

Mr. Speaker, in order to be brief and for the purpose of avoiding repetition of statements heretofore made, I propose to submit the more practical questions which have grown out of the hearings and discussions of this bill before its introduction in its present form. In addition to the questions, I submit answers to each which must be brief:

1. Question. Why should the bill specify quotas for the continental beet and cane areas and not for the insular areas and Cuba?

Answer. In legislation of this kind attempting to adjust supply very closely to estimated demand, flexibility is desirable as between producing areas, not for the purpose of discriminating between them, but in order to adjust quotas to actual conditions of production and demand, and to prevent unfair or undesirable market developments. The original bill specified no quotas but left all quotas to be fixed by the Secretary of Agriculture on the basis of any group of 3 out of the last 9 years. Quotas for the continental areas are specified in the present bill because continental farmers insisted and a compromise had to be made with them on this point; otherwise there would be no bill. The principle is retained as to the other areas.

2. Question. Why is not the continental beet quota divided between western and eastern beet sugar areas?

Answer. Such division in the bill itself would give it a rigidity in this respect which would in all probability work out unfairly to the respective areas. Such matters of detail can be handled effectively and justly only by administrative action, which can be changed from time to time to meet conditions as they arise.

3. Question. Why are the Louisiana and Florida quotas combined into one figure of 260,000 tons?

Answer. This again is due to the desire to combine flexibility on matters of administration which may vary as conditions work out, with insistence of the continental areas upon specific quotas.

4. Question. What is the reason for the provision giving the Secretary power to disregard the 3-year periods with respect to quotas for any area producing less than 250,000 tons?

Answer. This provision again is designed to give flexibility to meet with special situations for which the purposes of the act could not be accomplished by too rigid a formula applied to the smaller areas.

5. Question. Why is provision made for separate quotas of edible molasses and sirup of cane juice?

Answer. These forms of sugar are produced in substantial quantities in various Southern States, some of which do not produce any solid sugar. Sugar statistics do not take these products into account, and the quotas mentioned in the President's message are based on figures which do not include them. Therefore the justice of providing for separate allowances to cover such product is evident. (This was also recognized in the proposed marketing agreement which the sugar industry worked out last summer.)

6. Question. Why should importations of direct-consumption sugar from the insular areas and Cuba be limited?

Answer. The principal reason is that as a matter of national policy, in any measure regulating the sugar industry, the domestic refining industry should not be exposed to destruction by competition from American insular areas and Cuba. In the case of each of these areas the problem is a raw sugar or production problem, not a refining problem; and the bill deals with their problems and provides a basis for an adequate return for their production. In view of the advantages given them by the bill, they can fairly be asked not to continue to displace American labor and capital on the continent. The limitations proposed in the bill in this regard are more than liberal to the insular areas and Cuba. Failure to impose limitations threatens the domestic refining industry with serious reduction, if not destruction; and it is unsound national policy to leave the country dependent for its refined cane sugar on a particular foreign country such as Cuba, or far distant islands such as the Philippines.

7. Question. Why, in the provisions regarding adjustment of quotas to consumption requirements, are the continental areas assured a 30-percent share in any increase of consumption above estimated requirements?

Answer. On the basis of the total of all quotas mentioned in the President's message, the continental beet and cane quotas specified in the bill represent approximately 28 percent of the total. The figure 30 percent, which represents a difference of only about 100,000 tons, is frankly a compromise insisted upon by the continental farmer representatives.

8. Question. Why should the processing tax be limited to the amount of reduction in duty to be made by the President?

Answer. The President himself answered this question—the purpose is so that the effect will not be to increase the price of sugar in order to provide the benefit payments to the farmers.

9. Question. It has been suggested that as sirups will not be included in the reduction of duty, they should not be governed by the bill and consequently submitted to quota and processing tax.

Answer. The answer to this is that the sirups are in fact sugar and compete with the solid sugar. The Tariff Commission's report does not cover them because the duty on sirups under the Tariff Act of 1930 is discriminatorily low as compared with solid sugar, and no request was made of the Tariff Commission to investigate those rates. The inequality in the tariff is no justification for perpetuating the effects thereof or enhancing the favored position of sirups by excluding them from the quota and tax features of the bill.

10. Question. Why is the processing tax not to be effective until 30 days after the adoption of the bill?

Answer. The reason for this is that the proposed reduction of the sugar tariff under the flexible provisions of the tariff act requires a proclamation which takes effect 30 days after its date.

11. Question. What is the reason for the amendments made by the bill to sections 15 (e) and 17 (a) and (b) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act?

Answer. To provide for inequalities which would otherwise arise under the act as it now stands when applied to the handling of sugar.

12. Question. Why are drawback sugars excluded from quotas?

Answer. In order to permit the continuation without prejudice of exportation of sugar without restriction, whether as such or as an ingredient in canned goods and other foodstuffs. Such business cannot be carried on except with sugar entitled to drawback; that is, the exporters cannot compete in the world market except with sugar upon which the part of the price represented by the duty is refunded to them.

13. Question. Why is the duration of the bill limited to 3 years or the termination of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, whichever is earlier?

Answer. The Agricultural Adjustment Act has no fixed date for its termination. In view of the nature of this legislation it seemed desirable to have a definite limit, even though the Agricultural Adjustment Act may continue longer than the 3-year period. Three years was selected because in the agricultural side of the sugarcane business, planting programs, and so forth, in several of the areas, require a minimum of 3 years.

14. Question. Why is not the limitation on direct-consumption sugar confined to refined sugar?

Answer. "Refined sugar" is a term with a more or less definite meaning which would not include turbinated, washed, or other forms of what is really raw sugar which can be used in lieu of refined sugar for certain purposes. The phrase "direct-consumption sugar" is necessary adequately to cover the problem.

The membership of the committee has done its best to meet the difficult situation by presenting the bill, which represents the agreement of all important factors in the sugar industry. Many Members of the House have made valuable contributions in thought and statement to this measure, and I may mention my two colleagues, Hon. CLARK THOMPSON and Hon. JOSEPH MANSFIELD, who are both Representatives from my State of Texas, and I thank them for their constructive efforts.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to use to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, my support is registered in favor of this bill. I had hoped that it would be more favorable to the sugar-refining industry, but it will even as it is now written bring new life to the industry.

The sugar-refining industry has existed on the American Continent for nearly 200 years. Normally it employed 20,000 people, paying $27,000,000 annually in wages and salaries. It patronized home industries for materials, services, and supplies, disbursing to other industries in the United States approximately $100,000,000 yearly. It has contributed to the United States Government hundreds of millions in customs duties. It has been one of the great American industries along the Atlantic seaboard.

The industry thrived until there arose competition from foreign refined sugar, chiefly from Cuba. Up to 1925 practically all sugar coming to this country was raw, but since that time refined-sugar importations have been mounting yearly. The Smoot-Hawley tariff crippled the industry. Under its schedules domestic refineries suffered severely. That tariff was detrimental not only because it increased rates but also for the reason that it discriminated against the domestic refineries, and was chiefly responsible for the establishment of refineries in foreign countries, especially Cuba, which compete with our refineries, and, therefore, with domestic labor.

By that tariff act a premium was placed on refining in Cuba. It imposed a duty of 2 cents per pound on Cuban raw sugar and 2.12 per pound on Cuban refined sugar. It utterly disregarded the life of the refining industry. A domestic refiner requires 107 pounds of raw sugar to make 100 pounds of refined sugar. It may pay, therefore, 2.14 cents duty for every pound of refined sugar produced, as compared to a duty of 2.12 a pound on Cuban refined sugar.

Under such conditions the domestic industry could not compete with the new foreign industries on equal terms. The refineries in and about New York employ American citizens and pay them the current rates of wages, attempting to compete with the product of the Philippines, Puerto Rico, and Cuba, where labor is paid less wages than an employee of New York or New Jersey could, if he wanted to, accept. The domestic industry has employed thousands of men, while thousands of others have been employed in mining coal, producing oil, manufacturing cotton bags, barrels, paper cartons, and other materials in large quantities for the refineries.

Since 1925 the competition from foreign refineries has become so severe that domestic refiners have lost in volume approximately 700,000 short tons to the insular areas and Cuba. They have lost practically all of their export business, besides, due to the retaliatory barriers provoked by the Smoot-Hawley tariff in the other countries of the world. To be specific, they have lost about 320,000 tons in export, representing about 90 percent of their business. The shrinkage in consumption brought about by the depression has been borne entirely by domestic refiners. Cuba sells its product to the dealer at a cheaper price than can the domestic industry, but the public pays an equal price at retail and the consumer does not benefit.

So serious have been the inroads that in the New York area 6 refineries, 2 in Brooklyn, 2 in Yonkers, 1 in Long Island City, and 1 in Edgewater, N.J., have either closed their factories or are operating in the face of inevitable disaster in the absence of some relief.

The passage of this bill will enable the domestic refineries now operating to compete on a basis which will insure their continuance in business and give employment to those who have spent years of their lives in the industry. The bill limits importations of direct-consumption sugar to 1933 figures for the American islands and 22 percent of quotas for Cuba and other foreign countries. It is a pity that the quotas for Cuba and other foreign countries could not be limited to 15 percent. In that case some of the refineries now closed very probably would reopen and the unemployment problem, especially in my district, would be very considerably relieved. A fair number of my constituents worked at the Yonkers plant of the National Sugar Refining Co. Daily they drove to Alpine, on the New Jersey side of the Hudson River, and ferried across to their work at the Yonkers plant. When that factory closed they were thrown out of employment, and many of them are still unemployed. As it is, there is no assurance of the reopening of the Yonkers plant, but the Edgewater factory of this company will be able to continue manufacturing and furnish employment for 1,200 people. Constituting as it does one of the large plants of the eastern seaboard, nothing short of disaster to my neighbors and constituents would follow its closing. They will be happy and relieved of great anxiety and worry when this bill becomes law.

We will do much for labor by the passage of this bill. You do not want my people reduced to the level of the cheap tropical wage scale. And labor plays the principal difference in the cost of the production of sugar. For example, in Cuba wages per 12-hour day have been approximately the pay at the Edgewater, N.J., plant per hour as base rate; that is, 50 cents to 55 cents. While wages have increased slightly in Cuba this year, the disparity is still very large. The difference in cost per hundred pounds of sugar is probably about 12 cents. This is more than the average margin of profit to the American refiner. Furthermore, the cost in the Tropics is less, due to lower taxes, smaller overhead, and lighter interest charges on investment because of cheaper buildings to house the industry, unhampered by building regulations and restrictions. Geographically situated as they are tropical refiners have in addition certain transportation advantages which enable them to ship refined sugar from Cuba through the St. Lawrence River and the Great Lakes to Chicago and other lake ports at considerable freight savings as against American refiners, who have to ship the raw sugar to the seaboard and use American transportation systems to carry their sugar to destination. The latter difference runs as high as 10 cents to 20 cents per 100 pounds in favor of the tropical refiner.

It must be remembered, too, that American refiners have for the past year been subject to the N.R.A. and the A.A.A., which have imposed additional costs upon them. They have carried on their operations according to the recovery program inaugurated by the President and have given him whole-hearted support. But costs thus incurred have amounted to 13 cents to 14 cents per 100 pounds. Again, Cuban refiners are now buying Japanese cotton bags at 7.6 cents per 100-pound bag, while American refiners are still purchasing American cotton bags at a cost, including the processing tax, of 12.6 cents per bag, or a difference of 5 cents per bag in favor of the Cuban refiner. Add all these costs and the figures show between 25 cents and 35 cents per 100 pounds—one fourth cent to one third cent per pound—in favor of the tropical refiner.

With such a difference in costs, it is obvious that the tropical refiners have been in a position to undersell domestic refiners. Our refineries have depended not on the high price of sugar but the small profit on a large volume of sales. The domestic refiner's profit has been 10 to 20 cents per 100 pounds, which has been turned into serious losses. A slight fraction of a cent per pound plays an all-important part in the industry, which is built on volume. Without this bill, it is evident that the refiners could not indefinitely survive. Two refineries in the New York area are closed and one refining company is in receivership. The plant of the Spreckles Sugar Corporation, located at Yonkers, N.Y., representing an investment of over $15,000,000, was recently put up for sale. I have been informed that the prospect for the refining industry was so unpromising that the highest bid for that plant was $65,000. The plant of the National Sugar Refining Co. at Yonkers has been closed for 3 years. A foreman at that factory delighted in giving employment to my neighbors and fellow citizens while he was in charge. With the closing of the plant, he lost his position, and for 3 long years he has not earned a penny. So you see what has happened to this important industry and to those engaged in it. All of the companies are affected. A few have shown some increase in profits in 1933 compared to 1932, but the gains were in inventory. It seems fair to assert that all sugar-refining companies in the United States have shown a decrease in profit on operations since 1928.

Twelve hundred men and women employed at the Edgewater sugar house located in my congressional district are involved. They with their families are solely dependent on the continued existence of our refinery; others, through their purchasing power, have their jobs at stake. A neighbor and friend connected with the Edgewater plant honestly portrayed the situation when he telegraphed me a few days ago as follows:

Hon. EDWARD A. KENNEY,
House of Representatives:

Jones sugar bill, H.R. 8861, now before Congress, is a constructive step for the protection of the domestic cane-sugar refining industry against the importation of refined sugar produced by cheap tropical labor. Urge your support of the bill in the interest of American labor and industry, otherwise threatened with extinction.

JACK TIMONY,
National Sugar Refining Co.

I urge the necessity for the passage of the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague, FRED CUMMINGS, on the issue of his long, hard fight for the beet-sugar farmers as reflected in this bill.

It is the expressed conviction of the Secretary of Agriculture—and I believe honestly—that this amended measure makes domestic sugar one of the most stabilized and protected of agricultural commodities. If there is any difference of opinion about this, there ought to be none on the proposition that the reciprocal tariff act makes this act an absolute necessity for the protection of the domestic sugar industry.

Making domestic sugar an agricultural basic commodity, as this bill does, in my opinion disposes of any contention that it is an inefficient or disposable industry.

This bill carries several guaranties, well worth while. It gives the processor a definite supply of raw materials and a certain market; it carries safeguards against the abuse of child labor and provides for minimum wages.

While we differ on some material matters, I never questioned the primary concern of the Secretary of Agriculture in the beet grower, and his power of supervision in this bill over contracts between the growers and processors ought to be an assurance to the growers that they will get an equitable division of the profits of the industry.

I think there is one thing that ought to be stated by someone from Colorado. I want to say of Senator COSTIGAN, of Colorado, the sponsor of this bill in the Senate, who has been so much misrepresented in connection with the bill, that his career of distinguished service for the common man, the worker, and the farmer, is an absolute guaranty that he would not sponsor any legislation that was not beneficial to either of them. [Applause.]

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, I do not know anyone who is heartily in favor of this bill. There are a few who are heartily against it. When we vote most of us will do so on the principle that as between the two evils we choose the lesser. That is the argument for the bill.

The American people are the greatest consumers of sugar per capita on earth. We do not produce in continental United States more than about one fourth of the sugar we consume. Sugar is not on an export basis. The administration has been striving to limit the production of many agricultural products in order to prevent a surplus which affected the market and reduced the prices of agricultural commodities below cost of production.

Now, in this bill we are introducing a new principle and we are asked to agree that the people of the United States should not produce our sugar but that the business should be allocated largely to foreign people and to tropical labor. The bill forbids processors from importing sugar in excess of quotas based upon importations in the years 1925–33 such as the Secretary of Agriculture may determine to be the correct quotas or the most representative ones. The bill is based upon the assumption that we owe a duty to the Philippines and to Cuba and to our insular possessions and that we must allocate to them much of the business of producing sugar. But I did not rise to discuss that part of it or the situation surrounding it.

The bill also deals with blackstrap molasses. There have been several bills before the committee which dealt with sugar and all of them dealt with blackstrap molasses as does the present bill. Now blackstrap molasses is a refuse or a waste from sugar refineries. It constitutes what used to be the scum or dregs or leavings of the refineries. At one time they had to haul the stuff out into the bay and dump it in order to get rid of it. But science and chemistry discovered that it could be used to produce alcohol and then immediately a new market was opened for blackstrap molasses; and its imports into this country have continually risen until it has become a menace to the grain and vegetable growers of the country because it has almost displaced vegetables and corn and grain in the distillation of alcohol. It is largely a foreign product and is imported here principally from Cuba. I have seen figures that show that only about 4 percent of the blackstrap molasses used in the manufacture of alcohol is produced in continental America. But it is easily and cheaply imported along the seacoasts and the result has been that the interior distilleries of the country have been largely driven out of business and that the industry is largely centered along the coasts where water transportation from Cuba is cheap and easy.

Some blackstrap molasses is used in the manufacture of livestock feeds and I would not interfere with its use or its importation for that purpose. But there is no reason why blackstrap molasses should be allowed to displace corn or other grains in making alcohol. There is not a sufficient tariff against it to prevent its importation for that purpose. But now while we are considering this bill we have an opportunity to fix quotas for its importation just as we are fixing quotas for the importation of sugar.

We should go farther and forbid processors from importing blackstrap molasses beyond importations in pre-war and pre-Volstead times. The eighteenth amendment has been repealed and the farmers were promised that its repeal would open up new markets for their grain. Why do you not keep this promise? Why are you driving our farmers out of the market in favor of cheap tropical half-clad, half-civilized, and half-paid peon and negroid labor in foreign countries? Farmers were promised by party platforms that they would not be subjected and should not be subjected to that kind of competition. They are suffering; their lands are being taken away from them; their homes are being sold by the sheriffs; foreclosures and judgments are running against them. It is pitiable. It is damnable that the fine, intelligent, God-fearing and home-loving farm people are being driven from their homes in a general exodus, because it is impossible to make a living.

In the committee I proposed an amendment which would have limited the importation of blackstrap molasses for distillation into alcohol to quotas based on pre-war and pre-Volstead conditions. If we did this, alcohol would be practically as cheap because the distilleries of blackstrap shove the price up and down being sure always to keep it a few cents under the price that would be required if American grown grain was used in the distillation. They will sell you blackstrap for 1½ or 2 cents a gallon if corn is down to 8 or 10 cents a bushel. But when corn rises higher, then blackstrap molasses rises in parallel lines so that after all alcohol distilled from blackstrap molasses is but little under the price of alcohol which would be distilled from American grain.

We were unable to get an amendment incorporated into the bill, and we are here today under suspension of the rules without a chance to offer an amendment that will do justice to the grain and vegetable farmers. We cannot offer an amendment that would forbid the processors from introducing into this country blackstrap for the manufacture of alcohol. This importation displaces 40,000,000 bushels of corn yearly. It displaces millions of acres of land that could be used for growing potatoes or other vegetables or other grains for use in the distilling of alcohol. In this day, when farmers are asked to limit production, this bill should shut the floodgates of tropical importation. It fails in this respect. Farmers have tariffs to pay. They are signing production-control contracts. They are taxed to put marginal lands out of business. They are taxed for subsistence homesteads, and seed loans and crop loans and loans to irrigation and reclamation districts. Cotton limitations are placed over them, and they are seen plowing up cotton fields. The Government is regimenting cotton production. Consumers and producers are paying processing taxes on corn, wheat, and what not. We see corn agreements and limitations, wheat agreements and limitations, hog agreements and limitations. We are told to produce less and thereby gain more. Yet in this bill you are allowing black and tropical and semi-civilized and cheap labor in foreign islands to the south and in the Far East to come and compete here with the American farmer. You are not keeping your preelection promises.

The importation of blackstrap does not do the country any good. You will pay scarcely any more in the future for alcohol if this nefarious business of bringing in blackstrap to compete with the American farmer is stamped out. It is ridiculous to my mind, at this time, when we are limiting American production, to give this opportunity to the Philippines and Cuba and other foreign countries to control our market without let or hindrance or limitation. There should be an amendment to this bill that will provide in section 2 just exactly what the bill does with sugar, namely, forbid the processors of blackstrap molasses from importing it for the manufacture of alcohol beyond the importation of the days when parity prices are fixed for agriculture, and beyond the quotas that came here before the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead law and beyond the importations which will amply meet our demands for feed. Why hesitate about it?

If you really want to restore the farmer's buying power, you will give him the American market. If you really want to make him prosperous, you will allow him to raise and sell his products. If you want cheap foreign labor to displace him in the economic structure, then you will continue to favor the American Molasses Co. of Boston and the big sugar refineries, who control the present situation, and the lobby which has been here before Congress representing them. You will continue to uphold the big banks that have large investments and loans in foreign sugar refineries and sugar plantations. How about the Chase National Bank, the National City Bank, and the Bank of Montreal? As Congressmen, whom are you going to be for? That is a question which you will have to answer sooner or later, because the time is coming—and I hope it will come soon—when you cannot hide behind a rule which prevents discussions and amendments and also prevents justice to American farmers. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST] has expired.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MONTET].

Mr. MONTET. Mr. Speaker, Louisiana is the third largest sugar-producing State in this country. Sugar is one of the major products of my State. We of Louisiana are, therefore, vitally interested in this program which looks to the stabilization of the sugar industry. We have long realized that existing tariff alone has not been able to sustain the industry, for the very obvious reason that the Philippines, Hawaii, and Puerto Rico have more or less reaped the major portion of the benefits of this tariff. While this tariff has been of substantial assistance, we at the same time realize that in addition thereto the industry must be stabilized. This program looks to the stabilization of the industry. This is good national policy, for if ever the day comes when there will be no continental sugar production, we will have a repetition of what occurred in this country in 1920, when Cuban sugars and sugar from our insular possessions came into this country without competition from continental production. Sugar then rose to nearly 30 cents a pound. I therefore submit that it is good policy to stabilize the industry so as to insure the maintenance of a continental production of sugar that will prevent the insular producing areas from holding up the American consumers, as was done in 1920. This proposal assures continental beet and cane their pre-war parity price. These commodities are entitled to this, hence I gladly lend my support to this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. MONTET] has expired.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, as I have been listening to the speeches made by the various Members representing the beet- or cane-sugar producing sections of this country I have been impressed with the thought that they believe themselves faced with a situation which faced a peaceful citizen of this country when, in wending his way homeward one dark night, he found himself suddenly confronted with a man with a shotgun, that shotgun pointed at his head, the man demanding his money or his life. He gave up his money, of course. Our friends who have been apologizing for this bill and damning it with faint praise apparently believe they are confronted with a gun that is loaded. When I refer to that I wish to say the gun I speak of is the tariff "gun" or bill which recently passed the House and which they expect will soon be placed in the hands of the President of the United States. If it is loaded and dangerous, it must be because they believe the man behind it will pull the trigger and thus reduce the tariff on sugar and destroy the beet-sugar industry.

I wish to say to my good friends on the other side of this House, if you believe for one minute that this great President of ours would knowingly—and he has had ample time to inform himself on this question—do anything to destroy an industry as great and as important to the people of this country as the sugar industry, you have less confidence in that fine man than I have. That is the situation in which you find yourselves. You believe the gun is loaded. I do not believe any such thing. I do not believe your President and mine would destroy this great industry. Believing as you do, you will not, of course, vote with me to send the bill back to the committee with instructions to bring back here a bill that is an American bill, and not one such as we have before us, which sacrifices and surrenders fundamental rights of the American farmer.

Now, I am for an allotment plan, but I am not for an allotment plan that cuts down production of only such sugar as is produced by American citizens. I am for an allotment plan that gives to the American farmer the rights that are his, that permits him to raise as much of the sugar consumed in this country as he is able to raise, leaving for other countries the privilege of raising only such sugar consumed in this country as our own American farmers cannot raise. I cannot for the life of me understand how any man in this House would argue that in the placing of allotments the only people whose production shall be decreased happen to be full-fledged American citizens. I speak of the people living in continental United States and the people living in the islands of Hawaii. My friends, I know you must feel humiliated to find yourselves in the position where you have to come on the floor of this House and support this measure, and by so doing cast doubt upon your confidence in your exalted leader and his ability and desire to protect a great American agricultural industry.

We have something more to consider here than the protection of this industry, great as it is. We have certain fundamental rights of our people to preserve. I wonder how many of you realize that by your vote today you abandon for all time the right, the inherent right, of the American farmer to produce the food that keeps American people alive? I wonder if you realize the precedent you are establishing here? Precedents such as this remain all down the years to plague, to annoy, and sometimes to destroy us.

I represent a district that grows many, many thousands of tons of sugar beets. My city produces more beet sugar than any other city in the world. Thousands of farmers in my district raise sugar beets. They desire to continue to do so. Other farmers also wish to raise this valuable crop. We have three large sugar factories in that home city of mine. Under this bill the acreage of sugar beets must be reduced. Farmers in my district and elsewhere will be denied the opportunity they heretofore have enjoyed. Do you think I do not have a regard for this industry? Do you think that for one moment I would stand and argue as I do, if I had not some regard for the fundamental, the constitutional right of the American farmer to produce the food the people living in this country eat from day to day? By abandoning that right you are abandoning a policy that has been the policy of every party that ever had control of this House; and I want to say to you gentlemen—I feel sorry for you—but the day will come in your lives when you will be much embarrassed by your vote here today, when the farmers of this country realize the privileges—yes—the fundamental rights you are voting away from them.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The gentleman says he feels sorry for us?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Does not the gentleman feel sorry enough for us to vote for this bill?

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to my good friend—I like him; I think he is doing just the thing he believes he ought to do; he, like all the rest of the Members over there, believe the gun is loaded, and, if this bill is not passed, the President will pull the trigger; I do not agree with him—I want to say to him that if I believed the people of this country—and I do not include only the sugar-beet growers; but if I believed the people of this country would for a minute tolerate abandoning the fundamental rights of the citizens of this country, I might be impelled to vote for this bill. I am not going to vote for it; and I am not going to vote for it because I have more confidence in the President of the United States than you gentlemen on the Democratic side of this House.

If this bill becomes the law, it is proposed to reduce the tariff on sugar, and thus reduce the amount received by the Treasury from this source by $19,440,000. If this amount of money is not important at this time, why not leave the tariff where it is and use this sum to pay the farmers who raise beets and cane in this country an additional amount for their products? In this way they would receive more than the parity price of $6.50 per ton for their beets and more for their cane, market conditions would not be disturbed, and the consumers of sugar would not be called upon to pay a higher price for this food necessity, which they may expect to pay when the processing tax goes into effect. The assertion that the reduction of tariff will offset the processing tax is shown unwarranted by our experience of the past, and this will be realized when this program goes into effect.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOODRUFF. I yield.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Did the gentleman have that same confidence last November?

Mr. WOODRUFF. That is not pertinent to this discussion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I may say to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan, who just left the floor, that the shotgun that is pointed at the heads of the sugar farmers and the sugar producers of the United States is not the threat of a lower tariff. For the past 10 years the tariff against Cuban sugar has been increased steadily, yet during all that time, Mr. Speaker, the conditions in the State of Michigan, which the gentleman and I in part represent, have been growing worse constantly. I think, as a matter of fact, that the shotgun went off, and it shot 12 out of 15 factories in the State of Michigan out of business, including two or three in the gentleman's own district, and with those factories it carried down a great many of the stockholders in sugar companies whom the gentleman represents here today; and two of those factories, Mr. Speaker, in common with many other factories in the State of Michigan, were sold under the hammer in the last 3 years.

My friend, it is not the tariff that has ruined us; it is the competition from the Philippine Islands, from Hawaii, and Puerto Rico. That is the thing that is disturbing the sugar business today; and if we are given this bill, Mr. Speaker, it will be found that the sugar business will be stabilized better than it has ever been in the past.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman tell me—I have already told him I approve of the allotment of sugar production to the various areas—will the gentleman tell me why it is, with his side of the House having control of this legislation, having the votes in the committee to do anything they like, it has not brought out a bill making allotments to the cane- and beet-sugar growers outside of this country after domestic production has been cared for?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The gentleman knows that the sugar allotment to the United States is over 100,000 tons greater than the quantity of sugar that has been manufactured from domestically grown beets and cane in any year in the history of the country except 1933.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Surely; and the gentleman knows that right now the sugar industry is back on its feet and will continue so if this bill is not passed.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. They will continue to be on their feet under the operation of this bill.

The purpose of the proposed legislation relative to sugar is to stabilize continental sugar production and prevent excessive production and the consequent price disturbance and low yields to farmers and manufacturers from insular competition.

It is commonly believed that the reason for the low price of sugar and the low returns to the farmer is found in Cuban production. This is not a fact. The result of the tariff policy of the past several years was, of course, a restriction of Cuban production, but the main benefit by way of increased production has not been to continental United States but has benefited Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and Hawaii, the tropical islands where growing conditions, labor conditions, wages, and the other principal cost factors are the same as in Cuba. The higher the Cuban tariff the greater advantage to these insular possessions. The net result is that we have built up through the tariff a highly prosperous business in these three islands and have not particularly benefited continental beet and cane producers. The present bill is the only acceptable method by which a reduction in the amount of sugar produced in these islands can be obtained.

It is a good bill because it limits the production of Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands. It puts the Cuban quota considerably below their production in normal times and gives American beet and cane producers a substantial increase over their average production, although it is 200,000 tons below the production for the past year.

The Secretary of Agriculture assures the farmers of the Nation that the increase in price per ton of beets will more than offset the reduction of approximately 10 percent in quota from 1933. A careful reading of the bill and of the testimony adduced indicates that this result can be achieved, and I have no doubt that the administration will exert every effort to justify the predictions of the Secretary of Agriculture.

There is much to be said against any restriction of continental production, and I will later set forth some of the reasons therefor. If it were a simple case of restriction of Cuban importation, the problem would not be difficult, but the complication lies in the production of the low-cost island possessions and the Philippines. We cannot protect the continental producer without at the same time protecting our territorial producers, and they have succeeded in glutting the sugar market. The present bill is a temporary measure, limited to 3 years in operation. During that time doubtless a plan can be worked out which will stabilize the industry and insure adequate returns to the American farmer and manufacturer.

As a matter of permanent policy I am against any restriction of American sugar production—at least below the capacity of the plants. From the standpoint of national economy it may, after investigation, be determined that it is best not to expand. This is the position of the Secretary of Agriculture. He has given every assurance that there will be no attempt to restrict unreasonably American production. While I agree that the present bill is desirable, I think that it will be found later that the only sound basis for an American sugar program will be based on the capacity of the continental processors. Much can be said in favor of a program which would prevent expansion, but I do not believe there is a sound argument for restriction below the present plant capacity.

THE NATIONAL DEFENSE ARGUMENTS

One of the fundamental reasons for maintaining the continental sugar business is based on the national defense.

It is a matter of common knowledge that during the World War England suffered severely because of the impossibility of getting a sufficient quantity of sugar, not only because of the need of using their merchant marine and naval auxiliaries for war purposes but also because of the effectiveness of the German submarine blockade, which prevented the plentiful supply from tropical islands reaching Great Britain and Ireland. This notwithstanding the fact that England had the most powerful navy in the world. This bitter experience has had a remarkable effect in England. They have set up a policy of encouraging production of sugar in the islands of Great Britain and Ireland.

In 1913 and 1914 they produced no sugar. In 1925 they produced 51,000 tons. In 1926 they produced 165,000 tons; in 1927, 208,000 tons, and so on upward to a production of 450,000 tons in 1933.

There is no question but that Great Britain, with her powerful Navy and its tropical colonial possessions, would be in a better condition than this country or any other country to get its supply of sugar from abroad, but the English Nation, with its customary far-sightedness, based upon its unfortunate World War experience, has embarked upon this definite policy of expansion of beet-sugar production, ranging from nothing to 450,000 tons, or approximately one third of the beet-sugar production of the United States.

Of course, it is difficult to imagine, at the present time, a condition where the United States could not control transportation between the West Indies and the United States, but it is no more difficult than to conceive in 1914 that Great Britain could be prevented from bringing sugar from its colonial possessions, with the combined fleets of England, France, and the United States to protect that commerce, and a most important difference is that in the case of England her sugar can be produced largely in her own possessions, British India being in 1913 the largest producer of sugar in the world.

In the case of the United States, even assuming that the Philippines remain a part of our territory, we could not secure our full supply of sugar without applying to other governments. It, therefore, seems most unwise to restrict in any manner whatsoever continental beet-sugar production.

The press has lately told that Italy has embarked on a program of encouragement of domestic beet production.

A second fundamental reason is found in the relationship between retail prices and the tariff. It will be found that a low tariff has not necessarily meant lower prices. It will be shown in the following statement that a reasonable price for sugar is assured only when there is a substantial and reasonably profitable continental sugar production.

RELATIONSHIP OF RETAIL PRICES AND THE TARIFF

I have prepared a table setting forth the retail price per pound of sugar in United States money throughout the world. The table is appended and will appear in the RECORD.

A few typical examples indicate the conditions in the United States as compared with those in other large countries. The price in Germany is 11.78 cents a pound; the price in France is 10.07 cents a pound; the price in Holland is 11.16 cents a pound; the price in Italy is 21 cents a pound; the price in Spain is 8 cents a pound. There are only four countries in the world where the price is below that of the United States. They are as follows: Denmark, approximately 4 cents per pound; England 4 cents per pound; Java 4 cents per pound; Japan, approximately 4 cents per pound.

The price in the United States was 4.3 cents per pound, wholesale, as of October 15, 1933. There has been a slight rise, generally speaking, as occurred elsewhere. The price varies from a low of 3.87 in Denmark and Japan to a high of 4.03 in Russia. The price in the United States is one of the lowest obtainable anywhere in the world. The five low price countries all approximate 4 cents a pound generally speaking. The price in the United States is considerably below the average world price. The best comparison between the United States and any other country is with Canada. The price in the United States in the month of February, wholesale per hundred pounds for cane was $4.50, for beets was $4.30, at Detroit, Mich. At the same time, the price in Windsor, Canada, immediately across the river, was $6.30 per hundred pounds. It is interesting to note that the United States produces approximately one third of its sugar consumption, whereas Canada produces no substantial part of its sugar consumption, having, I believe, but three sugar mills within the limits of the Dominion.

In this connection it is interesting to note the retail prices in the United States during high- and low-tariff periods. The tariff on raw sugar from March 1, 1914, to May 27, 1921, was approximately $1 a hundred pounds against Cuba and $1.25 a hundred pounds against other countries. During that period we had the highest sugar price in recent history. In the year 1920 the monthly prices varied from a low of 10½ cents a pound to a high of 26.7 cents a pound. On May 27, 1921, the Cuban tariff was increased to $1.60 a hundred pounds and the tariff against other countries to $2 a hundred. The price for the first 4 months of 1921 exceeded 9 cents on the average. In May the price dropped to 8¼ cents and steadily declined to 6½ cents a pound without again, after the month of May, reaching as high as 8 cents. The tariff rates last given continued until September 22, 1922, when the rates were raised to $1.76 on Cuban importations and $2.20 on others. That rate continued in effect until June 17, 1930. The average prices under the higher rates were as follows: 7 cents, 10 cents, 9 cents, 7 cents, 6 cents, 7 cents, 7 cents, for the respective yearly periods to and including 1929. On June 18, 1930, the tariff was again raised to $2 per hundred against Cuba and $2.50 per hundred against other countries. The average prices from 1930 are as follows—yearly averages: 6.2 cents, 1930; 5.1 cents, 1931; 5.1 cents, 1932; 5.4 cents, 1933.

Therefore, it would seem that the raising of the tariff has little to do with the price of sugar. The highest price on record took place at a time when the tariff was the lowest, and the lowest price in the past 15 years came at a time when the tariff was the highest.

It is apparent from this summary of sugar prices and comparison with tariff rates that the American consumer is best protected from exploitation by sugar interests when the largest share of the production is given the American producers through high tariff rates, and the greatest exploitation of the consumer takes place at the time when the largest amount of foreign sugar comes in as a result of low tariff rates, which have frightened American producers and prevented them from growing and manufacturing sugar. It follows logically that the American consumer is best protected by giving the largest possible share of American production to American producers.

The tariff is a factor in this result, but from what has been said it is obvious that restriction of production by the insular possessions and the Philippines is also a vital factor. The result to be achieved is one in which continental American production is maintained both by a reasonable tariff against foreign countries and a reasonable restriction of production by our insular possessions.

In conclusion, it may be said that the sugar interests of the country should, and I believe do, favor the present bill as being better than no bill at all, and much better than the chaos of the past few years. As heretofore indicated, we believe that it could be substantially improved, but it is a long step in the right direction. It is far superior to a raising of the tariff, which would be principally of benefit to the Philippines and the insular possessions. It will, if properly administered, and we have no reason to suppose that it will not be, stabilize the industry.

For the future we believe that the logic of events will bring about some changes which will base the American production upon the present capacity of the plants, with possibly a restriction on increase in production. By this method a reasonable price to American consumers would be assured, exploitation by foreign producers would be prevented, and substantial acreage in the United States would be used for beet and cane growing. At the same time, a reasonably large share of the American market would be assured for our territories and foreign trade, thereby giving the administration the opportunity to use the powers granted under the reciprocal tariff bill for the purpose of increasing American exports of other agricultural products.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, if Congress passes this piece of legislation they will be sending out public apology for the allotment or quota plan which has been devised here.

Practically every advocate of this measure has given it a left-handed endorsement; and in the face of the fact that we here are attempting to make virtue out of necessity we tell the people of America that even though there is no overproduction in continental United States, we are going to place them on a quota basis and give to our island possessions increased production. Now, let me say that since the barrage was laid down last month by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF], in which I joined on the same date, we have accomplished important results for the American farmer. Under this bill continental United States is given a quota of 1,550,000 tons, which is an increase of 100,000 tons over the original proposal that was introduced by the committee. That bill reduced our production 300,000 tons. This measure reduces it 200,000 tons. But when all is said and done, in the final analysis of this bill, we are handing over to the Department of Agriculture and to its Secretary, Mr. Wallace, and to his assistants, Mr. Weaver and Mr. Tugwell, the probable fate of the sugar industry of the continental United States; and you are entrusting it to unfriendly hands, to the hands of men who believe that it is an inefficient industry.

This bill has been called a choice of two evils, but what a price we pay in order to escape the greater of the two. The industry needs stabilization, it needs protection, it needs encouragement. However, the American producer should be the first to receive consideration, and if we are driven to the necessity of accepting this in order to save the sugar industry of the United States, we have come to a surprising state of affairs.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART].

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, coming from probably the largest sugar-producing district in Michigan, I am going to support the bill. It is not all I should like to have had, but what interest, what group, or what section of the country does get legislation from this Congress that is all they desire? Legislation is more or less a matter of compromise.

May I discuss for a minute this gun that my friend, Mr. WOODRUFF, from the adjoining district is talking about? He says that the gun is not loaded. There is no question in my mind but that the gun is loaded, but the ammunition is not tariff in the sense he views it. It is loaded and held to our head. The loaded gun is the insular possessions which our friends on the other side placed there when they brought into the United States Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and permitted the Philippine Islands with their cheap labor to get a $2 bonus to produce sugar. [Applause.]

I noticed when my friend from Port Huron, Mr. WALCOTT, on the other side talked about cheap labor and the cost of production in Cuba he did not give us the cost of production in Puerto Rico where they got a $2 bonus to bring their sugar in here and compete with the farmers in his district and mine. When my friend, Mr. WALCOTT, was discussing the cheap competition from Cuba, did he purposely omit to describe the similar conditions under which sugar was produced in Puerto Rico—produced with the same cheap labor and under the same tropical conditions which exist in Cuba? Why did he fail to show that Puerto Rico could produce sugar so much cheaper that his own beet farmers in Huron and Tuscola Counties could not compete?

He did not want to call their attention to the fact that under a Republican administration they were paying the peon labor of Puerto Rico a bonus of $2 per ton over Cuba to bring into this country sugar to compete with his own farmers. This same condition exists with reference to the Virgin Islands, to Hawaii, and to the Philippine Islands, who use cheap oriental labor.

Yet my friend from Port Huron never discussed this cheap competition, which not only competes with Cuba but is given an extra $2 a hundred on their sugar to stimulate its production to the ruination of all Michigan sugar-beet farmers.

Therefore, if I have not obtained everything I desire, I am at least going to prevent this industry from being wiped out and the sugar plants in Michigan from being sold under the hammer, as has been done during the past 12 years, when my Republican friends have given tariffs that amounted to embargoes to eastern manufacturers, yet they would not protect sufficiently this one agricultural commodity [applause] which lends itself to tariff and quota protection.

Their sole argument against the pending bill is that it does not give the American farmer the unlimited American market on sugar. Let me call your attention to the fact that Puerto Rico, Hawaii, and the Virgin Islands are integral parts of the United States and as such are entitled to the same protection as other parts of the United States. The Government does have some responsibility with reference to these possessions which were acquired under Republican rule, when the administration was embarked upon an imperialistic policy, so that their capitalists might have possessions to exploit. The reason sugar has not been put on a profitable basis for the American farmer is that these capitalists have had investments in these insular possessions, using cheap labor and reaping enormous profits, due to the fact that they were given $2 per hundred advantage over Cuba for sugar.

Our Republican friends, to fool the American beet-sugar farmer, have continually pointed to Cuba as the "big, bad wolf" of the sugar industry, while this industry was slowly being smothered by Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Philippine Islands.

While Cuba shipped to this country last year about 1,500,000 tons, we received from these insular possessions something like 3,000,000 tons, and, due to the $2 bounty, they were able to drive our market down to about the lowest point in history. All this will be corrected under the present sugar quota bill, and we will be given a large portion of the increase in consumption of sugar in this country. Within a few years this will more than tax our present refineries to capacity. I therefore shall support the pending bill. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. MCCANDLESS].

Mr. MCCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have to come here today and speak against this bill. The reason is that all of our sugar-producing areas, including the continental United States, are not able to produce enough sugar to supply the people of this country. We have had the cattle industry come here asking for help to take care of its overproduction. We have had the wheat industry with its overproduction and we have had other industries come in and plead with you to help them. We have appropriated $200,000,000 to help the cattlemen to take care of their overproduction. We now are considering a commodity in which there is no overproduction. You cannot raise the amount of sugar that you need and you just say, "Cut it down." I cannot conceive how any man in this Congress could say "Yes" on this bill, because the American people should have the first right to produce the foods that are consumed in this country. We are not growing enough sugar to supply our home market, therefore we have to go to Cuba or to some other foreign country to get sugar needed to meet the consumption needs. And yet you would by this bill reduce our sugar production.

You are here to conduct the business of the Nation. You together represent the people of this Nation, and you were elected to come here because you are intelligent, right-thinking men and women, capable of looking after the interests of your own districts and of the larger interests of the entire Nation.

We are discussing a bill to control sugar production, to actually reduce the number of tons of sugar produced in the continental United States, its Territories and possessions. I have no fault to find with the principles of this bill insofar as it provides for regulation of the sugar industry. But I do have definite objections to those provisions which would reduce the output of an American industry in order to benefit a similar industry in a foreign country.

The United States consumes, roughly, 6,500,000 tons of sugar annually. Under normal production, the mainland beet and cane areas would produce approximately 2,000,000 short tons, raw value; Hawaii, about 1,000,000 tons; Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Philippines together about 2,000,000 short tons. Thus the production of sugar by continental and insular growers combined would amount to approximately 5,000,000 tons of sugar, leaving one and one half million tons to be imported from other sources to meet the estimated consumption demands.

It would seem to me a logical and fair proposition to allow the American sugar areas to produce this 5,000,000 tons of sugar, and to allot to foreign countries and Cuba, as the chief foreign importer of sugar, the balance necessary to meet the consumption needs.

But this bill does not propose to do that. This bill would reduce the amount of sugar produced by American enterprise in order to increase the importation of sugar from Cuba, a foreign country. This is not fair; it is not what you were sent here to do as fair-minded men and women. How can you justify your actions when you aid a foreign industry at the expense of an American industry?

My chief objection to this bill, however, is that it would discriminate against the Territory of Hawaii, whose people I represent, and would seriously threaten the financial, economic, and social stability of an integral part of the United States.

This bill in its present form provides definite quotas for the continental beet- and cane-sugar areas, 1,550,000 short tons for the former and 260,000 short tons for the latter. Determination of quotas for the Territory of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and the Philippines is left to the discretion of the Secretary of Agriculture, who may take any 3-year period within the past 8 years as a basis for the sugar quotas for these insular areas.

The Territory of Hawaii does not deserve to be discriminated against in this manner. The Territory of Hawaii is entitled to just as much consideration and to just as much protection of her industries as are the beet- and cane-producing States. The bill discriminates even to a greater extent than this. It provides that if there is an increase in consumption over the estimated figures upon which the present quotas are based, the continental sugar areas shall be allowed at least 30 percent of this increase, while if there is a decrease below the estimated consumption, such decrease shall be taken entirely from the insular and foreign sugar areas. The continental sugar-producing areas are thus protected from every angle, while Hawaii is classed exactly the same as a foreign country, and is so treated in this bill.

My friends, this is not being fair to the Territory of Hawaii, it is not living up to the solemn obligations assumed by the United States when Hawaii was united with the United States as an incorporated Territory. In 1897 two sovereign powers, the Republic of Hawaii and the United States of America, entered into a treaty to provide for the annexation of Hawaii as a Territory. This treaty reads in part as follows:

> The Republic of Hawaii and the United States of America, in view of the natural dependence of the Hawaiian Islands upon the United States, of their geographical proximity thereto, of the preponderant share acquired by the United States and its citizens in the industries and trade of said islands, and of the expressed desire of the government of the Republic of Hawaii that those islands should be incorporated into the United States as an integral part thereof, and under its sovereignty have determined to accomplish by treaty an object so important to their mutual and permanent welfare.

That treaty was a contract between two sovereign powers, and guaranteed the Territory of Hawaii treatment as an integral part of the United States. How, then, can you justify this bill, which treats Hawaii just as you propose to treat Cuba, a foreign country? In fact, it appears that we are to be given even less consideration than a foreign country, for the general assumption is that under this bill the present importation of sugar into the United States from Cuba is to be increased, while the Territory of Hawaii's production is to be reduced. Are you going to allow our Government to default on its contract with Hawaii merely because that Territory has not sufficient representation here to demand the treatment that is rightfully hers, merely because we have no vote in Congress?

The Territory of Hawaii has lived up to all its obligations assumed in the treaty quoted above. We contributed more to the United States Treasury last year than 17 of the States, including the States of Idaho, Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Utah, and Wyoming, all of which as producers of sugar beets are taken care of in the beet-sugar quota fixed in this bill. Yet the Territory of Hawaii is not to be given the benefit of a fixed quota, but must depend on figures established by the Secretary of Agriculture, figures that may by the terms of this bill be changed from time to time, and will, therefore, place the sugar industry of the Territory of Hawaii in a state of constant uncertainty that will bring ultimate chaos to the industry which is the mainstay of the Territory.

The President has recommended that quotas be fixed for the various sugar-producing areas, and in this recommendation he advised a quota of 1,450,000 short tons for the mainland and 935,000 short tons for the Territory of Hawaii. Even this figure would mean a reduction of 100,000 tons in our normal production, but we were willing to accept the President's recommendations. I have tried to get into this bill the quota for the Territory of Hawaii, which the President recommended, 935,000 short tons, but I was refused. The committee was willing to grant the mainland areas 100,000 tons more than the President recommended, but ignored his recommendation for Hawaii. The committee preferred to report the bill in its present form, with the Territory of Hawaii treated as a possession, rather than as an integral part of the United States. The same proportionate increase given the mainland areas above the President's recommendation should give the Territory of Hawaii a quota of 1,000,450 tons. This is the quota I now ask for the Territory of Hawaii.

The production of sugar is the chief industry of Hawaii, and upon the welfare of this industry depends the entire financial, economic, and social welfare of the Territory. In Hawaii we have by the use of scientific methods developed the production of sugar to the highest efficiency in the world. We have maintained American standards of wages and living conditions. We have a school system which is the equal of any elsewhere in the United States, and are educating 80,000 children to become good American citizens. Would you jeopardize all this by discriminating against the Territory of Hawaii as this bill now does?

Should the sugar crop of Hawaii be materially reduced, it would reduce the tax income of the Territory and threaten the financial stability of the community, which is even now having difficulty in keeping its budget balanced. The Territory, even with large private contributions for social service, has a hard task caring for the destitute and needy. I shudder to think what will happen to these unfortunate souls if several thousand more persons are thrown out of employment by a reduction of the sugar crop and at the same time the funds available for their relief are curtailed.

You would not deliberately legislate here to bankrupt a State government. Why, then, should you bankrupt a Territory that is part and parcel of the United States? Why should you throw thousands of persons out of employment and create untold suffering in an American community in order to help the industry of a foreign country?

Without a definite sugar quota for the Territory of Hawaii, it will be absolutely impossible for the plantations there to plan for the future. Sugarcane as it is grown in Hawaii is not a 1-year crop as it is in most other sugar-producing areas. In Hawaii sugarcane is planted in most cases for harvesting at least 2 years in advance, and in some cases where the ratoon system is possible, one planting yields crops for 5 years or more. At the present time in the Territory of Hawaii we have in the ground our sugar crops for this year, for 1935, and 1936, and in some areas even farther into the future.

This bill provides that the sugar quota for the Territory of Hawaii which is to be set by the Secretary of Agriculture may be changed from time to time. How can the sugar plantations plan their crops 3 years ahead when they have no assurance whatsoever that the quota in effect at any one time will not be arbitrarily changed before they can harvest those crops? How can any industry thrive when it is unable to plan for the future? The uncertainty which this bill would create in Hawaii's sugar market would work absolute havoc with her sugar industry and with the entire Territory.

The mainland sugar areas, which plant from year to year, are given a definite quota upon which they may depend. Why should not the Territory of Hawaii, where we must plan for a 3-year crop, be provided with a definite quota so that the sugar industry there can plan intelligently and with some possibility of conforming to the restrictions placed upon their production?

The bill now provides penalties for attempting to market more than the quota allowed, and it provides that any surplus above 1 year's quota may be deducted from the quota for the following year. Hawaii's sugar crops for the next 3 years are already under cultivation and are bound to exceed whatever quota may be established. Is she to be penalized for this?

All I ask for the Territory of Hawaii is that she be accorded fair and equitable treatment, the treatment to which she is entitled by reason of the provisions of the treaty under which she was annexed, by reason of her status as an integral part of the United States, by reason of her living up to all her obligations. We are an enterprising American community, with ideals and standards just as high as any other American community. I cannot believe—I will not believe that you, as just and fair-minded men and women, will sit calmly by and tolerate the discrimination against the Territory of Hawaii which this bill in its present form provides.

Some of you Members have said on the floor of this House that the Territory of Hawaii must be maintained as an American community, worthy of the flag that flies over those islands in the Pacific.

Do you expect us to be able to maintain American standards if the industry on which depends the welfare of that Territory and its people is ruined?

You ask that we maintain ourselves as an American community, worthy of the flag that flies over the Territory of Hawaii.

I ask that we be treated as an American community, and that we be accorded all the protection which that same flag offers to our sister communities on the mainland of the United States.

Following is a statement which I made on this bill before the House Agriculture Committee, and also a number of cables which I have received from Hawaii protesting against the discrimination which this bill contains, and urging the inclusion of a definite sugar quota for the Territory of Hawaii.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Delegate be given 3 additional minutes, not to be taken out of the time of either side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCANDLESS. Mr. Speaker, I want to proceed just a little further.

Cuba in 1933 exported into the United States $58,000,000 worth of sugar. They allowed us to sell to them $25,000,000 worth of goods. In other words, they had a balance of trade in their favor of $33,544,000. This $33,000,000 has gone to Cuba, and you are going to take it out of the pockets of the American people and give it to Cuba. Is this Americanism? I feel just exactly as Patrick Henry felt when he said, "Give me liberty or give me death."

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCANDLESS. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. COLDEN. The gentleman has spoken about Hawaii being treated as a stepchild. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that Hawaiian planters have exploited labor imported from Portugal, Puerto Rico, China, Korea, Japan, and now from the Philippines, and they, in turn, have at no time employed a large number of American people upon their plantations?

Mr. McCANDLESS. A great many American people are employed upon the plantations and all the children born in the Territory of Hawaii are American citizens. We have done just as you have done in the East. The gentleman is living on the Pacific Ocean. Others are living on the Atlantic Ocean. In the East here your labor comes from Europe. We are living in the middle of the Pacific, in the oriental section of the world, where there are some 400,000,000 people. Half of the population of the world is over there bordering on the Pacific Ocean. Where must we go for our workers? We go to the places that we can get labor. In the Philippines bill that was passed here recently there is a provision that no Filipinos can be brought into Hawaii without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COLDEN. I was going to ask the gentleman this further question. Did not the recent independence bill provide for the continuation of the exploitation of Philippine labor in the Hawaiian Islands?

Mr. McCANDLESS. Not without the consent of the Secretary of the Interior. If you have confidence in the Secretary of the Interior of the United States I think the gentleman need have no fear in that regard.

There are many things I have here which might be of historical interest to you.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCANDLESS. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. TRUAX. As I understand the Delegate from Hawaii, this bill will in no way benefit the sugar growers of Hawaii?

Mr. McCANDLESS. I tried to get a quota from the committee for Hawaii, such as the President of the United States wanted to give us, but the committee refused and gave a quota to the mainland growers only, and denied a quota to the Territory of Hawaii, which, by treaty, is part and parcel of this country, as much so as Texas or Colorado.

Following I have some data on the sugar situation and a comparison of the trade which exists between Cuba and the United States and that between the mainland United States and Hawaii. These figures should have your consideration, for they will show that by depriving the Territory of Hawaii of the revenue from her sugar industry, you will be depriving the United States Treasury and mainland business houses of many thousands of dollars in revenue.

Average annual sugar price per 100 pounds from 1923 through 1933

1923	$7.02
1924	5.964
1925	4.334
1926	4.337
1927	4.73
1928	4.229
1929	3.769
1930	[1] 3.387
1931	[2] 3.329
1932	[3] 2.925
1933	[4] 3.208

The average cost of producing sugar in Hawaii is about $65 per short ton. Thus it is clear that during the 4 years from 1930 through 1933, with the price of sugar averaging $67, $66, $58, and $64 per short ton for these respective years, the sugar producers of Hawaii were forced to sell their product on the average at a price about equal to the cost of production, and in the cases of many plantations, actually below cost of production. These figures above quoted, of course, represent raw sugar.

Following is a tabulation showing the exports and imports between Hawaii and the mainland, and a comparison between the volume of trade shown and that between Cuba and the United States:

Year	Exports, Hawaii to mainland	Imports, mainland to Hawaii	Balance of trade
1931	$106,098,975	$82,469,322	$23,629,653
1932	95,362,867	67,515,507	27,847,360
1933	82,506,629	53,551,175	28,955,454

	1930	1932	1933
Imports, Cuba to United States	$90,059,000	$38,330,000	$58,437,000
Exports, United States to Cuba	46,964,000	28,755,000	25,093,000
Total	43,095,000	9,575,000	33,344,000

As the above figures indicate, Cuba has exported to the United States more sugar per year than has Hawaii, for it is to be remembered that the chief export of both Cuba and Hawaii is sugar, which accounts for by far the greater portion of the export trade indicated in the above tables.

In spite, however, of Hawaii shipping to the mainland United States less sugar than Cuba, we have nevertheless purchased from the mainland goods the total value of which each year far exceeds similar purchases by Cuba.

Yet this bill proposes to give Cuba a quota of 1,944,000 tons of sugar and to reduce the sugar output of Hawaii from 1,035,546 tons, the amount produced in 1933, to 935,000 tons, a reduction of 100,546 tons.

It would appear from the above that Hawaii, an integral part of the United States, is being discriminated against in favor of Cuba, a foreign country.

Insofar as one can ascertain from official figures, Cuba, from 1904 to 1932, inclusive, a period of 29 years, has a balance of trade with the United States in her favor of the staggering sum of $2,336,795,000, or an average balance of trade in her favor of $80,000,000 per annum.

Hawaii, with an annual balance of trade less than that of Cuba, not only purchases from the United States more per year, but also pays into the Federal Treasury substantial sums in the form of receipts from internal revenue, customs, postal collections, court fees, and passport fees, while neither Cuba, the Philippines, nor Puerto Rico contribute a single dollar in this manner.

[1] Or $67.74 per short ton.
[2] Or $66.58 per short ton.
[3] Or $58.50 per short ton.
[4] Or $64.16 per short ton.

The following tabulation shows the sums Hawaii has paid into the Federal Treasury during the past 3 years from various sources mentioned above:

Direct revenue to the Federal Government from Hawaii

Year	Internal revenue	Customs	Postal	Passports	Courts
1931	$4,816,475.31	$1,908,632.10	$548,334.57	$2,218	$12,933.20
1932	3,875,879.08	1,572,732.56	579,969.23	3,249	20,125.71
1933	3,067,249.39	1,408,871.02	548,098.17	5,063	17,559.68
Total	11,759,603.78	4,890,235.68	1,676,401.97	10,530	50,618.59

Grand total, $18,297,385.12.

Hawaii is by the very nature of its incorporation into the Union part and parcel of the United States. It is, in addition, the westernmost defense outpost of this country, and its welfare for that reason alone is of vital importance to every man, woman, and child in this country. The entire economic, social, and financial welfare of Hawaii is dependent on its sugar industry, to which this bill in its present form would deal a staggering blow.

Hawaii is in every sense American, and it would be a gross injustice to treat its sugar industry in any other manner than on a basis of exact equality with the sugar industry of the mainland United States.

The following are organizations and individuals of the Territory of Hawaii who have cabled me urging the inclusion of Hawaiian sugar growers on the same basis as continental sugar growers in H.R. 8861:

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the Delegate from Puerto Rico, but I ask unanimous consent that he be given 5 additional minutes, not to be taken out of the time of either side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico [Mr. IGLESIAS].

Mr. GUEVARA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. IGLESIAS. I yield.

Mr. GUEVARA. I wish to ask a question of the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES], as to the quota that may be assigned to the Philippine Islands. Will we have a legal right to call upon the Governor General of the Philippines to fix the quota or make the allotment of them?

Mr. JONES. In my judgment, he would have that duty. I think he can designate anyone to do the mechanical work in making quotas or allotting them; at least, he can ratify anything that his agents may do.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, it is almost impossible for me to state the situation of Puerto Rico at this moment on account of lack of time to do it.

I understand the fundamentals on which this bill has been drafted and the way the House has been requested to pass it, but Puerto Rico feels it is entitled to be treated with the same consideration that has been accorded to the domestic producers of sugar.

Puerto Rico wants to be recognized as an integral part of the United States and be recognized in the same way as any domestic community of the mainland or any other part or territory of the United States.

Since Puerto Rico has become a part of this country, our people and our children have been taught the principles and the ideals and the sentiments of this Nation, and we feel we are citizens of the United States not of a second class but of the same class as the citizens of the mainland.

Puerto Rico has taken a position in regard to two phases of this bill. One is that Puerto Rico should have fixed the quota that is going to be given to the island. The other is our uncertainty of the future in not having such a quota for our people and for the island as a whole is a tremendous backward step.

Some of our friends have talked about the cheap labor in Puerto Rico. It is true we have cheap labor in Puerto Rico, just as you have such labor in many communities of the United States where men and women are working in the same industry. I know that organized labor for many years has fought for a correction of the situation of the men in this class of labor. We have had the same fights that you have had in the States. We have been inspired by the ideals and principles of the American Federation of Labor and of organized labor generally, against having slave conditions in Puerto Rico. We have been going around the island trying to elevate and uplift the conditions of labor, and you must infer that we are not going to keep on with this cheap labor.

Puerto Rico has requested that a quota be fixed in the bill and has also requested that she be not discriminated against by the terms of this measure.

I am now going to make this declaration: It is very unfortunate that the principles and ideals of the President of the United States should be minimized in a bill of this kind. It is most unfortunate that the material things of business should be considered more important or should be put before the spiritual things of the people of the United States in Puerto Rico, in Hawaii, or in any other place where the American flag is telling these people that they are citizens of the American Nation. [Applause.]

This is a terrible handicap to education and it is bad for the morals of Puerto Rico that with respect to the sugar question or any other question of business, we should be told that we are Americans, but when material things or when organized capital or when business is involved, we should be told, "You are not American like the people in continental United States, but you are Americans of some other kind." Such a policy should not be sustained in any possible way.

Furthermore, the business of sugar has been built up in Puerto Rico by continental United States. The mercantile business as well as almost every other kind of business activity in Puerto Rico has been built up by continental America.

Mr. Speaker, both houses of the Legislature of Puerto Rico, and the representatives of the sugar associations of the island, have sent cables of protest objecting to the position which has been given to Puerto Rico in this bill, H.R. 8861, a position they believe identical to that of a foreign country.

These cables are as follows:

SAN JUAN, P.R., March 24, 1934.

HON. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner for Puerto Rico,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

The Senate of Puerto Rico strongly protests against the new Jones sugar bill, which classifies Puerto Rico in same class as Cuba, different to other continental American areas. We demand, as American citizens living in American territory, that a proportionate quota be inserted in bill, same as beets. We feel that it is the duty of Congress to give the same protection to Puerto Rican cane farmers and labor in the United States, and it is a great injustice to sacrifice our island citizens to protect foreign capital and American capital invested in a foreign country. We respectfully wish to remind you that this island is overpopulated with American citizens who greatly depend on sugar, while Cuba is an island underpopulated, which during crop season imports outside labor. Not being the intention of Congress to bring further hardships on this island, which has supported all the encumbrances of the Agriculture Adjustment Act—that cost the island over $10,000,000—we wish that fair consideration be given to Puerto Rico, so that we may obtain the largest possible raw-sugar quota, and this be included in the bill; and that no limitation whatsoever be made as to the amount of refined sugar to be shipped to our only market which is not overproduced with American sugar.

R. MARTINEZ NADAL,
President Senate of Puerto Rico.

SAN JUAN, P.R.,
April 3, 1934.

SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico,
Washington, D.C.

Tentative concession of privilege to continental sugar producers and assistance to Cuban producers while omitting Puerto Rican producers, considering the latter of a part with foreign producers, causes deep discouragement to the 1,600,000 American citizens of this island. Our titanic struggle against adversity in 3,435 square miles of territory which cannot humanly contain the 450 persons to a square mile which it now supports, with the aggravating circumstance of an increase in population of 30 or 40 thousand inhabitants yearly will be unbearable if our principal source of work is weakened by excessive reduction of our sugar quota. Because the cost of living has increased there by 33 percent through our cooperation toward the success of the N.R.A., in good administrative practice assistance extended to the foreign Cuban industry should not sacrifice our own which is part of the domestic American industry because this is the right country in point of importations from the United States because the product which is the object of the regulation of the quota plays such an important part in the life of our country that on it depends 58 percent of its population, and because I have confidence and faith that the nobility with which your great Nation has treated our people, will not suffer diminution to the detriment of the spirit of indissoluble union between both which we defend with sincere fervor, I petition your honor to use your good offices in defense of our principal industry.

MIGUEL A. GARCIA MENDEZ,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

SAN JUAN, P.R.,
March 26, 1934.

SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Puerto Rico Resident Commissioner,
Washington, D.C.

Understand House Agricultural Committee favors changing Jones bill to provide for fixed quotas continental sugar producers and leaving Puerto Rico quota at discretion of Secretary of Agriculture. This highly discriminatory and unsatisfactory leaving island industry in stage of uncertainty. We protest most strongly being considered different than continental Americans and put in class of Cuba, a foreign nation. Insist on proportionate Puerto Rico quota being inserted in bill same as beets. It should not be forgotten that sugarcane agriculture and cane-sugar manufacture constitute the main source of living of 1,600,000 loyal American citizens and that sugar income determines the island purchasing power in a rate of from 70 to 75 percent. Any discrimination against Puerto Rico principal occupation will keep us from being as we now are, the eighth most important buyer of United States products. We are supporting the administration's national program, paying higher prices for continental farmers and manufacturers as a result of the A.A.A. and N.R.A. operation, and thus it is extremely unjust that a different treatment be given to us at the time relief is to be extended to sugar for long in depression. We beg your cooperation in line with the above.

RAMON ABOY BENITEZ,
President Puerto Rico Sugar Producers Association.

SAN JUAN, P.R., March 31, 1934.

SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico,
Washington, D.C.:

Have continental cane refiners a right to a monopoly of cane-sugar refining in the United States? That is what new sugar control bill recognizes and establishes. Original sugar control bill contained no such monopolistic features. Puerto Rican refiners being railroaded out of business by this bill, being rushed through without hearing and debate, to the benefit of continental refiners who have twice been found guilty under the antitrust laws for doing what this bill contemplates. On behalf of Puerto Ricans, industry owned and financed by native Puerto Ricans, all American citizens, we ask for your help. In view of fact refining industry established in cooperation with Government of Puerto Rico, our plants should, by committee amendment, be allowed at capacity agreed on last fall by Agricultural Adjustment Division and Tariff Commission, or, at least, be given as great a percentage as Cuban refiners in relation to their respective law sugar quotas.

PEDRO JUAN SERRALLES,
On Behalf of Refiners of Puerto Rico.

It is to be regretted indeed that Puerto Rico, an American Territory, comprised of 1,600,000 American citizens, be placed in the same category with Cuba and other foreign countries. Of course, I understand and recognize the purposes and intentions of this bill in trying to protect the American industry; but permit me to respectfully suggest that Puerto Rico as American Territory should have been given a proportionate quota, and the same should have been inserted into this bill, just as well as has been accorded to the sugar-beet interests and the cane-sugar interests in the mainland.

The people of Puerto Rico, as represented by their legislature, has asked to be protected and to receive the same treatment as their brother citizens of the continent.

With the exception of the mainland, Puerto Rico is the largest community of American citizens in the world and, among all the nations of earth, ranks eighth as a purchaser of American goods. In the last 20 years the Puerto Rican people have bought in excess of one thousand million dollars worth of commodities from the mainland.

As an organized Territory, we are an integral part of the United States, and, consequently, we believe that we should be accorded the same consideration as the domestic producers.

This bill is somewhat different from the thought of the President's message and recommendations, as it inserts a specific increase quota of 1,550,000 short tons for the United States beet-sugar area and does not mention any quota for Puerto Rico and for other territorial areas. Puerto Rico, therefore, is afraid that a quota below a fair proportion may be imposed upon the island, and that it would be so much more harmful to Puerto Rico if the Secretary of Agriculture, who would have full discretion in fixing the other quotas, should provide for a correspondingly high quota for any foreign country and then apply the balance to Puerto Rico.

In other words, there is a fear that if this bill should become law as it is, then Puerto Rico, which is an organized Territory of the United States and is subject to practically all the Federal laws, will be left to the uncertainty of the future regarding the quota it could get. Such an uncertainty would be in conflict with the President's suggestions about quotas and would be extremely unfair and might create considerable economic disturbances in Puerto Rico; and for this reason I have offered an amendment to fix the quotas in this bill, such quotas to be fixed in accordance with the President's recommendations and on the basis of respective marketings to any American area under the American flag.

It should furthermore be borne in mind in arriving at such quotas that the respective marketings of Puerto Rico were curtailed by an act of Nature and that the Puerto Rico quota should be correspondingly adjusted to give effect to a loss which we have suffered due to the 1932 hurricane. Therefore, we have requested that this bill should be amended by giving the Secretary of Agriculture discretion to fix the quotas for all areas on the basis as outlined in the President's message. In fact, it seems to be as entirely unfair to sacrifice the business of the Puerto Rican sugar industry or to endanger the economic situation in Puerto Rico, affecting 1,600,000 law-abiding American citizens.

I have been requested to fix a quota for Puerto Rico of 875,000 short tons. In doing so the island is asking a quota strictly in accordance with the President's recommendations based upon respective marketings during the last 3 years, except that we adjust this figure to give effect to the hurricane losses affecting our 1933 importations.

The proposed bill, furthermore, it has been ascertained, contemplates to limit the exportation of refined sugar from Puerto Rico to the status quo whereas it does not embody such a limitation in connection with other refiners. This in itself has been regarded as a very severe restriction against Puerto Rico and an actual confiscation of industry and capital in connection with the Puerto Rico sugar refinery. Therefore, if the proposed bill contains such restriction, the bill should be changed to allow Puerto Rico to bring its quota in any form whatsoever. The proposed bill, it is affirmed, purports to discriminate against Puerto Rico in favor of Cuba by limiting the refined importations from Puerto Rico to approximately 100,000 tons per annum, whereas, it would allow Cuba to manufacture and bring into this country approximately four times as much as Puerto Rico of refined sugars, the only difference being that Cuba has increased its refined operations considerably faster than Puerto Rico, which has only one refinery.

There is another grave problem when this bill provides in substance that if any area should be unable to produce and deliver its quota in any given year the Secretary of Agriculture may prorate this deficiency amongst the other areas. Such a possibility may likely occur in Puerto Rico during a hurricane year, and I therefore have requested to amend the bill, which, in substance, would provide that in such event the Puerto Rico quota for the succeeding year should be correspondingly increased so as to give Puerto Rico a chance to recover its hurricane losses.

What I desire to repeat again is that, having in mind what this bill intends to get for the good of the sugar industry and business of the mainland, is what we desire for the good of Puerto Rico and asked, and, for better or worse, the people of the island want to be treated and considered as an integral part of the United States and considered with same weight as the domestic business of the mainland and to be identified with your own national purposes.

Now I desire to read into the RECORD a letter written by former Resident Commissioner Hon. Jose L. Pesquera:

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 3, 1934.

HON. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner for Puerto Rico,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. IGLESIAS: I write this letter in order to make clear the position of the Farmers' Association of Puerto Rico in regard to H.R. 8861, which is a bill "to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes."

It is unfortunately true that this bill is markedly discriminatory against Puerto Rico in various aspects, and especially inasmuch as it fixes the quota of sugar to be produced by continental producers only, disregarding that Puerto Rico is a part of the United States; that we are American citizens; that we rank first as consumers of continental products among all Latin American countries, including Cuba; that we must abide by the tariff act in all its extensions; that our people have been carrying upon their shoulders all the burdens of the emergency legislation in force, without as yet having received any of its benefits; and that when the lives of American boys were needed to be given for the sake of democracy we did our part with the same patriotic spirit as every other American citizen.

Had a hearing been held on this bill, I would have appeared before the Committee on Agriculture to establish the protest of the Farmers' Association of Puerto Rico against such discrimination and to suggest amendments to the end of eliminating same. But, since this opportunity was not afforded to us, and since the discussion of this measure is to be taken up tomorrow in the House of Representatives, under suspension of the rules, so that no amendments shall be possible, the Farmers' Association of Puerto Rico, attentive always to the welfare of the farmers of the island, must be in favor of the bill, because it contains provisions which will undoubtedly ameliorate the desperate economic conditions of our agricultural population, as follows:

It makes sugarcane a basic commodity under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, thus repairing the injustice done to Puerto Rico by leaving out of the benefits of said act, when it was originally approved, the growers of our main agricultural product; it authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to adjudicate disputes between processors and growers, thus insuring an equitable division of the proceeds that may be derived from the growing, and affording an opportunity to terminate the oppressive treatment and exploitation to which our helpless sugarcane growers have been subjected by the manufacturers up to the present time, and it also authorizes the President to decree that all the taxes collected from the processing of Puerto Rican sugarcane be held as a separate fund, and expended for the benefit of the island agriculture, which is the only way in which our people can be partly compensated for the increase of prices that they must pay for continental products, under the National Industrial Recovery Act and under the Agricultural Adjustment Act itself.

These beneficial aspects of the proposed legislation have led me to recommend our friends in Congress to give the same favorable consideration, in spite of the unjust discrimination therein contained.

Will you please have this letter read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Sincerely yours,

JOSE L. PESQUERA,
Acting President Farmers' Association of Puerto Rico.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMPSON] such time as he may desire.

Mr. THOMPSON of Texas. To understand the full significance and far-reaching effect of the bill which we are now considering, it is necessary to have a clear working knowledge of the entire sugar problem. It is a complicated and involved subject, and it is only with the closest study and attention that it can be intelligently understood.

In our own country we have the growers of beets and sugarcane and we have the respective refineries of each. We have the problems of the farmer, of capital, and of labor. The fact that much of our raw sugar is imported brings in the tariff question and the complexities of international relationships.

To anyone who has studied the problem and has worked on it during the many weeks that have passed since the President's sugar message, it is a remarkable tribute to the Committee on Agriculture that it has been able to bring forth a bill that is reasonably satisfactory to all of the conflicting interests which are involved. I shall not attempt to discuss details except as they have particularly concerned me, and I shall confine myself to matters which I have studied and with which I feel thoroughly familiar.

My own district is concerned with the refining of sugar. Both of the Texas refineries have headquarters in my home county. I have seen one of them suspend operations due to the peculiar and adverse provisions of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, and I have watched the other struggle along in recent years, barely able to continue operations, but still keeping on in the hope of legislation which would rectify the inequalities that now prevail. I am therefore favoring this bill in the hope that through its terms many of my people will continue to receive employment and others who are now unemployed may shortly return to work.

When the President's message was first published he stipulated that there should be certain definite quotas established in regard to the production of sugar beets and sugar cane in continental United States, and he further suggested quotas for the importation of off-shore sugar. His message did not differentiate, however, between raw and refined sugar, and it occurred to me that unless he definitely established how much of each could be imported that the entire effect of his plan would be lost, and the proportion of imports of refined sugar would greatly increase. I took it upon myself, therefore, to discuss it with him and he told me that it was his purpose to freeze the present status of the entire sugar industry, and he agreed that it would be necessary to further break down the quotas into proportionate shares of refined or direct-consumption sugar, and of raw sugar which was being brought into the country to be further refined in American plants and by American labor. If this were not accomplished American labor would be forced to compete with that of the West Indies and our own insular possessions, which we recognize is on a much lower scale than our own. It is unthinkable that the American wages and working conditions would ever be on a plane with those of Cuba, for instance, or of the Philippine Islands, if you prefer to use one of our own possessions. It is easy to see that if the islands were permitted to do so it would be decidedly to their advantage to set up more sugar refineries, refine all of their own product, and send it into the United States for direct consumption. One of two things would happen, either it would be sold at a long profit and the financial benefits thereof would go out of the United States, or it would be offered for sale at a low price in order to force the American refiners out of business. Whether the price would then continue low or not, you can judge for yourselves in the light of the price you paid for sugar immediately after the war. At that time the off-shore refiners controlled the situation and it was not until American beet sugar came into the market that any sort of a satisfactory price basis was arrived at.

After a great deal of discussion and considerable controversy the various different interests involved, including those of labor, agreed on certain quotas for the importation of direct-consumption sugar. These, I believe, are reasonably satisfactory to all concerned, except in the case of those of our neighbors who are unwilling to be fair about it.

You will note from a study of the bill that the quotas of direct-consumption sugar are fixed at the maximum amount which has ever been imported into the United States from Hawaii, Puerto Rico, the Philippine Islands, and the Virgin Islands. In the case of Cuba we have recognized that the great increase in the manufacturing of refined sugar in that country is due to the inequalities and errors in the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act, and it would therefore be unfair to give Cuba the advantages derived from that act, but rather to estimate approximately the amount of sugar which would have been manufactured there under normal conditions. It was finally agreed that this amount should be 22 percent of the total importations. Personally, I think this is too high and that it should not be over 15 percent. However, because of the necessity for compromise between the various factions involved in the production of sugar, I have accepted this on behalf of my people and I think it is reasonably satisfactory to them.

In case any of you are inclined to question the Cuban quota I might call to your attention the fact that the State Department has not raised any question in connection with the figure which we have assigned to Cuba. It is only reasonable to suppose that if it were not fair we would have heard about it. We might go further and assume that our State Department feels that political stability in Cuba depends on the economic and agricultural stability of that nation and that they look with favor on this bill because it does stabilize both the production and refining of sugarcane.

I hope these remarks of mine will help clarify the situation in your minds and that you will join with the administration in its efforts to stabilize the sugar situation by voting for the bill. Like some who have spoken, I regret that more time cannot be given to debate and that it cannot be amended here and there. However, I think we are all agreed that it is only through the present course of procedure that there is any hope of enacting the bill into law, and we are all forced to proceed along these lines if we decide to help those who need this legislation so badly. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FIESINGER].

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Speaker, I want to raise my voice in behalf of this measure. I represent an important, if not the largest, sugar-producing area in the State of Ohio, and it was my privilege early in this session of the Congress to sit in with the men who have finally evolved this measure.

I know it is not a perfect measure. We all know it is a compromise. I realize, because of the contribution I made, the effort that has been put upon this bill in order to get it in the shape it is in today, and I want to congratulate the sponsors of the bill, the distinguished chairman of the committee, and the committee for bringing out a bill that has the fairness to it, the balance to it, that this bill has, covering this very important subject. Now, it has fair balance. I think it is fair to all interests concerned. I think it is fair to the producer, because, as I understand the bill, he is at least going to get a profit for the work that he is going to do, under the terms of this bill. It is fair to the consumer because, as I understand, it is the declared policy of the administration that sugar prices will not rise in the face of this bill. It is fair, I think, too, to our island possessions and to Cuba, so far as I am able to see.

I know there have been men preceding me here today who have found a great deal of fault with this measure, but in my judgment it is fair to them considering all the facts and circumstances.

I have made a campaign here against any reduction in beet acreage, and, working with representatives of the industry, we have effected this compromise which we believe to be the best that could be secured under the circumstances.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, if, as has been intimated in general debate today, it is not likely that sugar-beet farmers are going to produce more beet sugar than the quota established in this bill, then I ask, why put the figures into the bill? Moreover, why this solicitude about the offshore sugar-producing areas, when in this country we are only producing 26 percent of the sugar required? Mr. Weaver and Mr. Ezekiel testified that shattered sugar prices were due to extraordinary expansion of production in the island areas. Then why be concerned about them first?

If there is a real abiding desire to help agriculture, why did the committee fail to write into the bill the amendment providing for a quota for blackstrap, which I suggested? Blackstrap is a dark sirup, a by-product of cane sugar. In my State they are reducing the corn crop 20 percent and reducing hogs 25 percent to aid the corn grower. Farmers are doing that because there is an apparent surplus of corn.

In the next breath they let in 300,000,000 gallons of blackstrap for conversion into alcohol. That displaces a great deal of corn. Six gallons will make a quantity of alcohol equivalent to that produced by 1 bushel of corn. Three hundred millions of blackstrap will mean the displacement of 50,000,000 bushels of corn. If you allow 100,000,000 gallons for feed purposes the balance still displaces 30,000,000 bushels of corn. If you had a market operator to go in and buy 30,000,000 bushels of corn it would attract real notice and improve prices considerably. Then why this hideous inconsistency of collecting this processing tax, paying it over to the farmer, and then leaving the back door open to a lot of this molasses coming in from the islands? The farmer would much prefer to till all his acreage at a decent price for corn than to accept a meager bounty for letting 20 percent lie idle.

To show the seriousness of this matter, let me submit that in 1932, of 147,000,000 gallons of alcohol produced in this country, 125,000,000 were produced from blackstrap molasses and about 2,000,000 gallons from corn. Five sixths of the entire alcohol production of that year was produced from imported molasses while the American farmer, in utter despair, wonders what happened to the demand for corn that the price should be so depressed.

It looks as if the "brain trust" and the bankers have finally gotten on common ground. Strange as it may seem, Mr. Taussig, of Boston, head of the American Molasses Co. and one of the original "brain trusters", must see eye to eye with large New York bankers who show a strange solicitude for Cuba. Mr. Weaver and Mr. Ezekiel, expert advisers to the Department of Agriculture on this bill, see eye to eye with those who profess a single interest in Cuba in preference to the American farmer. Mr. A. A. Behrle, formerly counsel for the American Molasses Co. and also one of the "brain trust" advisers to the administration, seems to have an undue interest in sugar and molasses. They are too close to the administration, and that is the principal reason why we have not been able to close the back door against imports of commodities in competition with the farmer and so afford proper protection to the farmer. To me there is a nebulous mystery about this strange interest in and solicitude for Cuba.

If you insist on establishing quotas for sugar, what logical reason can be advanced for failure to include blackstrap molasses, a direct by-product of sugar which is defined in paragraph D of section 2 of the bill. I am, therefore, constrained to vote against the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CARPENTER].

Mr. CARPENTER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, there is one provision in the bill which seems to have a great deal of merit, and that is the provision which will help the beet-sugar growers. The bill provides that the Secretary of Agriculture in conjunction with the farmers will enter into the making of fair contracts for the beet growers of my State.

The beet farmers have been unable to negotiate decent contracts themselves, due to the fact that the processor has an absolute monopoly and pays just exactly what he wants to pay for the beets.

There has been a great deal said pro and con about this bill. There are a great many features that I do not like, but that is not the question. It is the best bill we can get, and I, for one, am unwilling to sacrifice the beet industry for a theory that is impossible to obtain at the present time. I think this bill, outside of the quota allowance, is an ideal bill and will benefit to a great extent the beet and cane producers of this country. I think a great deal of the progress that has been made in the sugar industry is going to be absolutely destroyed unless this bill is passed, because the time element is one of paramount importance at this time. The processors will not offer any contracts in my State until some legislation has been enacted or Congress has adjourned. We are fearful that if we do not pass this legislation our farmers will receive very adverse contracts. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LANZETTA].

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, House bill 8861 is highly discriminatory against American citizens who reside in the island of Puerto Rico. This bill, while it fixes sugar quotas for the beet-sugar industry and for the sugarcane growers of Florida and Louisiana, fixes no quota for Puerto Rico and places in an uncertain position the economic welfare of 1,600,000 American citizens who are mainly dependent upon sugar. The time has come, Mr. Speaker, when we must realize that Puerto Rico is an integral part of the United States and that it must receive the same consideration and treatment that is accorded to every citizen and every State of the United States.

Puerto Rico has been a part of the United States for over 35 years, and during this time, with our help, it has risen economically to a point where we are justly proud of it. Its imports from the United States rose to the stupendous sum of $121,561,574 in 1920, and in the last fiscal year, ending June 30, 1933, notwithstanding the depression, the total imports from the United States amounted to $48,886,644. I am submitting these figures at this time to show that Puerto Rico is one of the largest consumers of American products.

In view of the fact that Puerto Rico is a part of the United States, and the further fact that it is a large consumer of American products, it seems to me that we should bend every effort to give it whatever economical assistance we possibly can.

Last week this House passed a tariff bill giving the President of the United States power to make reciprocal agreements with foreign countries. This bill was intended solely for the purpose of developing our foreign trade. The majority of the Members of this House readily gave to the President of the United States these large powers in order that this might be accomplished.

Inasmuch as we are exerting every effort to develop markets for American products, it seems to me, and logically so, that we should first try to develop our home markets. These markets will always be positive and certain and can always be depended upon to purchase American products, whereas foreign markets are unstable and subject to so many political exigencies as to make them very uncertain.

This bill does not alone discriminate against Puerto Rico as to the amount of all sugars that it may sell to continental United States, but it also discriminates against it on the amount of direct-consumption sugar. Cuba is preferred as to this item. There is no reason or justification for this discrimination. From the standpoint of citizenship, Puerto Rico should be favored in this matter. Besides, Puerto Rico is a larger consumer of American products, as evidenced by the imports during the past years. Leaving the question of citizenship for the moment, for us to favor the poor and unstable market of Cuba in preference to the ever-growing market of Puerto Rico is not only folly but very poor business.

It has oftentimes been said that the prosperity of this country will become definite and positive if and when we are able to attain the point where all our products can be absorbed and consumed by our own people. Let us make a good start along this line by creating new demands for American products in Puerto Rico. This can only be accomplished by favoring Puerto Rico as to products that can be used in continental United States.

Sugar is the main product of Puerto Rico. Inasmuch as we, by means of quotas, are trying to rehabilitate and protect the beet-sugar industry and the cane-sugar industry in continental United States, let us do the same thing for Puerto Rico. By protecting and rehabilitating the sugarcane industry in Puerto Rico, we will give employment to its millions of citizens, increase their purchasing power, and make it possible for them to purchase more of our products.

Inasmuch as I am not permitted to offer an amendment, because of the rule under which this bill is now before the House, I ask that the Committee on Agriculture consent to an amendment to bill H.R. 8861, fixing a quota for Puerto Rico. [Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield one half minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a telegram received by me as indicative of the position of the sugar refiners on this bill.

The sugar bill reported out of the House committee is a compromise but it contains a provision in regard to refined cane sugar which effectively prevents extermination of our industry. It is my opinion that no better bill can be obtained and that only prompt passage of this bill in its entirety can prevent a collapse of our national sugar situation. I therefore hope that you will support this bill and endeavor to secure its passage by aiding Chairman JONES Monday in his request for suspension of rules.

[Applause.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN].

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor of being a member of the committee which reported this bill. I look at this measure, I think, in an impartial way, because there is not 1 pound of sugar made in my State. I worked side by side with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. CUMMINGS] and I entertain the same views that he expressed, that the American sugar producers and the American refineries are entitled, as far as possible, to the American sugar market. I believe also that if this country owes a debt to Cuba it should be paid by the people as a whole and not by the beet growers and cane growers of America. [Applause.]

I am sorry to see that partisan politics have been injected into this discussion. The gentlemen to my left seem to think that the beet growers and cane growers are afraid of the President of this country when it comes to the sugar question. Let me give you a few facts. The President, in his message, recommended a quota for Cuba of 1,944,000 tons. What did they do under the Coolidge and Harding administrations? Why, Cuba brought into this country, for instance, in the year 1926, practically 4,000,000 tons of sugar. [Applause.] In 1927 Cuba brought in 3,491,000 tons; in 1928, 3,125,000 tons; in 1929, 3,613,000 tons; and in 1930, 2,945,000. Under Roosevelt how much did Cuba bring in last year? Why, only 1,601,000 tons. What are you afraid of under this administration? The figures speak for themselves.

Let me give you a few more facts: The bill sets the domestic beet-sugar quota at 1,550,000 tons, which is 504,000 more tons than the beet growers produced in 1926, 615,000 more tons than in 1927, 307,000 tons more than in 1928, 450,000 tons more than in 1929, and 250,000 tons more than 1930.

Take the quota in this country for cane sugar. The bill sets the cane-sugar quota at 260,000 tons, which is in excess of the sugarcane production in any year I know of.

Take the refineries. Why, last year 31 percent of the sugar imported from Cuba was direct-consumption sugar. The bill cuts the percentage to 22 percent.

No, the gentlemen on the left need not be afraid. This bill gives the American sugar growers and the refineries more protection than they have ever enjoyed.

They can be afraid of the President if they want to, but when they express their fear, let them at the same time tell the sugar growers of America and the refineries of America why they did not do something about the matter when they were in power.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time, 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that a bill of this importance and involving so many controversial features should be brought up under suspension of the rules. I think it would have been very helpful if we could have had a fair amount of debate and an opportunity to offer amendments to this bill. Nevertheless, and not withstanding my objection to this form of procedure, as one who represents a district which has the growing of sugar beets as one of its industries, I feel I should support the bill, because I think it is going to be helpful to the sugar industry of this country.

I am not like some gentlemen who have spoken this afternoon and who have talked about the gun that is pointed at the sugar-beet industry, in thinking that the gun is not loaded. Whether it is loaded or not, it is never a very safe proposition to go on the theory that a gun pointed at your head is not loaded.

More than that, the tariff has not afforded entire protection to the sugar industry of continental United States, and the great increase which is taking place in the sugar industry in our Territories and island possessions constitutes a direct menace to continental producers. This bill by limiting importations from off-shore areas will assist in stabilizing the industry in this country. And by making provision for benefit payments up to the parity price it is going to bring a return to the producers of beets and cane in this country considerably above that which they have been receiving.

I do not subscribe to the principle implied in this bill, that we should limit the production of crops of which we produce less than we consume in this country, yet under the circumstances which face the sugar industry today, I am willing, temporarily at least—and this is only a temporary measure—to go along and take the benefits that will come to those now engaged in the production of sugar in this country for this 3-year period. More than that, this bill has other features which I think are of great interest and importance to the refining industry in this country.

It limits the amount of direct-consumption sugar which can come into this country from Cuba to 22 percent of the quota and limits the amount which may come in from our island possessions to the amount received during any one of the last 3 years; and in view of the fact that importations of refined and direct-consumption sugar have been rapidly increasing in this country, it is a matter of considerable importance to the refining industry to have this limitation.

Now, the sugar question is not entirely a domestic question; it is a world question, and great efforts have been made during the past 3 or 4 years to limit world production. There is no doubt but what world overproduction has contributed to the demoralization of the sugar industry in the United States. This country and its possessions have been the only sugar-producing areas which have not joined in this effort at reduction. There is no reason why we should reduce production in continental United States as long as we produce so small a proportion of our consumption. It will help the world sugar situation, however, if production in our island areas can be stabilized as will be done under the provisions of this bill. Any action which helps the world sugar situation is bound to be helpful to producers in the United States.

There are many features about this bill which I do not like. It is a compromise between many conflicting interests. It is an immeasurably better bill than the original Costigan-Jones bill, however, and in my opinion will help every sugar-beet and cane producer in the country. I am therefore glad to give it my support.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I merely want to state that the fact that nearly everybody is complaining a little indicates that this is a fair bill. If the gentleman from Michigan was correct in his complaint, then the Delegates from the islands are incorrect when they say that this bill is not going to be quite fair to them. As a matter of fact, just so much sugar will be consumed; and nobody is going to take the American people, hold their noses, and make them eat any more. Too much sugar is being produced to supply the demand. That is responsible for the chaotic condition of the industry. This quota system should put it on a stabilized basis, and I believe the whole industry will be better off and they will all be in better condition than they have been during the past two or three years. As a matter af fact, last year the beet-sugar people produced more beets than ever, yet they received what was probably the lowest price in the history of the business.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Oh, no.

Mr. JONES. This is the kind of thing we are trying to avoid. No gun is being held to anyone's head. If nothing is done, chaotic conditions will probably continue, regardless of whether there is any change in the tariff schedules. Without a quota system or some sort of a plan increased production abroad might sweep over the wall, tariff or no tariff, and destroy the American producers. This measure will tend to avoid that situation. It is hoped that it will stabilize the industry and at the same time protect the consuming public.

I submit for printing in the RECORD at this point the message of the President of the United States:

To the Congress:

Steadily increasing sugar production in the continental United States and in insular regions has created a price and marketing situation prejudicial to virtually everyone interested. Farmers in many areas are threatened with low prices for their beets and cane, and Cuban purchases of our goods have dwindled steadily as her shipments of sugar to this country have declined.

There is a school of thought which believes that sugar ought to be on the free list. This belief is based on the high cost of sugar to the American consuming public.

The annual gross value of the sugar crop to American beet and cane growers is approximately $60,000,000. Those who believe in the free importation of sugar say that the 2 cents a pound tariff is levied mostly to protect this $60,000,000 crop and that it costs our consuming public every year more than $200,000,000 to afford this protection.

I do not at this time recommend placing sugar on the free list. I feel that we ought first to try out a system of quotas with the threefold object of keeping down the price of sugar to consumers, of providing for the retention of beet and cane farming within our continental limits, and also to provide against further expansion of this necessarily expensive industry.

Consumers have not benefited from the disorganized state of sugar production here and in the insular regions. Both the import tariff and cost of distribution, which together account for the major portion of the consumers' price for sugar, have remained relatively constant during the past 3 years.

This situation clearly calls for remedial action. I believe that we can increase the returns to our own farmers, contribute to the economic rehabilitation of Cuba, provide adequate quotas for the Philippines, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and at the same time prevent higher prices to our own consumers.

The problem is difficult but can be solved if it is met squarely and if small temporary gains are sacrificed to ultimate general advantage.

The objective may be attained most readily through amendment of existing legislation. The Agricultural Adjustment Act should be amended to make sugar beets and sugar cane basic agricultural commodities. It then will be possible to collect a processing tax on sugar, the proceeds of which will be used to compensate farmers for holding their production to the quota level. A tax of less than one half cent per pound would provide sufficient funds.

Consumers need not and should not bear this tax. It is already within the Executive power to reduce the sugar tariff by an amount equal to the tax. In order to make certain that American consumers shall not bear an increased price due to this tax, Congress should provide that the rate of the processing tax shall in no event exceed the amount by which the tariff on sugar is reduced below the present rate of import duty.

By further amendment to the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Secretary of Agriculture should be given authority to license refiners, importers, and handlers to buy and sell sugar from the various producing areas only in the proportion which recent marketings of such areas bear to total United States consumption. The average marketings of the past 3 years provide on the whole an equitable base, but the base period should be flexible enough to allow slight adjustments as between certain producing areas.

The use of such a base would allow approximately the following preliminary and temporary quotas:

	Short tons
Continental beets	1,450,000
Louisiana and Florida	260,000
Hawaii	935,000
Puerto Rico	821,000
Philippine Islands	1,037,000
Cuba	1,944,000
Virgin Islands	5,000
Total	6,452,000

The application of such quotas would immediately adjust market supplies to consumption, and would provide a basis for reduction of production to the needs of the United States market.

Furthermore, in the negotiations for a new treaty between the United States and Cuba to replace the existing commercial convention, which negotiations are to be resumed immediately, favorable consideration will be given to an increase in the existing preferential on Cuban sugars to an extent compatible with the joint interests of the two countries.

In addition to action made possible by such legislative and treaty changes, the Secretary of Agriculture already has authority to enter into codes and marketing agreements with manufacturers which would permit savings in manufacturing and distributing costs. If any agreements or codes are entered into, they should be in such form as to assure that producers and consumers share in the resulting savings.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 8, 1934.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS—H.R. 8861

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House today, H.R. 8861, proposes that beet and cane sugar shall be considered a basic commodity, and as such confers jurisdiction over that industry in the Secretary of Agriculture to deal with it as he sees fit.

I am opposed to the principle involved in this bill. It fixes a quota for beet sugar at 200,000 less than the amount produced in continental United States in 1933.

If this industry could not and would not expand, why is it necessary to put a red stop light in front of it to prevent its expansion? We produce about one fourth of the sugar used in the United States, and yet we propose by this measure to throttle and strangle that industry to prevent its expansion and an increased production.

We produced, in 1933, 1,750,000 short tons of sugar beets. Under this bill it is limited to a quota of 1,550,000 short tons.

If this measure becomes law, it means that the sugar industry of this country will be reduced by 11.4 percent of the amount produced in 1933. In my own State that reduction would mean that out of the 15 factories in the State 2 would have to close their doors; 20,438 acres would have to remain idle; 5,838 workers would be thrown out of employment and compelled to seek work in other industries. It would mean that $406,495 less would be paid to labor and that the Michigan sugar-beet farmer would receive $2,000,000 less for his crop in 1934 than he received in 1933, the value of the beet crop in that year being nearly $16,000,000. It would mean that the industry in Michigan alone would require 27,225 yards less of cotton cloth for filtering purposes and would use 390,000 less cotton bags. It would mean that $275,789 less would be paid for transportation costs, and more than $40,000 less taxes would be paid by the farmers of my State who depend upon the sugar-beet industry for their livelihood and for cash to purchase the things they need.

The only justification advanced for throttling an industry which affects nearly 20 States in the Union is that it might provide a market in some foreign country for other agricultural products raised in this country.

When we of Michigan and you of California, Colorado, Idaho, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, Ohio, Utah, Wisconsin, and Wyoming, and you of Louisiana go back to our districts this summer and tell our farmers that it is necessary that a part of their land must remain idle in order to accommodate the production of sugar in foreign countries on the theory that you are going to provide a market for other agricultural products, you may have a high-sounding theory, but you are not going to convince them that it is necessary, when in this country we produce but 26 percent of the sugar we consume.

The greatest market in the world is the home market of the United States—a market for more than 90 percent of everything we produce. Let us safeguard that market and do nothing to injure it or reduce it. Foreign nations are fast becoming self-sufficient and self-sustaining.

To enact this bill into law means placing the power in the hands of one man, the Secretary of Agriculture, to dictate to the American producer of sugar just what he may or may not do with his land.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I favor the passage of H.R. 8861, because it will benefit the sugar-beet farmers of southwest Washington. I desire to take this opportunity to set forth the salient facts pertaining to the Townsend revolving old-age pension plan, which has been called to my attention by my friend Mr. Harry L. Bras, the progressive editor and publisher of the Centralia Chronicle, of Centralia, Wash., who has become very much impressed with its merits and benefits. I deem it to be of sufficient importance and interest to submit it to the consideration and study of the Members of Congress and the American people.

THE TOWNSEND PLAN IS BRIEF

Have the National Government create a revolving fund sufficiently large to permit every citizen—man or woman—over the age of 60 years to retire on a pension of $200 per month on the following conditions:

First. That they engage in no further labor, business, or profession for gain.

Second. That their past life is free from criminality.

Third. That they take oath to, and actually do, spend within the confines of the United States the entire amount of their pension within 30 days after receiving same.

Having the National Government create the revolving fund by levying a general sales tax; have the rate just high enough to produce the amount necessary to keep the old-age revolving pensions fund adequate to pay the monthly pensions.

Have the act so drawn that such sales tax can only be used for the old-age revolving pensions fund.

A PERMANENT NATIONAL CURE FOR DEPRESSION

We recognize the fact that the inventive genius of the world, and especially of the United States, has, through the perfection of labor-saving machines, created a condition in society which has resulted in a huge surplus of producers as well as a surplus of products. There is a constant standing army of unemployed.

Even in the boom days of 1929 there was a large number of them, and their ranks have been steadily increased until today there are 15,000,000 of them with their families who are without jobs. They can never be put to work again unless they are willing to accept the short day and the minimum wage. Their labor will be too expensive. Machines will do the work of all of them in infinitely less time and at less cost.

It will be the plan of organized society as constituted today to shunt this army of jobless aside on some sort of subsistence dole and do the work of the world with efficient and tireless machines. Mind, I say society as constituted today. We of this community say that this must be corrected. Are we a Nation of morons or imbeciles that we can solve the problems of production to a point where we have more products than we can consume and yet be eternally faced with the sight of an ever-increasing number of citizens suffering from a lack of those same products to a point where they become mere human clods without ambition, content to wear the livery of serfs and eat the bread of grudging charity? This condition prevails today, and nothing in the way of half-time employment, minimum wage plans, or price fixing will alter the frightful state of affairs. It will grow steadily worse so long as we adhere to our present systemless lack of control of our monetary circulation. Money circulates under the present system or it does not circulate in accord with whims or fears or emotions of a few men or institutions that control the major portion of the money of the land.

We say that one of the chief functions of government should be the exercise of its power to insure a steady and sufficient flow of money through the channels of trade and commerce adequate to keep that trade at an even tempo, free from fear of panic or boom. We say that our Government must assume this function and adopt a system whereby money shall flow in a constant volume into the coffers of the United States Treasury and immediately start on a return flow back into the avenue of commerce whence it came.

The banking system of our country cannot do this. Money can flow into the Treasury by the taxation route, but from there the stream can only reach the banks. There it stagnates. It cannot get back among the people where it is needed unless they have security to offer for it. This, when times are hard and the need for money greatest, the people cannot give, and, as a consequence, business dies and people have to accept charity or starve.

By what plan shall the Government assume its rightful task of keeping the money of the Nation in circulation? The old-age revolving pension plan. Recognize the fact that we can spare the seven or eight millions of people over the age of 60 from the ranks of the producers and retire them with badges of honor and pensions of a size sufficient to keep them in affluence the rest of their days. These pensions should not be paltry. They should be large enough to make the recipient an envied individual, and the aggregate of all the pensions great enough at all times to insure an abundant supply of money for all commercial needs as the pensioners spend it.

Let all citizens who become 60 years of age and desire to retire receive the pension upon two conditions: That they give proof of never having been criminals, and that they solemnly promise to spend the entire amount of the pension during the current month in which it is received.

We shall request the Government to assume a monopoly of the sales-tax plan of collecting revenue for the pensions. This tax should be levied evenly and fairly upon all merchandise and commodities and be paid at a specific rate upon gross sales at the end of each month. A graduated income tax must be levied fairly so as not to discourage industry. And inheritance taxes must be increased. If these three forms of taxation are sensibly administered, real-estate taxes can be greatly lowered.

Under the sales-tax plan of collecting Government revenues, all classes of the population pay in proportion to their financial ability and none receive the benefits of Government without assuming his share of the burden. A sales tax levied for the express purpose of paying pensions to the aged will meet with universal approval. Its beneficent purpose will be recognized by all; its twofold function—that of doing justice to those who have done a full life's work, and that of keeping an abundance of money circulating at all times—will be recognized and acclaimed by all. A rate of 15 percent should be sufficient, if levied on all sales, to meet the pension roll. The pension system will relieve society of a tremendous burden of taxation now made necessary by the maintenance of poor farms, community chests, and other charitable institutions. By keeping a healthy business condition throughout the Nation it will remove to a large extent the incentive to crime, and through lowering our prison population reduce another huge taxation outlay. No doubt it will also reduce the number of unfortunates confined in our insane asylums. Pensions for the aged of sufficient size to assure a high standard of living will make the latter end of life a delightful golden autumn instead of the bleak and fearful winter which it represents for so many. Pensions for the aged will remove eight or ten millions of pensioners from the fields of productive effort and permit of the paying of high wages to younger workers. Prices will be stabilized at a level high enough to insure a fair profit to the producers at all times when the steady flow of money is assured from taxpayer to the Government and from the Government to the pensioners and thence to the channels of trade. Justice can be assured to all through this system, and the injustice of permitting the wealth of the Nation to accumulate in the hands of a few will be eliminated.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, it is hardly necessary to argue that the primary reason for the passage of the sugar bill by the House yesterday afternoon is anticipated action by the President to lower the tariff on sugar and thereby increase the American market for Cuban sugar.

If the tariff is left alone there will be little reason for a sugar bill or a processing tax. Sugar-beet growers of Minnesota and beet-sugar manufacturers there have been a unit in declaring against Federal interference with their business, and in objection to the proposed regimentation of their industry.

As stated yesterday in the quotation given on page 6017 of the RECORD, President Roosevelt, then a candidate, declared in his address at Wheeling, W.Va., on October 30, 1932:

> I have advocated a lowering of tariffs by negotiation with foreign countries. But I have not advocated, and I will never advocate, a tariff policy which will withdraw protection from American workers against those countries which employ cheap labor or who operate under a standard of living which is lower than that of our own great laboring groups.

This is a definite promise to American labor, including American farm labor.

President Roosevelt in this speech declared that he would never advocate a tariff policy which would withdraw protection from American workers against those countries which employ cheap labor or which operate under a standard of living lower than that of the great laboring groups of America.

The problem therefore resolves itself into a question of whether the wage scale of Cuba is or is not lower than the wage scale for sugar producers in continental United States.

In the evidence submitted by me yesterday, and found on page 6018 of the RECORD, appears a statement by the general agriculturalist of the American Beet Sugar Co., of Chaska, Minn. Mr. Lund declared without qualification that under working conditions in Minnesota and Iowa beet workers can earn from 40 to 60 cents an hour, and that many of them do earn from $6 to $12 a day, depending upon the length of time they work.

Under his 1932 pledge to American labor, it will be necessary for the President to give consideration to the living standards in Cuba at the present time and to the wages paid Cuban sugar workers as compared with American wages and American living standards.

This morning I am in receipt of a letter from Hon. Nils A. Olsen, Chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, giving accurate official information upon this exact point.

Mr. Olsen's statement is as follows:

WAGES IN CUBAN SUGAR INDUSTRY

In general cane-field laborers consider themselves fortunate to be employed at all and readily accept 20 cents to 25 cents for a 10- to 12-hour day. Some laborers receive merely meals and living quarters for their work.

Cane cutting is paid on the basis of work done, but in 1932 cane cutters earned from 22 cents to 30 cents a day.

Cane haulers work on a piecework basis, but earn about $1.50 for a man, boy, and ox team. The boy receives 25 cents to 30 cents out of this. Oxen are supplied by the cartman.

In sugar mills unskilled labor on a timework basis earned 50 cents to $1 a day; on a piecework basis, 50 cents to 60 cents a day.

Even the salaried and skilled employees and foremen did not receive over $75 a month, and most of them not over $30 a month.

In a consular report from H. F. Matthews, dated February 1934, there is reported a proposal to base the wages of labor in the sugar industry upon the price of sugar. Although this plan has not been generally adopted in Cuba, it is of interest because it indicates the then current rate of wages. The plan called for a basic wage from which certain percentages were deducted or to which certain percentages were added, depending upon the price of sugar. This basic wage was taken as those prevailing during the 1933 crop or those in effect after the adjustments of September 1933, whichever was higher. They are as follows and vary according to the type of work involved:

Daily wage: 80 cents, 90 cents, $1, $1.10, $1.20, $1.40, and $1.50.

The minimum of 80 cents is perhaps the only one that is of service in the present connection, since there is no information as to the proportion of workers receiving each rate.

Mr. CARTER of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, the bill H.R. 8861, which is up for consideration, proposes to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities, and makes the Secretary of Agriculture practically the dictator of these industries.

To bring this bill before the House under suspension of rules is, in my opinion, about as un-American as the principles involved in the bill. A bill of such importance and with so many controversial matters should not be brought before this body under suspension of the rules. We should have a fair amount of debate and an opportunity to offer amendments.

The provisions of this bill to include sugar beets and sugar cane as basic agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Adjustment Act violates the intent and policy of the original Agricultural Adjustment Act, for such provisions tend to discriminate and confiscate. The original Agricultural Adjustment Act was passed to bring protection in some fair proportion to consumption.

The chief objection to this bill is that it provides for the restriction of continental production of a commodity of which there is no exportable surplus. The continental United States produces less than 30 percent of the consumptive requirements of the United States, and instead of curtailing the industry it should be encouraged to expand so that we would become self-sufficient in sugar. This proposition violates the American principle of the American market for the American farmer.

The public expressions of Secretary Wallace and the testimony of Assistant Secretary Tugwell and the Department of Agriculture officials, including Dr. Weaver, chief of the sugar section, all show that they are unfriendly to the continental sugar industry, which they consider inefficient. They claim that it would be better to build up the Cuban sugar industry, so that Cuba could buy more lard and other products from the American farms. Secretary Wallace even said that the domestic sugar industry should never have been developed and that, personally, he was for eliminating it. This bill places the industry entirely in the hands and discretion of these men who are so outspoken against the industry.

While the bill provides for the continental sugar industry to receive 30 percent of the increase in continental requirements, it also gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to estimate those requirements practically as he chooses. In other words, he could estimate the requirements at 7,000,000 tons, and continental interests would then not begin to get the 30 percent until the increase passed that high figure. The bill should be amended so that the actual consumptive requirements which President Roosevelt estimated at 6,452,000 should be written in the bill.

There are unnecessary drastic provisions in the sugar bill, particularly paragraph (4), on page 10, which would give to the Secretary of Agriculture autocratic power beyond anything that has ever been heard of under the United States Constitution. This paragraph states that anyone who violates an order or regulation of the Secretary of Agriculture can be fined or imprisoned. In other words, the farmer who would milk his cows twice a day instead of once, if the Secretary so ordered, would be liable to go to jail. There is no justification for making potential criminals out of all farmers, especially when the crimes are to be defined by orders or regulations of a publicly announced, unfriendly Secretary of Agriculture.

The States of the United States should be allowed to produce as much sugar as they can. Not only is there an insufficient quantity of sugar produced in continental United States, but the sugar beet is one crop which is a cash crop, and for which the farmer has a ready contract market in advance. Instead of trying to restrict and reduce the industry the Secretary of Agriculture should be delighted to expand the industry so that the farmers of the West would have a cash crop to turn to, especially when this crop is one of the few which has no exportable surplus.

Secretary Wallace gives as his reason for the elimination of the sugar-beet industry the theory that sugar requirements could be filled more cheaply from outside sources. If we are to destroy all our industries in which commodities can be produced cheaper in other countries, our whole economic structure must fail. I would rather see a total loss of our foreign trade than have our country enmeshed in the economic net of foreign governments. I can see the free-trade policy throughout this bill.

Wyoming is vitally interested in the production of sugar beets and the refining of sugar. We have 56,512 acres in sugar beets and employ over 6,000 workers. This does not include those who work in the sugar refineries nor those engaged in transportation, production of coal, limestone, bags, and a multitude of other articles to be considered in connection with this industry. A reduction in sugar-beet acreage would be a terrible blow to Wyoming.

It is impossible to justify reducing the United States beet quota from the 1933 production of 1,756,000 tons to a quota of 1,550,000 tons when at the same time a foreign country, Cuba, is given an increase from 1,600,000 tons imported into the United States to a quota of 1,944,000 tons. Why should there be greater sympathy shown for foreigners than for our farmers, which the Agricultural Adjustment Act is supposed to be intended to relieve? Are American capitalists who have money invested in Cuba more important to this Democratic administration that the American farmer of the West who spends all of his money in the United States and who pays taxes, helps to build our schools, roads, and contributes to the maintenance of our Government?

I think the American people have the first right to produce the commodities that are consumed in this country. There is no good sound reason to curtail our production of sugar in order that we supply our home market from Cuba. There is no reason why an industry in 18 States should be wiped out to avoid injuries to Cuba. If this administration feels that we owe a debt to Cuba, it should be paid by the Nation as a whole and not single out the sugar-beet industry.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I wish to give an analysis of the sugar bill (H.R. 8861) from the standpoint of the beet-sugar branch of the sugar industry.

First. Fundamentally the bill is built upon three basic fallacies so far as beet farming is concerned; (a) that beet sugar is inferior to cane sugar and further expansion is undesirable; (b) that its success depends upon the perpetuation of child labor unless it is made a charity branch of agriculture supported by a system of bonuses or bounties;

(c) that it is an uneconomic or marginal industry per se and cannot survive without bonus or bounty payments.

Each of these indictments must be challenged.

(a) It is true that in the earliest stages the beet-sugar refining was done in very small plants without efficient equipment, control measures, and personnel, and as a result the refining process was not efficient and sometimes sugar stored in humid and heated warehouses tended to lump up and ferment or spoil. The world should know that properly refined beet sugar is identical with properly refined cane sugar. They are exactly the same, the formula being $C_{12}H_{22}O_{11}$. The size of the grain or crystal is merely a mechanical detail. Whether the sugar is pulverized or granulated or pressed into solid lumps is also merely a mechanical detail. In other words, modern processes and efficient control methods and trained personnel have made it a perfect industry, but it is hard to live down its earlier reputation. It is not generally known that some beet-sugar mills even now purchase raw cane sugar and refine it in off seasons after the beet-sugar season is over.

(b) In the earlier days the farmers did only the machine work on the farms and contracted with immigrant labor families to do all hand work. Men, women, and children alike worked a few days during each season, such as blocking, thinning, weeding, and topping. The children's work was only a few days at emergency seasons, probably not over 25 days during a summer. But the industry got the reputation of depending on women and children. At the present, a few children of the farmers help their parents during emergencies and vacations and a few contract farmers have children who help them in emergencies. There is no actual contracting of child labor, and without any legal requirement every beet mill and farmer have this year agreed that each contract shall provide that no contract child labor shall be permitted, setting the lower age at 16 years. This provision is not to cure an evil which, in fact, does not exist. It is put in the contract merely as a gesture in order to satisfy the misinformed that no such practice is now in existence. It should be noted that there is far more child labor in garden areas, cotton fields, and other branches of agriculture than in the beet-sugar industry.

(c) We come now to the crowning insult to the beet-sugar industry, the charge that it is inefficient and uneconomic and marginal and a hot-house industry. That we have a tariff is true, and the industry has been built up under protection, but it requires protection only because it is called upon to compete with the low-wage labor of the Tropics, where the standard of living is so low that it would shock the most hard-boiled and least social-minded if once it was seen by our people. It is true that if our farmers and contract laborers are to live on the American standard of living we must have protection, unless we can show the governing bodies of the islands in the Tropics with whom we compete that they must raise their standards of living in line with ours or keep out of our market. Put on an equal basis as to labor costs, it is a fact that the cost of producing beet sugar in the United States is less than cane sugar in the Tropics. It is a fact that the cost of producing beet sugar is now as low as the costs for cane sugar in Hawaii and Puerto Rico, and the only reason Cuba sells at a lower price (and the only reason for a tariff against Cuba) is because of the starvation wages, low standards of living, and actual selling far below minimum cost of production even in Cuba (in order to claim an ever-increasing share of this market).

Instead of placing a limited quota on continental beet sugar, the sensible, the American program would be a limited quota on Cuban and other insular sugar, and a requirement that they must maintain a civilized standard of living or their product will be excluded and the beet-sugar industry expanded to completely supply our market. It can be done, and at a cost of sugar to our people at from 4 cents to 5 cents f.o.b. beet-sugar refineries in sugar-producing States.

Europe produces from eight to ten million tons of beet sugar per year, and they do not consider their industry uneconomic. They consider sugar-beet culture as one of their most efficient branches of agriculture. I want the record to show that in the face of this fact our American beet-sugar industry is more efficient and economic than it is in Europe, and our production of sugar per acre is higher than it is in Europe. Yet we are to be restricted to less than 1,000,000 acres, while Europe has seven to eight million acres devoted to sugar-beet culture.

Second. The beet-sugar quota: Last year we produced the equivalent of over 1,750,000 short tons of refined beet sugar reduced to raw sugar value as defined in this bill. Yet we are reduced in this bill to 1,550,000 short tons, raw value. That is the limit we are to sell in the American market this year 1934, according to section 4 of this bill, providing for section 8 a (1) (B) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. Now, what are we to do with the 200,000 tons of sugar already produced, which we may not market?

Apparently, paragraph (E) of subsection (2) of section 3a—provided for under section 4 of this bill—takes care of it. It provides that the Secretary may—

> Deduct from the quotas for production * * * or marketing * * * an amount for each year, respectively, representing the surplus stocks of sugar produced in that area (or a portion of the total surplus stocks of sugar produced in that area, in whole or in part), which may have accumulated in the year next preceding, over and above the quotas established for such year.

It appears from this provision that the Secretary may reduce the quotas for beet sugar as much as 200,000 tons for this year, or 100,000 tons each year for 1934 and 1935. This is contrary to the understanding which has been given to beet-sugar growers. If it were intended to do this, it should have been made known before we acted on this bill. This section should be interpreted in the RECORD and in the bill itself and the intention of Congress made clear to the Secretary before it is passed.

If this surplus, or carry-over, is not to be set up as a reserve or revolving amount to protect the market against shortages, then paragraph B of this subsection 2 should be amended to provide that this surplus shall first be used before increased quotas are allotted to other areas, and paragraph E should be modified or eliminated.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and consider the bill [S. 2689] to authorize the Department of Labor to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Department of Labor be, and hereby is, authorized, within the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, upon the written request of any person, to make special statistical studies relating to employment, hours of work, wages, and other conditions of employment; to prepare from its records special statistical compilations; and to furnish transcripts of its studies, tables, and other records, upon the payment of the actual cost of such work by the person requesting it.

SEC. 2. All moneys hereinafter received by the Department of Labor in payment of the cost of such work shall be deposited to the credit of the appropriation of that bureau, service, office, division, or other agency of the Department of Labor which supervised such work, and may be used, in the discretion of the Secretary of Labor, and notwithstanding any other provision of law, for the ordinary expenses of such agency and/or to secure the special services of persons who are neither officers nor employees of the United States.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of Labor shall prescribe rules and regulations for the enforcement of this act; and the Secretary of Labor shall make a report to Congress, at the beginning of each regular session, giving a detailed statement showing (1) the name of every person for whom work has been performed under the authority of this statute, (2) the nature of the services rendered to him, (3) the price charged for these services by the Department of Labor, and (4) the manner in which the moneys received were deposited or used.

SEC. 4. This act shall cease to be effective 1 year after the date of its enactment.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

POST OFFICES AND POST ROADS

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a radio address recently delivered by my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ROMJUE], on the subject of post offices and post roads.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address of Hon. Milton A. Romjue, of Missouri, March 29, 1934:

My friends of the radio audience, it is so much more important that the American citizen of today, both in and out of Congress, spend more time thinking and less time talking that I hesitate to take even these few minutes of your time.

As a Missourian I want to show you that the first overland United States mail delivery started from St. Joseph, Mo., and ended at the Pacific coast.

This delivery was made by carriers riding on horse from fort to fort through wild frontier, Indian, and wild-animal-infested country. The hazards were great, but the delivery of mail an important task, and of far-reaching importance not only from a business standpoint and commercial development, but this hazardous delivery took joy and pleasure as well as sometimes carrying a message of sorrow from the more early settled parts of the United States to the pioneer and frontier sections.

Buffalo Bill ran the gantlet of the savage and had many narrow escapes from the Indian's arrow and scalping knife as he rode at terrific speed astride a well-bred steed. The pay was small, but that is not all—and many an unfortunate carrier of the mail of that day soon had his body consigned to clay. Those courageous pioneers of early mail delivery, at great sacrifice of life and time, often succumbed to the ravages of beast, of mountain, and of winter's clime. They were accustomed to the Indians and weather's wily tricks, but were not so often bothered with petty party politics.

Many mail messengers of that early day lost their lives on the western plains with little pay, but when they passed on but little did partisan critics say.

As chairman of the House conference committee on the emergency air-mail legislation I presented to the House on Monday of this week the conference report agreed upon by the conferees of the House and Senate, and the same was on that day adopted, and shortly following was signed by the President and is now a law.

Under this emergency law the President and Postmaster General are proceeding with air-mail service which will be less expensive to the public than heretofore paid under prior-existing contracts. Much has been said about air-mail contracts and cancelations thereof.

The limited time which I have over this radio hook-up precludes me from discussing what I believe to be the real merits involved in this question. It is unfortunate, however, that in times like these, when such desperate effort is being made by the President of the United States and the Congress in general to save many homes from loss to their owners and to get the country in a better position, that criticism of a policy pursued should arise in matters of this kind. However, those of us who have had some considerable experience in public affairs and political matters realize that it is quite common for false rumors and misstatements of fact to be broadcast, which circumstance emphasizes again the necessity of sound, sober thinking.

It is interesting to note that those who with great clamor talk about cancelation of air-mail contracts without previous proof in court usually are of that class who are not so deeply interested or concerned about the success of President Roosevelt's administration as they might avow themselves to be. Indeed, all of the critics of this policy, so far as I have been able to observe and learn, fail to call your attention to the fact that in 1861 Mr. M. Blair, who was then Postmaster General under a Republican President, canceled a great many more mail-carrying contracts than have recently been canceled, all of which contracts were canceled by the Postmaster General at that time without hearing or consideration being given to the parties holding contracts. In fact, the cancelation of mail-carrying contracts by the Postmaster General at that time was wide-spread in at least four States, to wit, States of Maryland, Virginia, Kentucky, and Missouri.

I fear those who so eagerly attempt to criticize the present administration policy either shut their eyes to this historical fact or, for the lack of information, fail to know but little about it, which again emphasizes the statement that I started out with—it is so much more important that we think more and talk less that we may contribute more to the public welfare and the more fully enjoy the confidence and respect of the multitude of splendid citizens of our country who really do know the truth and do understand.

MINORITY RULE

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I am receiving many letters from constituents asking for an explanation of my vote last week to sustain the President's veto of the independent offices appropriation bill with its amendments.

There is, I believe, a special significance in this type of letter. It is evidence that the people of this Nation are awakening to the fact that government by groups is threatening to undermine the foundations of genuine representative democracy in the United States.

The issue before the House was whether the representatives of the people should vote to sustain the people's great leader, President Roosevelt, or whether they should listen to the commands and be intimidated by the threats of the lobbyists representing special groups. I chose to support the President regardless of the consequences.

If President Roosevelt's administration stands for anything, it is for a national plan of recovery framed to benefit all of the people. Special interests which have hitherto dictated public policy are not recognized in that plan.

The success of the program rests absolutely on a firm disregard of special pleading by active minorities for legislation favorable to selected groups.

It is my firm conviction that unless Congress stands with the President in his courageous effort to put through a national program, regardless of the attack of powerful groups, our efforts for recovery will fail.

The question, in short, is this: "Are we to have government of organized minorities for special interests, or are we to stand firmly for a national program to benefit the Nation as a whole?"

HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 309

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to quote therein a resolution introduced by me.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following joint resolution introduced by me:

House Joint Resolution 309

Joint resolution to admit Albert Einstein to citizenship

Whereas Prof. Albert Einstein has been accepted by the scientific world as a savant and a genius; and

Whereas his activities as a humanitarian have placed him high in the regard of countless of his fellowmen; and

Whereas he has publicly declared on many occasions to be a lover of the United States and an admirer of its Constitution; and

Whereas the United States is known in the world as a "haven of liberty and true civilization": Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That Albert Einstein is hereby unconditionally admitted to the character and privileges of a citizen of the United States.

THE LEGACY OF IRELAND

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD a speech made by my colleague the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CONDON].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech by my colleague the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CONDON] at the annual St. Patrick's Day celebration of the Irish Society of Memphis, at Memphis, Tenn., March 17, 1934:

Mr. Toastmaster, members of the Irish Society of Memphis, and friends, permit me at the outset to say to you how happy I am to be here tonight, and to join with you in these exercises in honor of St. Patrick. To be invited to address you on any occasion would be an honor, but on this occasion, so reminiscent of rich and glorious memories of the past, and so promising of high hopes for the future, it is indeed a privilege of which I am profoundly conscious.

That I am privileged to be with you tonight I owe to my fortunate acquaintance in the Congress of the United States with the distinguished Member of the House of Representatives of that body for this great constituency of Memphis, your friend and my friend, Hon. EDWARD H. CRUMP. It is a matter of deep and sincere regret to us in Congress that we are soon to lose him because of his voluntary retirement at the end of his present term. His place will be difficult to fill and his absence in the House and in the councils of the party will be sorely felt.

Mr. CRUMP has spoken so often to me of Memphis and her people in such affectionate and appreciative terms that I have come to believe that, though he is physically present in Washington, his heart is ever here in Memphis with those he loves and by whom he is loved in return. I am happy to testify here tonight that all the fine things which he said to me about this splendid city of Memphis, enthroned on her historic bluffs, the commercial and industrial queen of the southern Mississippi Valley, are indeed true. Not only am I charmed with your fair city, its beautiful homes and magnificent public buildings, but I have found here among your people a wealth of that far-famed southern hospitality of which I have so often heard and of which I have been in the few brief hours since my arrival the happy recipient in unstinted measure. Typical of this hospitable spirit is the distinguished president of your society, General Bates, and his associates on the welcoming committee which greeted me this morning at the Union Station, each with his shamrock and a bright sprig of green in his buttonhole, seemingly heralding to all in the early dawn that it was indeed St. Patrick's Day in the morning. The mere sight of them proudly wearing the green immediately prejudiced me in favor of the Irish Society of Memphis and its members before I had an opportunity to know them more intimately. With such an introduction and reception I am better able to understand this great company assembled here in this magnificent banquet hall of this splendid hotel so worthy of this great city and so representative of its high hospitality.

This gathering, it seems to me, therefore needs no stranger from afar to inspire them with the proper spirit of this day or to urge them to celebrate it appropriately. Let me rather recall to your minds the story of the events that is the reason for our assembling here and let us together dwell for a few moments upon its significance in these days in which we live.

We are gathered here to pay honor to St. Patrick. This day is dedicated to him and to Ireland. Everywhere tonight throughout the civilized world Irishmen and the friends of Irishmen are toasting his memory and recalling with pride the glorious Ireland of his day and the centuries immediately following.

Fifteen hundred years have come and gone since he brought the faith to Erin, and yet he is today, as he has ever been throughout the centuries, the national hero of the Irish people. Ireland, in the golden age of her might and power, in the dark era of her subjugation, and now in the bright and hopeful hour of her national resurgence, knows no other personage in all the great galaxy of her kings, warriors, and scholars more worthy of the love and homage of Irish hearts, more deserving of the hero's niche in the nation's hall of fame than the humble, holy Patrick.

On this day Irishmen, wherever they may be, call the world to witness, and justly so, the great role which Ireland played in the Christianization and civilization of western Europe in the sixth, seventh, and eighth centuries following the break-up of the Roman Empire. In that great drama the chief and overtowering figure is St. Patrick. His appearance upon the public stage in Ireland in the year of 432 A.D. was of momentous consequence to the future history of Ireland and of the world. Its effect upon the course of events that followed in succeeding centuries cannot be overestimated. Indeed, until recently it has been grossly underestimated or deliberately ignored.

St. Patrick did something to Ireland and for Ireland in that early dawn of the Middle Ages that has ever since set her separate and apart from all other nations. To appreciate adequately the comprehensive scope and all-pervading effect of his influence it is necessary to recall what every true student of history knows, that Ireland at the advent of St. Patrick in the fifth century was the greatest military power in Europe north of the Alps and west of the Rhine. Her warriors were renowned throughout the Roman provinces of the west for their fierce and warlike qualities that made them respected and feared not alone by the barbarian tribes of Gaul and Britain but also by the proud legions of imperial Rome. Their indomitable valor and bravery on the field of battle under the immediate personal leadership of their kings and chieftains was not limited to their homeland, but brought them martial triumphs and conquests far beyond the confines of Ireland. This military people were not content to repel the legions of the Caesars from their own shores but persisted in pursuing them into Gaul, even to the foot of the Alps.

With the coming of Patrick the fame of these Irish warriors had spread everywhere throughout the Roman dominions. Ireland, or Scotia, as she was known among the Latins, alone of all the Celtic nations successfully resisted the power of Rome and remained completely free and sovereign. That mighty empire had long since ceased to hope that her legions might one day make their camps in Scotia, as they had done all over neighboring Britain. Rather the Irish kings were penetrating deeper and deeper every year into the Roman provinces of the west and long-conquered Celtic peoples were confidently looking to them as their deliverers from the hated Roman yoke.

Ireland at this period, so it has seemed to careful historians, was on the verge of a sweeping expansion of political power and influence with the certain hegemony of the British Isles and the northwestern fringe of Gaul assured to her. Why this plainly indicated development did not occur is an intriguing subject of speculation to students of the period. There was no decay of the people to account for it and no perceptible weakening of the military power of the nation. Ireland for seven centuries to follow continued to be a strong and well-organized country, virile enough to expel the Dane and the Northmen in the eleventh century, a feat which France and England both failed to perform fully in their countries. The current of Irish life, which was then sweeping all before it in the full tide of military conquests beyond the seas, was suddenly turned into new channels.

The ardent, fearless, and adventurous nature of the Gael that had carried him with wild and reckless abandon on military exploits into far distant lands was now made to serve in more peaceful projects none the less daring and eventful than the wars of the sword and the battleax, but more productive of good to the world and of more far-reaching consequence to the future civilization of western Europe. It was St. Patrick who enlisted his countrymen in this new adventure that was to make Britain and half of Europe forever the debtor to the little green isle in the west.

Under his tutelage Scotia, the home of fierce unconquerable warriors to the Roman Caesars, now became the nursery of saints and scholars to all the young nations of western Europe in the sixth, seventh, and eighth centuries. Ernest Renan, the great French scholar and essayist of the last century, said of the Irish that they literally covered the western seas in the early Middle Ages.

"When we consider", says he, "the legions of Irish saints and scholars who in the sixth and seventh centuries inundated the Continent and arrived from their isle bringing with them their stubborn spirit, their attachment to their own usages, their subtle and realistic turn of mind, and see the Scots (such was the name then given to the Irish) doing duty until the twelfth century as instructors in grammar and literature to all the west, we cannot doubt that Ireland in the first half of the Middle Ages was the scene of a singular religious movement."

Zimmer, the Prussian historian, echoes the same thought when he says:

"Ireland can indeed lay claim to a great past. She cannot only boast of having been the birthplace and abode of high culture in the fifth and sixth centuries, at a time when the Roman Empire was being undermined by German tribes, which threatened to sink the whole Continent into barbarism, but also of having made strenuous efforts in the seventh and up to the tenth century to spread her learning among the German and Roman peoples, thus forming the actual foundations of our present continental civilization."

As with learning and culture of the books and the schools, so it was with exploration and discovery. As Renan said, "The Irish were everywhere on the western seas adventuring into the known and the unknown." And Humboldt, the great German geographer, remarks "that in the Faroes, the Orkneys, the Shetlands, and throughout the northern seas the Scandinavians found themselves preceded by the Irish." They had even landed and colonized Iceland in 795, A.D., and when the Danes arrived there some 65 years later they found Irish books and bells and Irish names of places that bore witness to the presence of Irish monks before them.

Why marshal more witnesses to prove what every educated person today knows to be a fact—that the Irish were the saviors of Christian civilization in the West; that but for them the foundations of modern Europe might never have been laid; that but for them even Greek and Latin culture might have been irrevocably lost to the world. To these brilliant, industrious, devoted, and adventurous Irish monks and scholars Europe and the world owes a debt it can never repay. That they were willing, nay, eager, to leave homeland and friends and go forth into strange lands among strange peoples across the seas as the seed sowers not only of religion but of learning and culture as well has brought more glory to Ireland than a thousand years of military triumphs and political conquests. And the author of it all was the great, though humble, man whose name and fame we celebrate tonight. He turned the Irish spirit to things of the mind, or rather he taught his people to seek to conquer in the intellectual world.

He did not bring learning and the love of scholarship to Ireland; that had flourished there for centuries before him. The scholar in pagan Ireland was held in equal regard with the warrior and the priest. But St. Patrick did exalt the mission of the priest and scholar above that of the warrior and thereby stirred the world and more greatly influenced future generations in Ireland and in all of western Europe than all the great figures of the early Middle Ages, not even excepting Charlemagne himself.

How different Europe would have been had not St. Patrick appeared in Ireland at the moment he did! And how different the future Ireland also! It can hardly be doubted that she would have gone vigorously forward in her subjugation of the British Isles and that upon the heels of the retreating Roman legions in Gaul she would have reconstituted the Celtic peoples into a unified nation able to withstand the oncoming Franks and Germans. It is idle to speculate upon that possibility, and Irish writers have wasted no time in doing so. No true Irishman who knows the rich and wondrous story of the Ireland of the early Middle Ages and appreciates the full import of her influence in the rebuilding of western civilization after the fall of Rome regrets that in the inscrutable designs of Providence Erin was not destined to win political empire and share with England and Germany and France and Spain the rich rewards of national prestige and power in the later development of modern Europe. Rather, he thrills with a just pride in the sure knowledge that it is upon the firm foundations of Irish faith and learning and culture that the superstructure of our modern civilization is built.

Benedict Fitzpatrick, one of the foremost of the modern historians of Ireland, speaking of the brilliant and for the most part nameless saints and scholars who laid these foundations, says:

"The work of these expeditionary Gaels represented no passing and futile ebullition of massed psychic energy. It represented in its manifold, reiterated forms a spiritual movement almost without parallel, as effective as it was prolonged. The accomplishments of these indefatigable Irish pioneers are as intimately embodied in the constitution of the civilized world as the empire-building of Caesar, or the preaching of Paul, or the resurrection of the intellectual world of the Greek, or the Code Napoleon. The ordinary man may not know it any more than he may be aware of the mesenteric artery, but it is there, and if it were not there he would be a different sort of being from what he is."

Montalembert, the French scholar and historian, says:

"Ireland was regarded by all Europe as the principal center of learning and piety."

And the German historian, Darmestetter, proclaims that—

"The Renaissance began in Ireland 700 years before it was known in Italy. During 300 years Ireland was the asylum of the higher learning. Armagh, the educational capital of Christian Ireland, was the metropolis of civilization."

With this brilliant past and with the promise now dawning of a national rebirth people of Irish lineage may well celebrate on this day the glories of great St. Patrick and reawaken that pride of race that made Irishmen the envy and the admiration of the medieval world. At no time and in no country have Irishmen had cause to deny their origin or be ashamed of the part that the Gaelic race has played in the great drama of life, as it is authentically recorded in the annals of ancient and modern times. National independence was lost by lack of unity and sheer force of numbers, but never national honor. The benefits of modern progress and the blessings of enlightened government were wrongfully withheld from them in their homeland by tyrannical oppressors, but never with the acquiescence of the Irish people. They proved themselves to be fundamentally as great a race in the grip of tyranny as they were in the heyday of Ireland's might and power. Seven hundred long and bitter years of oppression could not destroy their love of liberty. And today, having achieved by their own unaided efforts their freedom and independence, they are building a new Ireland worthy to take rank in the forefront of the nations of Europe.

Love of country, pure and unadulterated by baser motives, has never anywhere had a finer exemplification than in Ireland throughout all her long history. Indeed, an Irish poet has given expression to it in these beautiful lines:

"I vow to thee my country—all earthly things above—
Entire and whole and perfect, the service of my love,
The love that asks no question; the love that stands the test
That lays upon the altar the dearest and the best;
The love that never falters, the love that pays the price,
The love that makes undaunted the final sacrifice."

This patriotic fervor, this love of Ireland, has endured through seemingly never-ending centuries of oppression, not only among those who remained at home, but also among the millions driven into exile. During these bitter years Ireland lost some of the bravest and the best of her children. Happily, however, the exiles in their wanderings in strange lands and far-off countries among alien races never forgot the motherland of Erin, and best of all they transmitted that love and affection to their offspring and the result has been a greater Ireland outside of Ireland. That is the explanation, if one were needed, of our gathering here tonight in this great city of Memphis in a land unknown to St. Patrick and his contemporaries and almost 4,000 miles distant from the seat of his bishopric at Armagh.

We Americans, who lay claim to a portion of the rich legacy of Ireland, and who take pride in the glorious and brilliant chapters which that little island of the west has written in the annals of the world's history from the very dawn of Christianity, are delighted to recall the friendship of the United States for Ireland during the struggle for her freedom. Here on the shores of this great free Republic of the west the heroes and patriots of Ireland, fleeing from persecution, have always been welcomed. Here have they come in unnumbered millions to find a home and country that cherished their undying devotion to the purest ideals of liberty, and appreciated the fine spirit of loyalty that actuated them to dare death and prefer exile rather than supinely to submit to the tyrannical exactions of their beloved country's oppressor. Their coming hither has immeasurably enriched America. They and their descendants have richly repaid the country that so generously accorded them sanctuary in exile.

In every walk of life their contribution to the sum of human achievement and progress in our country has been tremendous. They labored brilliantly and heroically with Washington in laying the foundations of the Republic and establishing its independence from the selfsame oppressor who tyrannized over Ireland. This was, indeed, a labor of love and no race contributed more to the winning of the Revolution than the Irish, as the muster rolls of the Continental Army indisputably show. Merely to call the names of Washington's generals—Montgomery, Sullivan, Moylan, Wayne, Commodore Barry, and Captain O'Brien, to name only a few of the more prominent—is to demonstrate beyond cavil the leading part played by the Irish in the field. No less important was their participation in the council. In the Continental Congress, the Constitutional Convention, and the First Congress under the Constitution Irish names are prominent on the rolls. And in the subsequent unfolding of the moving drama of national development and expansion throughout a century and a half the Gaelic element in American life has been a vital and inspiring thing.

It is unnecessary to recount in detail the indubitable Irish contribution to the building of the present great and glorious edifice of the American Republic which is today the envy of the modern world. Mention merely is made to emphasize a fact of which every educated person in our country is well aware. Let us while we honor the great patron saint of the land of our forebears renew our allegiance to the great free Republic of the United States and resolve to serve her in peace and in war in the same loyal and devoted manner as the brave, faithful Irish whose names are forever linked with Washington and Jefferson and Franklin and other great statesmen and heroes in the illustrious pages of American history. If we are bone of the bone and blood of the blood of the true Gael, none will surpass us in the quality of our American citizenship as no Frank exceeded in loyalty the saintly and scholarly Gaels in the Frankish court of Charlemagne. Thus shall we prove ourselves worthy sons of St. Patrick and shed new luster on the story of the Gael. Thus shall we carry on that tradition of nobility of the Celtic race, concerning which Renan said:

"If the excellence of races is to be appreciated by the purity of their blood and the inviolability of their national character, it must needs be admitted none can vie in nobility with the still surviving remains of the Celtic race. * * * Ireland in particular is the only country in Europe where the native can produce the titles of his descent and designate with certainty, even in the darkness of prehistoric ages, the race from which he has sprung."

THROUGH T.V.A. OPERATION AND CERTAIN P.W.A. ALLOTMENTS THE GOVERNMENT IS ENTERING BUSINESS IN COMPETITION WITH PRIVATE INDUSTRY, THUS DESTROYING CAPITAL INVESTED IN PRIVATE INDUSTRY AND FORCING INTO UNEMPLOYMENT LABOR EMPLOYED BY SUCH PRIVATE INDUSTRIES—COAL, CEMENT, RAILROAD, AND POTTERY INDUSTRIES VITALLY AFFECTED

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, we are hearing much of the work of the so-called "brain trust." From one side the charge is hurled that the members of the "brain trust" are plain, outright, long-whiskered Communists. On the other hand, anyone who criticizes something which is being done by the "brain trust" is being branded as a rugged individualist that reverts to barbarism, a tool of Mellon, Morgan, the Power Trust, or the international bankers.

Both of these charges are made by intolerants running rampant. The members of the "brain trust" are not bloodthirsty Communists. They are simply men who are devoted to a program, which is, to a great extent, a complete reversal of the traditional economic and social life of America. Those who oppose this change which is being put into effect by the so-called "brain trust", are not cold-blooded individualists of the cave-man era nor are they the spokesmen of greedy, selfish, avaricious capitalists. They are merely American citizens who are devoted to the proposition that there is still something worthwhile in a century and a half of progress and experience.

I believe in the inalienable rights of the individual American citizen. That does not mean that individuals in managing private corporations have the right to pilfer the country as was done by international banking, fake stock selling projects and any number of other corrupt and dishonest acts, which were practiced during the heydey of our supposed prosperity during and following the war. When I express my belief in individualism and the rights for the individual, I refer to the right of an American citizen to work on a farm, in the factory, in the mine, or to engage in business without being crushed either by concentrated wealth or by the ruthless hand of government. I say to you frankly, if there is no room left in American life for the individual citizen to operate in a free and independent manner with equal and fair opportunities, then there is but little public service which I can render.

I think that things are being done in the administration of the various relief measures which were not contemplated when the relief measures were enacted by Congress.

For instance, I think that the Agricultural Adjustment Act was enacted primarily for the purpose of meeting an emergency of agricultural surpluses which were largely a result of an abnormal underconsumption growing out of unemployment in the industrial sections and due either to a temporary maladjustment or a permanent readjustment in international trade. Just at this time no man knows with certainty whether the complete break-down in exchange of goods between the countries of the world is a temporary maladjustment or is a part of a permanent readjustment of world trade. However, in the administration of the Agriculture Adjustment Act, we find that it is being administered in a manner which leads to the permanent Government control of the land of this country. This means that the farmer must first obtain permission from Washington before he can decide what crops he can plant, or how much food he can produce. I regard this as a nationalization of American agriculture. If this becomes permanent we may operate under a different name but it will not be far different from the program which is now being practiced in Russian agriculture. The Russian Soviet tells the Russian farmer how much he can produce and how much he can keep for his own.

In the case of the Public Works program, Congress appropriated $3,300,000,000 for public works. Four hundred million dollars of this was earmarked for highway construction. The remainder was left for projects to be designated by the President. Of course, the President could not designate these projects personally, therefore, he appointed Secretary of Interior Ickes as Public Works Administrator. Congress provided the money for public works for the direct purpose of taking care of the unemployed. Congress did this upon the request of the representatives of practically every class of people in the United States.

Among those who requested this program and this appropriation were the president of the National Chamber of Commerce, spokesman for capital and industry; president of the American Federation of Labor, spokesman for American labor; the national legislative representatives of the Farm Bureau and the Grange, spokesmen for a great part of the American farmers; the Director of the Budget and the Secretary of the Treasury, as spokesmen for the administration; and the national legislative representative of the retail merchants of the country.

Congress had to leave the designation of the projects to the President. If these projects had been designated by Congress, in the nature of things they would have had little relationship to the needs of unemployment. The projects would have been designated on the basis of political log-rolling. So, in order to obtain any reasonable national distribution of these projects, it was necessary to place the power in the Executive to designate the projects. In designating these projects, faith cannot be kept with Congress and the country except that they are designated for the sole purpose of taking care of unemployment. However, it seems to me that Mr. Ickes is using a part of the money not for the purpose of taking care of unemployment but for the purpose of carrying out some of his long-possessed, cherished ideas of governmental ownership of various public utilities.

One does not need to be a defender of all of the sins of the power industry in order to be opposed to the use of Government funds to build power projects to be operated by the Government. There is a way to handle Insull and the other sinners of the power industry without the Government using public funds and the public credit to nationalize and socialize the power industry. The proper function of government is to stamp out corruption and to punish the criminal in any activity. It is not necessary for government to step in and destroy private business and private activity in order to stamp out the criminal conduct on the part of someone engaged in private business. When the Government sets out to destroy a private business, it punishes 10 innocent bystanders for every one whose conduct has been such that he deserves punishment.

Secretary Ickes has allotted $104,000,000 of the Public Works fund to build purely Government power projects. I quote from a press release of March 25, 1934, by Secretary Ickes:

> P.W.A. allotments for power-generating distributing plants total $128,000,000. Of this total, $104,000,000 are being spent by the Federal Government. The Federal projects are being constructed by the Federal Government which will own and operate them.

This money to build these plants to be owned and operated by the Government is coming from the appropriation which Congress made for the purpose of carrying on public works to furnish temporary employment. The using of $104,000,000 of this money to build these hydroelectric plants to be owned and operated by the Government does not alone affect the power industry. In fact, it directly hits other well-established industries. For instance, it is displacing coal. It is dealing a hard blow to thousands of citizens of Kansas who have no interest whatever in the power business. One of the projects which is to be taken care of by this allotment is the Loup River project in Nebraska. At this time, there are from 9 to 11 cars of coal daily going from the Pittsburg, Kans., district into Nebraska for the purpose of generating power in steam plants. When this Loup River hydroelectric project is established with Government money, this market will be lost to the coal industry of Kansas. That means that coal miners, people owning the coal mines, and the business people of the Kansas coal districts will suffer. What is more, as these coal miners are put out of work, they will be on the charity list to be supported by every taxpayer of Kansas. Let me quote a telegram on this subject, of February 23:

> The Loup River hydroelectric project is a matter of grave concern to the thousands of coal miners of this country, their wives and children. If this project is carried through, the power produced by it will displace the use of coal as fuel over a wide territory, thus throwing thousands of miners out of work, making it impossible for them to earn a living for themselves and families. Such a result will be directly in conflict with the aims and purposes of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which seeks to rehabilitate industry and create employment for the millions of workers who are now in forced idleness.

Now, who do you think signed that telegram? Do you think that it was some individualist of the Dark Ages or do you think that it was some tool of Wall Street? If you do, guess again. That telegram was signed by the following presidents of district mine unions: Frank Wilson, district president, Albia, Iowa; Henry Allai, district president, Pittsburg, Kans.; D. H. Watkins, district president, Excelsior Springs, Mo.; Frank Hefferly, district president, Denver, Colo.; and Ellis Searles, official representative of the United Mine Workers of America.

The coal industry has formed an organization composed of the coal operators and the coal miners. On February 21 this organization sent a telegram to the Honorable Harold Ickes, Secretary of the Interior. This telegram said, in part:

> This bureau has been created for joint action by the men who work in coal mines of the United States and by the owners of those mines in defense of their jobs and their investment against uneconomic Government-financed hydroelectric projects. We produce and sell our coal in conformity with the code of fair competition for the bituminous-coal industry, as approved by President Roosevelt on September 18, 1933. We are attempting only to save our jobs and our investments. We are not antiadministrationists. Participation of Mr. John L. Lewis and the United Mine Workers of America assures you of that. We refer now to the Loup River public-power project near Columbus, Nebr. Requests for public hearings on this project have been made to you by the United Mine Workers of America, the American Federation of Labor, the National Bituminous Coal Industrial Board, the National Industrial Recovery Administrator Hugh S. Johnson, the National Coal Association, the coal-code authorities and coal operators associations of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, and Missouri. The organizations making these requests represent millions of working people and millions of dollars of investment. You have denied all such requests. We are aware of your belief that completion of such projects represents progress and should be accomplished regardless of the number of people put out of work, and regardless of the amount of investment destroyed. In our American Government no one man should determine what is and what is not progress.

It is signed by Ellis Searles, United Mine Workers of America, and George J. Leahy, National Coal Association.

Mr. Ickes gave a most blunt answer to this telegram by his allotting $104,000,000 of the Public Works fund to be used to build these Government projects which vitally affect the coal industry capital and labor. What is more, it affects the railroad industry capital and labor. If coal is to be replaced by these Government hydroelectric projects, then railroad labor is not going to be employed in the hauling of coal, and railroad capital is not going to receive money for hauling the coal.

The extension of the Muscle Shoals project by the T.V.A. is another illustration of the Government's domination of business playing havoc with thousands of innocent bystanders. In an Associated Press report of March 27, Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, Chairman of the T.V.A., gave out the following statement:

Morgan said that his engineers were studying the proposed canal to connect the Tombigbee and Tennessee Rivers for a short water haul from the Tennessee Valley to the Gulf. Army engineers also are studying the proposed Tombigbee-Tennessee Canal, which would trim about 600 miles from the Tennessee to the Ohio and thence down the Mississippi to the Gulf.

Now, the people and Congress thought that the purpose of the T.V.A. was to develop electric power at Muscle Shoals. We now find that it includes building a canal at the Government's expense, which canal will shorten the water haul to the Gulf by 600 miles. That means more unemployment for railroad labor and less business for the railroads. Probably many railroad men thought that it was fine for the Government to make power at Muscle Shoals. They did not know that the plan would also mean building canals and taking their jobs away from them.

The following is a part of a news report of March 27:

Cement production will be carried on by the T.V.A. at Plant No. 2, for the reason that it can be made there at a cost much less than private industry can maintain. This is due to the many advantages of this section, among them being cheap power, close proximity of raw materials of the best kind and greatest abundance and water transportation facilities.

Dr. Morgan has said that the manufacture of cement here is a necessity unless private manufacturers reduce their cost very much, probably more than they can, because of the unusual facilities which this area offers.

Probably many Kansas people of Chanute, Independence, Fredonia, Iola, and Bonner Springs thought that the T.V.A. was merely for the purpose of developing power at Muscle Shoals, and that was a long way from Kansas and a matter of small concern to them. They had not understood that it also meant using public money to build cement plants to compete with the cement plants in these Kansas towns.

Now, it is generally believed that the cement industry has been a trust or combine and that it has charged the people too much money for cement. The right way for the Government to handle that is to prosecute those connected with the industry who are responsible for any combine or conspiracy in restraint of trade. The wrong way is for the Government to build cement plants which do not need to show a profit but can meet their losses by bleeding the taxpayers. The destruction of the private plants with such unfair governmental competition does not alone hit those who have money invested in cement plants; it hits hardest the men who work in these plants, and the communities which depend upon these plants for their business and economic existence.

In the Associated Press report of March 27, 1934, we find the following:

Development of an earthenware industry in the valley, by using native clays, has been set as one of the goals of the Authority, along with extensive production of starch from sweetpotatoes growing in the red-clay hills.

The Tennessee Valley Authority backed with the taxpayers' money engaging in the pottery business will not be encouraging to such States as Ohio and Arkansas. The Congressmen from Arkansas and Ohio who voted for the T.V.A. had every right to believe that they were voting for the establishing of a governmental power project at Muscle Shoals. They did not think that they were voting for a Government subsidized industry to compete with Ohio and Arkansas pottery works and labor.

The Tennessee Valley Authority through its directors, Arthur E. Morgan, H. A. Morgan, and David E. Lilienthal, have organized a corporation under the laws of the State of Tennessee. The capital stock of this corporation is provided from public funds by the Federal Emergency Relief Corporation. Under the terms of the charter of this Tennessee corporation, the corporation is authorized to hold and administer any and all funds received from the Government of the United States.

Among the things which this corporation is authorized to do under its charter are as follows:

SEC. B. To produce, raise, manufacture, buy, sell, deal in, and to engage in, conduct, and carry on the business of producing, raising, manufacturing, buying, selling, and dealing in farm products, livestock, goods, wares, and merchandise of every class and description necessary or useful for the operations of the corporation.

Under section C of the charter the corporation is authorized:

To lend or advance money, to endorse the notes, and to guarantee the obligations of individuals, firms, corporations, or others with or without collateral security whatsoever.

Under section D of the charter the corporation is authorized:

To borrow money and to make and issue notes and evidences of indebtedness of all kinds, whether secured by mortgage, pledge, or otherwise without limit as to amount.

Under section H of the charter this corporation is authorized:

To acquire by purchase, subscription, or otherwise, and to hold for investment or otherwise, and to use, sell, assign, transfer, mortgage, pledge, or otherwise deal with or dispose of stock, bonds, or any other obligations or securities of any corporation or corporations.

While the Tennessee Valley Authority was organized for the primary purpose of generating power at Muscle Shoals, yet, through subsidiary corporations set up by the directors of the T.V.A., it is now operating with money received from the Public Works fund and other relief funds and borrowed from the R.F.C. Its operations include, under the charter of this subsidiary corporation, buying, selling, farming, and operating of real estate, manufacturing, and selling any wares and merchandise of every class and description necessary or useful for the operation of this subsidiary corporation. Its further operations include lending money to any corporations or individuals without limit, with or without collateral security. Its operations further include borrowing money without limit and buying and selling and otherwise speculating in the stocks and securities of any corporation.

In short, through this subsidiary corporation, the Tennessee Valley Authority can engage in any and all lines of business, manufacturing, retailing, wholesaling, farming, lending money, and speculating in stocks and bonds. In brief, the business of no citizen of the country is safe from being destroyed by the vicious competition of a corporation financed with Government money which was appropriated by Congress for public relief in the name of social and economic emergency.

Some of this money set aside to take care of public works is being used to establish a Government-owned rum industry in the Virgin Islands. That is not taking care of American unemployment. It is a social experiment in the Virgin Islands.

The privately owned coal industry, cement industry, pottery industry, and railroad, including the labor of all of these industries, are going to have to compete with the march of progress in the development of hydroelectric power, however, since these private institutions are operated with private capital and pay taxes to support government, they and their employees have the right to expect their competition to come from competitors who likewise operate with their own money and pay taxes to support government. They have a right to expect that they will not be confronted by governmental competition financed by tax money collected from all the people of this country.

There is not going to be any halfway ground. The business of this country is either all going to be privately owned and operated or all nationally owned and operated. In the middle of the last century this country could not survive half slave and half free. Today it is not going to be able to survive half nationalisticly owned and operated and half privately owned and operated. If the people want to turn to a nationalized industry, that is their privilege and right.

When they turn to it they are turning to a plan which is communism in Russia and nationalization in America. About all that there is to communism is that the government owns and operates everything; therefore everyone must work for the government. When the people turn to this plan it should be after a free and open election where that is the issue and the people by a majority vote have declared that they choose to quit the traditional American plan and to take on this new plan, which is modeled after modern European plans. The people should not be insidiously forced into this nationalistic program by the use of money which has been appropriated to take care of emergency unemployment but has been diverted for the primary purpose of nationalizing industry. There has been no election when the issue before the people has been whether or not they wanted to take on a plan of the Government's owning and operating the industries. In the election which elected the present administration the public chose this administration on a platform which specifically pledged taking government out of private business; yet through a wholly unexpected perversion of Public Works funds and money appropriated for the Tennessee Valley Authority we find in one instance after another that the Government is rushing headlong into business, at the expense of the people, in competition with private industry. In doing so it is practicing the worst kind of unfair competition, destroying private capital, and driving thousands of our citizens who are employed by private capital into unemployment.

In these days of distress growing out of the depression, I am perfectly willing for public credit to be used to furnish employment. I voted for the appropriation of $3,300,000,000 for public works, yet, I and every other Member of Congress who voted for this appropriation believed and had the right to believe that the public works should be confined to projects which are governmental in character and not projects to be operated by the Government for profit in competition with industry owned by private capital and employing labor.

In many P.W.A. projects Congress and the people have been deceived in two respects: First, many of these projects have heretofore been before Congress and Congress has consistently refused to accept them on their respective merits; and second, public works funds have been diverted to projects, the primary purpose of which is to place the Government in business. Such projects furnish a relatively small amount of labor in their construction and when completed are destroyers of labor. Thus, in the end, public money is being used to promote unemployment rather than to increase permanent employment.

My friends, I still believe that a man can stand up for a fair and reasonable chance for the individual American citizen and be opposed to his being driven into bankruptcy by competition financed with the taxpayers' money without his being a heartless individualist or a tool of avaricious and selfish wealth. I still believe that a man can be of a good citizen of this country and believe that the way to handle the abuse of wealth, be it in the power industry, international banking, cement industry, or any other industry, by insisting that those who have committed these wrongs be prosecuted in the American courts of justice for violating the monopoly laws rather than by joining a program of using public money to destroy the opportunities and rights of the individual American citizen.

TO PROHIBIT FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS WITH FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS IN DEFAULT ON OBLIGATIONS TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 682) to prohibit financial transactions with any foreign government in default on its obligations to the United States.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter it shall be unlawful within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any person to purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of, any foreign government or political subdivision thereof or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, issued after the passage of this act, or to make any loan to such foreign government, political subdivision, organization, or association, except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness while such government, political subdivision, organization, or association, is in default in the payment of its obligations, or any part thereof, to the Government of the United States. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"SEC. 2. As used in this act the term 'person' includes individual, partnership, corporation, or association other than a public corporation created by or pursuant to special authorization of Congress, or a corporation in which the Government of the United States has or exercises a controlling interest through stock ownership or otherwise."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to 30 minutes instead of the customary 20 minutes, and the gentleman from New York is entitled to 30 minutes instead of the customary 20 minutes.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, this is a very short bill, but a very important one; and I should like the Members of the House to consider it, because I know, or at least I believe, it will meet with their approval.

This bill provides that it shall be unlawful within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any person to purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of any foreign government or political subdivision thereof, or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of such foreign government or political subdivision issued after the passage of this act, or to make any loans to such foreign government, political subdivision, organization, or association except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness with such government or political subdivision, organization, or association that is in default with the Government of the United States.

In other words, it provides a penalty for anyone purchasing these securities that are issued hereafter from any government that is in default to the United States.

The second section of this act uses the term "person", and as there used it includes individuals, partnerships, corporations, or associations other than a public corporation created by or pursuant to the special authorization of Congress, or a corporation in which the Government of the United States has or exercises controlling interest through stock ownership.

The Members of this House are well aware of the fact that several years ago compromises were made with foreign governments. Oftentimes the amounts that were agreed upon were not sufficient to pay what had been loaned to these countries after the World War. You are further familiar with the fact that only one government, Finland, met its obligations due this Government. In other words, when the time for payment came they refused to pay and as much as said, "What are you going to do about it?" By voting favorably on this bill we can say that we do not propose to have this Government or the citizens of this Government lend money until the defaulting governments have settled what they owe us. [Applause.] In other words, we will protect this Government as well as protect the people of the United States.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. TERRELL of Texas. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the bill, but at the same time this bill places a penalty on an American citizen who might want to lend the foreign governments some money.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. If he has the experience that the Government of the United States has had, then we are not placing a penalty on him; we are doing him a favor.

Millions of dollars have been lent by the people of the United States to these defaulting governments, and they are not only in default to our Government but they are in default to our citizens. If you want to protect our Government and if you want to protect our people, you can tell these foreign governments what we are going to do about it by voting in favor of this bill and saying that the securities of these defaulting governments hereafter issued are not to be purchased by this Government or its citizens.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman has not explained to us the purpose of section 2.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I presume that is for the purpose of enabling the corporation on organization to buy or to purchase from other governments if they so desire.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under this bill, what would be the status of governments like England, that have made a so-called "token payments", but have defaulted in the main?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The President of the United States, as I understand it, has held that they are not in default.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. HASTINGS. May I say that no man in this country is more in sympathy with this proposition than I am, but I desire to ask this one question: Why, in line 9, have you inserted the words "issued after the passage of this act"? Why not prohibit the purchase of any of them at the present time?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. For the reason that there is a penalty for purchasing. If you understake to exercise this penalty on the securities that have already been sold in this country, then our citizens could not even deal in or sell or have reissued to them the securities which they hold.

Mr. HASTINGS. This bill comes up under suspension of the rules?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. HASTINGS. If this were open to amendment, I would offer an amendment. I do not believe any of them should be sold in the markets of the United States.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. They will not be, except those that have previously been sold. You would do a great damage to the man who has already bought if you told him he could not renew or sell the obligations.

Mr. McFADDEN. Section 2, as I interpret it, is authority given to this Government, or one of its agencies, to loan money to Russia?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I presume so. I presume that was the purpose of the section; however, it is general in its nature.

Mr. McFADDEN. I know, but that is the main purpose of section 2.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I should judge so without further information. May I say in reference to that that the Board which has the matter in charge passed this resolution:

It is the sense of the board of trustees of this Corporation that no actual credit transactions with the Soviet Government shall be undertaken unless and until that government shall submit to the President of the United States an acceptable agreement respecting the payment of the Russian indebtedness to the Government of the United States and its nationals.

Mr. McFADDEN. Why should we under the circumstances make an exception as to Russia?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We are not making an exception in the case of Russia. The statute is general. They may deal with Russia.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman has just stated that its main purpose is to make loans to Russia.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The gentleman misunderstood me. I said I presumed that that was the purpose, but it was a general statute, and they could deal with any nation.

Mr. McFADDEN. I happen to know that that is the real purpose of section 2 of this bill, and I cannot see why an exception should be made to Russia.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The Soviet Government has not settled her indebtedness. She will have to agree to do so if this export corporation operates in Russia.

Mr. BLANTON. Why did not the bill go all the way and prevent any defaulting country from making loans of any kind in this country?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We may have a bill to the gentleman's satisfaction a little later.

Mr. BLANTON. Why not do it all at once?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. We felt this is the bill we could get through now. This passed the Senate in its present form, and it is a step in the right direction.

Mr. BLANTON. With regard to section 2, does not the gentleman think that before any credit should be extended to Russia or any other government this Congress ought to have the right to approve or disapprove and to have the final say in the matter?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. That is a matter for Congress to decide. I would certainly want to approve, if I had the opportunity.

Mr. BLANTON. Under this section Congress is turning the thing loose. We are delegating the authority to somebody else.

Mr. BRITTEN. I am interested in ascertaining, if possible, whether this Export Corporation will include debts due American citizens for the confiscation of their property during and after the revolution. There were millions of dollars of industries over there that had their property confiscated.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have read the resolution that the Board agreed to.

Mr. BRITTEN. That just covers the Government. This applies to the Government loan of about $370,000,000.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. May I read this again:

And until that Government shall submit to the President of the United States an acceptable agreement respecting payments of the Russian indebtedness to the Government of the United States and its nationals.

Mr. BRITTEN. And its nationals?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Yes. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

I concur in almost everything that has been said by the Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. This bill has much merit. The purpose of the bill is simply to prevent the lending of further money to foreign nations that are in default. An important question to be decided is whether those nations which have made token payments are in default or not. I rather believe the administration will hold that they are not in default, because they were allowed to make these token payments and these payments were accepted by the administration, and therefore, having been accepted, I do not believe we can say that such nations are in default under the provisions of this bill, and, of course, this includes Great Britain, our largest debtor. However, I am not certain on this point.

I want to take you back to the origin of these war debts. We were forced into the World War by attacks, without warning, upon our merchant ships by German submarines. It is well to remember that we were not responsible for causing the World War. Not by the wildest stretch of the imagination can anyone say that the United States of America had anything to do with bringing on the World War.

We were forced into it several years later because of the continued attacks upon our merchant vessels by German submarines. When we went in we sent over 2,000,000 American soldiers, and although we do not claim we won the World War, we can justly claim that we turned the tide of defeat into victory; and after victory was won and the armistice was signed, we asked for nothing and we got just what we asked—nothing at all—no indemnities, no reparations, no conquered territory, and no plunder of any kind.

Then we brought our troops back home, and ever since that day the allied nations have been trying to place upon the American taxpayers the burden of the $10,000,000,000 of money that we lent to them to help win the war.

Do not make any mistake about it. We did everything we were called upon to do. Nobody conceived that the United States would send 2,000,000 young American soldiers over to the other side to fight battles in foreign lands; but we did it, and now we are depicted as Uncle Sam, the Shylock, because we ask for a partial repayment of the money we loaned. As a matter of fact, we have settled these war debts in a most generous and unprecedented manner, on a basis of capacity to pay, and now many of these nations—and I use the word deliberately—are repudiating their debts and their just agreements and welshing out of making any payments. Why, we are only asking France to pay a sum equivalent to that which we loaned her after the armistice, and now, with the reduction of our dollar to 59 cents, she only needs to pay 40 percent of that.

One hundred years ago there was a Democratic President who had a like situation to face, the courageous Andrew Jackson, and he dealt with the French spoliation claims in a very spirited manner. He even broke off relations with France until those debts were settled. Now, there is no one in this Congress who advocates that we should break off relations with any nation. No one advocates that we should use coercion or force or commercial reprisal or prevent the free flow of commerce and ships between defaulting nations and ourselves, but we do say that from now on we do not propose to be an international Santa Claus. We do not propose to take millions and billions of money out of the Treasury of the United States to lend to defaulting nations, whether it be Soviet Russia, Germany, or France.

I am in thorough accord with the first section of this bill.

So far as I am concerned it does not go far enough. If we could amend it, and, of course, we cannot under a suspension of the rules, I would offer an amendment so that foreign cities like Marseille and Lyon, France, could not float bonds in the United States of America. However, speaking for every Republican on the Foreign Affairs Committee, if we had our way and could offer an amendment under the rules, we would move to strike out all of section 2.

Section 2 gives an opportunity to the Government to violate the very purpose of the bill and to lend, through the export and import bank, set up by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, money to foreign nations and, particularly, to Soviet Russia. Just why we should show any favoritism to the Communists is a matter for the "brain trust" to explain, for I know of no reason for it unless we are verging toward a socialistic dictatorship as many claim.

This was the purpose of section 2, but I have just been given assurance by the State Department that the Government will not lend any money to Soviet Russia until the debts she owes us have been settled by the Soviet Government to the satisfaction of the President of the United States. Therefore, accepting this assurance as given to me today by a prominent official of the State Department, I intend to vote for the bill, although I disapprove of section 2 entirely. I repeat I see no reason why one dollar of American money should be lent to any foreign country, whether it is Soviet Russia, or Germany, or France, or any other nation.

Mr. FULLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman made the statement that he would make section 1 broader so that no municipality in France, for instance, could borrow money here.

Mr. FISH. That is right.

Mr. FULLER. They certainly cannot do that under this bill in view of the expression "or political subdivision thereof", which would include any municipality in France.

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman will read further he will find there is a loophole where they can do that, or at least the members of our committee thought so. I have not the time to discuss all the details, particularly as there will be no opportunity to offer amendments.

Mr. FULLER. If the gentleman knows anything to the contrary of my statement, I think he ought to explain it.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. It has been suggested to me that in line 4, on page 2, the language "is in default in the payment of its obligations" does not include Russia, because Russia has never recognized the obligation as being an obligation of the present government. I am for the bill if we are absolutely sure that Russia does not get any money.

Mr. FISH. All I can say to the gentleman is that I have had assurances today from the Department of State that until the Soviet Government adjusts its debts with our Government to the satisfaction of the President we will make no loans to the Soviets. To me it would be an abomination of desolation to throw away good American money in order to build up Communism in Soviet Russia. It would only mean flooding the world markets with Russian wheat, oil, coal, and lumber produced by forced labor paid 15 cents a day and helping to undersell the same products of free American labor paid $3 a day and upward. If we finally do commit the tragic blunder of using the money belonging to the American taxpayers, who are already the forgotten men of this administration, to squander on Soviet Russia, it would only prove the statement of Lenin, the founder of Russian Communism, that the capitalists will commit suicide for temporary profit. The only difference in this case would be that the "brain trust" have no love for capitalism either, but have a great affection for Soviet Russia and all its works.

I cannot give you any further assurance than I have already stated, but I can say this, that section 2 in my opinion was put in by the "brain trust"—it was not in the original Johnson bill. It was put in, as Senator JOHNSON testified before our committee in answer to my question, to enable loans to be made to Soviet Russia. He said that it was not a part of his bill but he had to agree to it in order to secure favorable action. But with the assurance of the State Department that loans will not be made until the Soviets have satisfactorily settled their debts, and having in mind the main purpose of the bill, I cannot conceive of any department or bureau of the Government deliberately violating such an obvious mandate of the Congress. All I can say is that Soviet Russia is indebted to this Government in the sum of $187,000,000, for a loan in 1917 to the Kerensky government and that with interest it now amounts to close to $300,000,000. American nationals owned property that was seized and confiscated by the Soviet Government amounting to approximately $300,000,000 more.

Nothing has been paid on the Kerensky debt. The Soviet Government, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] said, has not recognized the Kerensky debt, but international law does recognize prior governmental obligations all the way down through the ages. International law says that the succeeding government is responsible for the debt of the preceding government. There is no question about that.

Of course, the Soviet Government of Russia, in keeping with the comity of nations, must recognize that principle as part of international law and practice among civilized nations. Furthermore, the Soviet Government has made little effort to restore the property confiscated from American citizens or compensate them for it.

Mr. FIESINGER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. For a short question.

Mr. FIESINGER. There has been set up in the R.F.C. a bank to deal with Russia. Does the gentleman say that bank cannot loan money or do any business until these debts are settled?

Mr. FISH. Certainly; that is why I am supporting the bill—on the assurance of a high official in the State Department. I am not so very much alarmed in the last analysis about this export bank loaning money to Russia. I am against loaning one penny to Russia. I cannot see how we can trade mutually with Russia, even if we wanted to and had the power to loan money. Russia produces what we produce. Russia produces a surplus of wheat, a surplus of oil, and a surplus of lumber. There is almost nothing that we could get from Russia if we wanted to buy it, because outside of manganese and furs and some small items like that, she has nothing that we need to buy. Of course, if we want to give away money, we could let them have it to purchase our goods. They will take a billion dollars' worth of our trade, if we give them the money.

Former Senator Brookhart held out that bait in order to promote recognition, and the cotton States of the South swallowed it. They believed the hoax about $200,000,000 worth of cotton to be purchased if Russia was recognized, and they are only just beginning to realize that they have been deceived. Our exports to Russia amounted to $8,000,000 last year, and our imports only a few million more.

Now, here is what President Roosevelt said about loaning money to foreign nations when he was a candidate for President. Speaking at Columbus, Ohio, on August 20, 1932, he made a very violent and amusing attack upon the Republican administration for loaning money, or rather encouraging people to invest in foreign securities, in order to promote trade. Although we had not actually loaned the money, the American people had bought foreign bonds, some of which were repudiated later on.

President Roosevelt used Alice in Wonderland as the basis for the attack on the Republican administration. He said—Alice is talking—"What if we produce a surplus?" "Oh, we can sell it to foreign consumers." "How can foreign consumers buy it?" "Why, we will lend them the money." "Oh, I see," said Alice, "they will buy our surplus with our own money."

Those are the words of the President of the United States when he was a candidate for office. The Republican administration never loaned any money to any foreign nation, but that is exactly what the Democratic administration proposes to do through the export and import bank set-up under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. That is what some Democrats, following the lead of the "brain trust", propose to do for Soviet Russia. They propose to lend them money to buy our goods with, which is the same magic formula denounced by Franklin D. Roosevelt in his Alice-in-Wonderland speech.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I cannot yield. I am confident that neither the Congress nor the American people will approve or stand for such a betrayal of American interests after our sad experiences with war-debt repudiations and nonpayment of Government bonds by foreign nations.

Now, when the Congress passed the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act the Congress knew what it was doing and wanted to prevent the lending of any money to foreign nations. The Congress inserted a definite prohibition against foreign loans. I do not know what has become of that proviso. It seems to have been lost in the new deal. It was in the original act, approved January 2, 1933, and read as follows:

> That no loans or advances shall be made upon foreign securities or foreign acceptances as collateral or for the purpose of assisting in carrying or liquidation of such foreign securities and foreign acceptances.

That provision absolutely prevented the loaning of any money by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on foreign collateral and foreign acceptances. That has been kicked out of the window, or lost track of, and a bank has been set for the very purpose of lending money to Soviet Russia. There is every indication that Ambassador Bullitt is trying to devise some scheme to make long-term loans to Soviet Russia. What I am afraid of is that, instead of collecting debts, we may be loaning or giving away money to Russia or other foreign nations.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

The President said, in another speech prior to election, at Baltimore on October 25, 1932, in regard to the foreign bonds that had been purchased by many Americans:

> The administration—

Meaning the Republican administration—> encouraged the policy and sought to open markets in foreign lands through the lending of American money to those countries. It was utterly and entirely unsound and it brought a terrible retribution.

Those are the words of the new Democratic President, under whose administration it is proposed to loan more money to foreign nations in order to sell our goods. I believe Congress is opposed to any such diastrous policy. It is opposed to taking one dollar out of the Treasury to give to any foreign nation. The time has come, and long since passed, when we should stop meddling and muddling in other people's business. We should mind our own business—and there are many problems to solve in the United States. Above all, we should keep our own money in the United States for the benefit of those who are unemployed and bankrupt or trying to make an honest living in the United States of America instead of giving it away to a foreign nation. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know that the gentleman who has just spoken [Mr. FISH], and who is the ranking member of the minority party upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs, is supporting this bill. In fact, I do not think there should be any division in the support of this bill, either by Republican or Democratic Members of this House. It should meet with the approval of the entire membership of the House, for, as was well said by the able Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. McREYNOLDS], its purpose is twofold: First, to aid the United States Government in collecting the debts that are due this country from the 18 foreign governments, many of which are now in default. Second, to protect the citizens of the United States by making unlawful the purchase or sale of bonds, securities, or other obligations of any foreign government or political subdivision thereof while the same may be in default in the payment of its obligations to the Government of the United States.

The total indebtedness of foreign governments to the United States on January 4, 1934, was $12,710,451,610.40, this amount being due from 18 different governments; and only one of these governments, Finland, has paid the indebtedness that has accrued up to this time. The following countries have made some payments since July 1, 1932, to January 4, 1934, but have not paid in full the indebtedness that has matured during that time, to wit: Czechoslovakia, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, and Rumania. The aggregate amount which these eight countries should have paid under their contract between July 1, 1932, and January 1, 1934, is $195,596,167.16, but the aggregate amount paid during that period is only $10,957,748.14.

The following countries have made no payments on amounts due since July 1, 1932, and are therefore wholly in default, to wit: Austria, Belgium, Estonia, France, Germany, Hungary, Poland, and Yugoslavia. The aggregate amount which under their contracts, solemnly entered into and which should have been paid since July 1, 1932, but not one cent of which has been paid, is $108,559,582.43.

The 15 countries which I have named, several years ago entered into debt settlements whereby their indebtedness to this country was funded and payments thereunder were to be made by each in installments on stipulated dates, and the default to pay is a breach of those contracts. In addition to these, three countries, Armenia, Nicaragua, and Russia, have never funded their indebtedness, and the total unfunded and unpaid indebtedness of these three countries amounts in the aggregate to the sum of $357,953,254.93.

Mr. BRITTEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield.

Mr. BRITTEN. Does the gentleman agree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] that those governments which have made a small token payment will not be held in default by our Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I am not so sure about that.

Mr. BURNHAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield briefly.

Mr. BURNHAM. The bill provides as follows:

> Is in default of the payment of its obligations or any part thereof.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes; the language is broad and comprehensive, but the question of what constitutes a default is one that will have to be determined by the terms of the original contracts supplemented by any subsequent agreements that may have been lawfully made.

Mr. BACON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. BACON. I notice the bill provides, in lines 8 and 9, "or political subdivisions thereof." Would the gentleman consider Canada, for instance, a subdivision of Great Britain?

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. No; I doubt whether Canada would be considered a subdivision of Great Britain. It is rather a dependency of Great Britain.

Mr. FISH. Oh, Canada has a Minister here. It has its own representative.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Yes. Canada is a separate government. The provision referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] is to cover municipalities, States, or Provinces within a country.

Now I want to refer for a moment to what I think is very important and significant in this bill, that the administration is taking a positive step to let the foreign governments know the attitude of the United States and how our Congress feels toward those countries that have defaulted. No one would want us to go to war with those countries to collect these debts, and as was said by the gentleman from New York, it would not be proper to sever diplomatic relations with them, but I think it is right that Congress should in no uncertain tone say to them, "Until you settle your indebtedness you cannot sell your securities here." I hope this is the entering wedge and that other legislation will follow to protect the American people from investments in foreign securities. The investigation made by the Senate Committee on Finance has disclosed what I think was the blackest page in the economic history of our country, in the exploitation of the American people in the sale of bonds and securities of foreign governments.

The loss by our Government in loans to foreign governments, large though it be, is small when compared with the billions of dollars our citizens have lost in the purchase of bonds and securities of foreign governments. My blood boils with righteous indignation when I recall the artful and unscrupulous methods used by some of the large banks of New York in unloading these worthless securities upon an unsuspecting and trusting public. To collect debts already due them and to make huge profits in commissions, these bankers in New York, using the prestige and the faith the smaller bankers and the public generally had in them, by letter, telephone, telegram, and personal representatives scoured the United States in the nefarious business of selling these securities, many of which they knew, or should have known, were worthless. Many people in my district and in every congressional district in the United States, people of moderate means, were victims of this racket, and some of them as a result lost the savings of a lifetime. One of the contributing causes of the awful depression from which we have suffered for more than 4 years was this loss of billions of dollars by our people.

The Government of the United States under the domination of the Republican Party, which reigned with a free hand for 12 years, is in part to blame. Not only was no effort made to check these exploitations but they were connived at, if not in fact encouraged.

Some 6 years ago, while we had a Republican administration, one of the bankers in my district wrote me making inquiry as to the solvency of one of the South American countries the bonds of which country one of the large banks in New York was urging him to buy, and at his request I took the matter up with our State Department, and while, of course, the State Department did not directly recommend the investment, their report was so optimistic that, based thereon, this banker friend of mine, acting for his bank, bought a block of these bonds, and today he and his stockholders are holding the bag, and likely they will never realize one penny therefrom.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] referred to a campaign speech made by President Roosevelt, made while he was a candidate for President, upon this subject, but no Republican President ever raised his hand to stop this reprehensible practice of fleecing the American public. The stock securities bill passed at the last session of Congress upon recommendation of President Roosevelt, and the amended bill which we will shortly consider at his request to protect the American investor, proves that President Roosevelt translates his campaign promises into performances.

The bill we are now considering will also prove a deterrent in the sale of foreign securities. My only objection to it is that it does not go far enough, but the Senate has already passed it, and it is important that some such legislation be immediately passed, and to amend it would delay its final passage. If the sale of foreign securities should not be entirely prohibited, a law certainly should be passed prohibiting the sale of such securities when a country is in default not only to our Government but also when in default to our citizens.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BAKEWELL].

Mr. BAKEWELL. Mr. Speaker, the Seventy-third Congress in special session passed the Securities Act, which had for its object the protection of the citizens of America from investing their money in questionable domestic securities. So tender was their solicitude that Congress leaned over backward and so drew that bill as, in effect, to impede the free flow of capital, to the great detriment of industry and business, and definitely to postpone recovery.

But if we have gone as far as that to protect the citizens from investing in worthless American securities, we should surely do something to protect them from investing in worthless foreign securities; and that is what this bill undertakes to do. It came from the committee without any opposition, although it was not supported with any too great enthusiasm. It is, I think, unfortunate that this bill comes up in such a manner that no amendment can be made.

There are one or two things to which I wish to call attention so that you may know what you are doing when you vote on the measure. It will be noticed on page 1, line 5, that it is made unlawful for any person to buy any securities of any nation in default. If it is decided that a nation, such as Great Britain, that has made a token payment, is in default, this would mean that if any American bought a $1,000 English bond he would be liable to a penalty of $10,000. No doubt some change in the wording should be made, because, of course, the object is to protect the people from unscrupulous flotation of questionable foreign securities.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAKEWELL. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wanted to pursue that situation a little further. The gentleman probably means that an American who purchased a British Government bond might be prosecuted and punished if it is held that Great Britain is in default.

Mr. BAKEWELL. Yes.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Would that American be equally guilty if he purchased a bond issued by the city of Manchester, England?

Mr. BAKEWELL. No; because Manchester is not in default; and this brings me to a point I want to cover, which is that this bill is nothing but a gesture, because, although it proposes to forbid the sale of these foreign securities, it actually does nothing of the kind. Reading a little further in the bill, it will be noticed that no foreign government can sell its securities here if it is in default, nor can any subdivision of a foreign country sell its securities if that subdivision is in default; but the subdivisions can sell their securities, even though the government itself is in default. This would mean that, although France could not borrow as a nation, she could borrow indirectly by having her various cities—Lyon, Marseille, Bordeaux, and the other municipalities—do the borrowing because they, individually, are not in default. Our objection to this bill, therefore, is that it remains a mere gesture, so long as that provision remains in the bill.

Section 2 states that we are not to define "person" so as to include a public corporation created by or pursuant to special authorization of Congress, or a corporation in which the Government of the United States has or exercises a controlling interest through stock ownership or otherwise.

This means that any one of these five corporations of mystery, which have been set up by the Federal Government, incorporated in Delaware where the laws are supposed to be less exacting than in other States, might undertake this enterprise. So could any bank in which the Government has through purchase of stock the controlling interest. Therefore, this leaves the law ineffective and makes it a mere gesture. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KLOEB].

Mr. KLOEB. Mr. Speaker, I desire to discuss the provisions of the so-called "Johnson-McReynolds bill", which provides, in part, as follows:

That hereafter it shall be unlawful within the United States or any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States for any person to purchase or sell the bonds, securities, or other obligations of any foreign government or political subdivision thereof or any organization or association acting for or on behalf of a foreign government or political subdivision thereof, issued after the passage of this act, or to make any loan to such foreign government, political subdivision, organization, or association, except a renewal or adjustment of existing indebtedness, while such government, political subdivision, organization, or association is in default in the payment of its obligations, or any part thereof, to the Government of the United States. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

I desire also to discuss the question of the debts due from foreign nations to this Nation, because this question is closely related to the provisions of the foregoing bill.

On Sunday, April 1, there appeared in the Lima News, of Lima, Ohio, in my district, the following apt editorial:

PAY US FIRST

It is hard to see how anyone can quarrel with the new administration policy by which American loans will not be advanced to foreign debtor nations which are wholly or partially in default on previous loans.

A law embodying this policy is in process of being passed by Congress. Without waiting for its passage, Treasury Secretary Morgenthau has made it effective in advance by proclamation.

It may be that all the arguments of the war-debt cancelationists are sound. Perhaps our insistence that the debts be paid is delaying world recovery; perhaps we have no moral right to ask that they be repaid. Maybe so.

But at least the country is quite within its rights in insisting that no good money is going to go after the bad.

We loaned money and we didn't get it back; we can hardly be blamed for concluding that the defaulting borrowers are bad risks.

First, I would have it understood that in my veins flows the blood of the Frenchman and the blood of the German. On the maternal side of my house my ancestors in 1793 emigrated from France; on the paternal side of my house my ancestors in 1840 emigrated from Germany. There can, therefore, be no particular reason other than that of patriotism and justice for my own country which prompts me to say the things I believe are necessary to be said at this time.

We all recall the opening days of the great World War back in 1914. We recall the violation of Belgium by the German armies that pressed across its border. We recall the cry of anguish that swept to this country from the shores of France at the very thought of one country violating its sacred promise and its solemn treaty and transgressing upon the borders of its neighbor country. That propaganda swept to this country from France in never-ending volumes until, finally, we were drawn into the conflict in April of 1917.

We recall at that time the plaintive cry of the British Field Marshal in France, "We are fighting with our backs to the wall!"

We recall the cries for help from France, "We are scraping the bottom of the pan!"

In a fervent desire to be of hasty assistance to our allies with men and money, and particularly with the latter, every man capable of making a speech, who was not wearing the uniform of his country, was called upon to address the people in every city, town, village, and hamlet, urging them to purchase the bonds of this country so that the proceeds might be promptly furnished to our allies in Europe. These men were instructed, and necessarily so, to state to their people that this money would be repaid in full, with interest and, in addition, that they would be paid the cost of the overhead by the suffering countries of Europe. Millions and billions of dollars were drawn from every corner of this country and hurried to the shores of Europe. In return therefor we accepted the promisory notes of our Allies in which they promised, on demand, to repay these sums so advanced with interest at 5 percent.

I am not now discussing in the short space of time allotted to me the tremendous outpouring of man power from this country. I am confining my discussion to financial affairs.

During the period of actual hostilities we advanced to Belgium, on her solemn promise to pay, the sum of $224,745,000; we advanced to France, on her solemn promise to pay, the sum of $2,577,451,086.95; we advanced to Great Britain, on her solemn promise to pay, the sum of $4,115,809,530.18; we advanced to Italy, on her solemn promise to pay, the sum of $1,348,768,025.36; we advanced to Yugoslavia, on her solemn promise to pay, $13,874,875; a total of $8,280,649,017.49.

While we were making these advances, there was no thought nor question of revision, reduction, or cancelation of all or any part of these sums so advanced. These nations were fighting with their backs to the wall, and they needed and received the cash.

It is said, of course, that part of this money was used for the purpose of purchasing war supplies in this country, and that therefore the debts ought now to be forgotten. Let me remind you, however, that millions and billions of dollars' worth of war supplies and munitions were purchased by this country in England and France, so as to properly equip our men in the field, and we were required to pay for these supplies in hard cash. No credit was available there.

In addition, let me say that not only were we required to pay for the very barracks and quarters in which our troops were stationed, but even for damages for the construction of the very trenches which our boys built wherein to die. Even more, when we attempted to land our supplies upon the shores of France, we were told that the tariff barriers would require the payment of a tariff, but, in order to obviate the necessity of this, it was agreed that they might be shipped into the country if they were not sold thereafter within the boundaries of the country. As a consequence of this, at the close of the war, we had but one purchaser for the mountains of surplus supplies that belonged to us in France, and that was the French Government itself. We thereupon sold to her an estimated $2,000,000,000 worth of these supplies for the sum of $407,000,000. France in turn resold a part of this material and supplies to other nations of Europe, and up to this time, as a result of the sale of this material, she has received in money over $70,000,000 more than she has paid to us thus far in all her settlements for all her debts owing this country.

After the signing of the armistice, there came the cry from 15 countries of Europe—our late allies—that additional funds were absolutely needed for restoration and rehabilitation. We thereupon advanced to them, on their solemn promise to pay, the sum of $3,810,017,982.51. This brought the total indebtedness of these countries to us to the staggering sum of $12,090,667,000.

Immediately thereafter there came from these governments hints of their inability to pay and their desire for a new arrangement with regard to these debts. In 1920 President Wilson, because of these suggestions, thought it necessary that he should make plain the position of this Government with regard thereto, and in a letter to Lloyd George, of England, he said in part as follows:

No power has been given by the Congress to anyone to exchange, remit, or cancel any part of the indebtedness of the allied governments to the United States represented by their respective demand obligations. * * * It is highly improbable that either the Congress or popular opinion in this country will ever permit a cancelation of any part of the debt of the British Government to the United States in order to induce the British Government to remit, in whole or in part, the debt to Great Britain of France or any other of the allied governments, or that it would consent to a cancelation or reduction in the debts of any of the allied governments as an inducement toward a practical settlement of the reparation claims

It was, of course, recognized at that time that it would be impossible for these governments to pay their demand notes with interest, and so a debt refunding commission was created in 1922 by act of Congress for the purpose of undertaking the refunding of these obligations.

Under the arrangements made by this Commission with the debtor countries, the entire principal of these debts, amounting to the sum of $12,090,667,000, was virtually wiped out clean because of the fact that for 62 years we will pay approximately 4 percent on our bonds and these countries will pay a much less rate percent. These countries were required to pay interest on this sum for a period of 62 years with interest ranging from 3.7 percent down to 1.13 percent. It amounts to a virtual cancelation of the principal sum, so far as the American taxpayer is concerned.

In other words, the burden of the principal debt was shifted to the backs of the American taxpayers, who are required to pay, during this period of 62 years, not alone the principal but interest that will likely average 4 percent. In return we receive interest from these countries at rates ranging from 1 13/100 percent to 3 70/100. We lose in the transaction each year during the 62 years.

Even in the face of this generosity, some of the countries lagged and failed to sign this agreement. It was then that the genesis of the bill now before us was laid, in a statement contained in the reports of the War Debt Commission, which reads as follows:

Early in 1925, after much consideration, it was decided that it was contrary to the best interests of the United States to permit foreign governments which refused to adjust or make a reasonable effort to adjust their debts to the United States to finance any portion of their requirements in this country. States, municipalities, and private enterprises within the country concerned were included in the prohibition. Bankers consulting the State Department were notified that the Government objected to such financing. While the United States was loath to exert pressure by this means on any foreign government to settle its indebtedness, and while this country has every desire to see its surplus resources at work in the economic reconstruction and development of countries abroad, national interest demands that our resources be not permitted to flow into countries which do not honor their obligations to the United States and through the United States to its citizens.

When this position was announced to the countries of Europe and they were threatened with the refusal of further credit, the last country—Austria—signed the debt-refunding agreement on January 1, 1928.

On June 20, 1931, President Hoover, through what form of persuasion we do not know, suddenly proposed a moratorium on the debt-installment payments from these countries.

On December 15, 1931, the able gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN], on the floor of this House, made the following very prophetic statement in a speech then delivered:

On June 20, 1931, while Congress was not in session, the President of the United States, acting without any legal or official authority, for the benefit of a foreign country with which we had lately been at war, proposed and virtually brought about a loss to this country of $245,000,000 in 1 single year and paved the way for much greater losses for this country to sustain in all the years that follow after.

Since that time we have beheld the spectacle of all these debtor countries, save one, either actually defaulting in the payments of the installments as they came due or making a so-called "token payment" in order to avoid the ugly word "default."

On January 22, 1934, William Hillman, London representative and chief of staff of the European correspondents of the Hearst newspapers, published an article in the columns of the New York American and other Hearst papers, in which he made the following statement:

France has repeatedly made clear that she will consider no settlement of the war debt on a basis in excess of 10 cents on the dollar, and in all likelihood will refuse to pay anything at all.

France defaults! She repudiates her solemn treaty! She denies her solemn promise to pay!

Wherein lies the difference between the breach by the German Government of its solemn treaty, of its solemn promise, by the violation of Belgium, and the breach of the French Government of its solemn agreement with this country?

I have received on my desk today a detailed plan by one J. Numa Jordy, who writes from the Chrysler Building in New York City, in which he outlines a plan for the solution of our war-debt problem.

Wherein lies a duty on the part of this Government to solicit, to entreat, to beg of the debtor countries of Europe that they now meet their agreements, made at great sacrifice to the taxpayers of this country by the War Funding Commission back in 1925? Why should we of this country so lower our dignity as to become virtually beggars at the doorsteps of the defaulters of England and Europe? It appears to me to be more in conformity with the dignity and the tradition of this country to consider these debts as having been agreed upon definitely in 1925, and if these debtor countries so far forget their own dignity and their own solemn promises, then allow the chips to fall where they may.

This bill now before us may bring them to a sudden recognition of the fact that the backs of the taxpayers of America can no longer be lashed by debt defaulters who breach their solemn obligations.

The refunding accomplished back in 1925 was brought about mainly through the cry of the debtor nations that an agreement should be reached on the basis of capacity to pay. That was the theory lying behind those settlements.

It appears to me now that capacity to pay can justly be measured in the number of unemployed in the countries of the world. There are now and have been for, lo, these 2 years past, more unemployed men in the United States than there are and have been in the countries of England, France, Italy, and Germany combined.

If capacity to pay was the yardstick in 1925, then capacity to pay may well be the yardstick of today. England today through her statements openly boasts of further progress out of this depression than any other country in the world. In the fiscal year just closed her income exceeded her expenses. This, of course, in her eyes does not permit of the full payment of her installments of the debt to this country, but does permit of further and additional expenditures for armament and ships.

In France today approximately 30 percent of her budget is expended on armaments. It would require but 2 percent of her annual budget to meet her semiannual installments of debt to this country. Yet she pleads her inability to pay.

It is my opinion that this House should, as did the Senate, overwhelmingly and unanimously pass this measure today for the purpose of once and for all saying to the debtor nations of Europe that their solemn obligations must be met, and that no further hint or suggestion or implication of revision or cancelation ought to be or will be entertained by the people of this country and its duly elected representatives. [Applause.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I am going to vote for this bill because I have, to my own satisfaction at least, concluded that any nation of Europe in default of any portion of its indebtedness, interest or principal, to us is included in the intention of the bill.

I realize that in the following statement I am disagreeing with the chairman of the committee and probably with the ranking Member on this side, but on page 2, in speaking about the indebtedness it says, "While such government is in default in payment of its obligation or any part thereof." I fail to see why England, with a surplus this year of $160,000,000 in her treasury, or France, with countless millions of gold in her treasury, more gold in her treasury per capita than we have, and governments of that type should be excluded from the provisions of this bill, and France is not, I realize, just because they made some insignificant token payments on account of their vast obligation to us.

If the State Department were to exclude those nations from the provisions of this bill then Czechoslovakia, Great Britain, Greece, Italy, Latvia, Lithuania, and Rumania would be excluded because they have all made some small payment.

Mr. KLOEB. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KLOEB. The refunding obligations as arranged by the Debt Commission were in the nature of treaties and assumed that dignity.

Mr. BRITTEN. Of course.

Mr. KLOEB. This being true, that is the law so far as this country is concerned, and no action of an executive, in my opinion, at this time, could invalidate those treaty agreements.

Mr. BRITTEN. That is the point I am trying to clarify.

Mr. KLOEB. Therefore any nation in default for even a part would be included.

Mr. BRITTEN. May I proceed now? That is the very point I am trying to make.

My contention is that the State Department should not act that way, nor has it the authority to presume that because an infinitesimal payment has been made on an indebtedness of billions it takes that nation out of one class and puts it into a preferred class. I do not think Congress so intends, and there is nothing in this bill to justify such action by the State Department. If this were true, the city of Prague could float bonds; or the city of Bucharest or Sophia or any city in Italy, for instance. The very intention of this bill is to prevent such action. So much for that part of the bill.

I do not like section 2 of the bill because I think the Government is leaning backward to do something for Russia which they refuse to do for other countries scattered throughout the world. Why should Russia be singled out as a special or preferred customer? Has it so much gold with which to buy? Why certainly she has not. She has no more ability to buy from us than poor old China has and it will soon be apparent that Russian purchases of us will depend entirely upon the amount of money she can borrow from us. Small loans will mean small purchases. Russia is an impoverished, oppressed nation, without gold or buying power. Her credit is not good and her promises to pay are of uncertain value. If it were not for the influence of a group of socialistic men surrounding the President, this section 2 would never be in the bill before us. Each succeeding piece of controversial legislation indicates a further trend into the realms of socialism. With the passage of this bill, Russia becomes our most-favored nation. A truly startling state of affairs. Billions of taxpayers' money will now find its way into Bolshevik enterprises to the disadvantage of American industry.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, the principal value of this bill, in my judgment, is the fact that it will prevent in the future such a financial catastrophe as was permitted in the past through the leniency of previous administrations. The lending of some $17,000,000,000, if not actually approved, was tacitly encouraged by the State Department under previous administrations. This money was turned over to individual subdivisions of foreign governments, regardless of whether the nations themselves were paying their debts.

There are two classes of debts owing to this country from Europe. First, the debts owed by the nations themselves to our Government, amounting to approximately $11,000,000,000, and, second, the other debts owed by States and municipalities, corporations, and groups, amounting to about $17,000,000,000. This means that there is an outstanding debt in Europe and the rest of the world to the Government of the United States and to private citizens of about $27,000,000,000.

What happened when these loans were being made? They were made for the purpose of expanding our foreign trade and President Roosevelt's use of the Alice in Wonderland figure is a perfectly apt and proper one. We sold to Europe, we sold to South America, we sold to other nations $17,000,000,000 worth of goods. What did we get in return? We got the obligations to pay—the securities. Who bought the obligations? The average citizen. Who got the money for the goods that were sent abroad? The banker and the manufacturer. But our own people paid the bill. Europe got the goods, the manufacturers and the bankers got the money, and the investors of the United States, those innocent lambs who were sheared by the Wall Street crowd, got the paper, and much of it is worth about 10 cents on the dollar and some of its not worth anything.

I am going to vote for this bill because it is a good bill in the interest of the American people. When Senator JOHNSON draws a bill he puts teeth in it. He gave careful consideration to every word in it. If he were afraid of section 2, he never would have permitted it to have gone into his bill.

This measure is designed to protect the investors of the United States. So far as the loans that will be made to Russia are concerned, if these loans are extended, after Russia has made a satisfactory settlement with this Government, they will be made on the basis of very short-term periods and will have to be well secured, for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is going to advance the money for such loans; and it will advance no money except on sound security. As for loans to nations in default, there will be none. The Johnson bill will put an end to private and public loans to such nations. Hereafter Uncle Sam will cease to hand out money to defaulters, either as a nation or through permitting the sale of securities to our investors; and I think it is high time our investors got this protection. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to this bill because it is a fraud upon the American taxpayer. It permits loans to be made through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the new international bank and any institution which the Government has already set up or may set up proposing to deal with Russia principally, or any other country.

This bill permits individuals and private corporations to do business back and forth between Russia and the United States without any impediment whatsoever. This is an important thing to consider in the passing of such legislation. The passage of this bill will cause no end of harm to the United States and is not the way to deal with the countries that owe us money.

I am somewhat familiar with the loan which this country made to Russia. I was a Member of Congress when that credit of $425,000,000 was set up by the Wilson administration, by Mr. McADOO, and put at the disposal of the Russian Government. I was a member of the Committee on Expenditures of this House in the State Department that examined into the use to which $187,000,000 of this amount was put. This debt has never been recognized by Russia, and it has never been settled in any manner whatsoever.

I have not the confidence that the ranking member of the committee has in assurances from the State Department, and I would call the attention of the Membership here to the fact that this is a law that the Congress is passing, and any action of the administration through the State Department does not affect this law in any way whatsoever. It is simply a statement by the State Department. I recall that during our investigation of what was done with this $187,000,000 the State Department passed the buck back to the Treasury Department, and the Treasury Department passed it back to the State Department, and, finally, the great State Department referred Congress or its committee to a nondescript Russian Ambassador, Boris Bakmetieff, for information as to what was done with the $187,000,000 lent to Russia.

I am frank to say to you that the examination which I and other members of that committee made indicated that very little of the $187,000,000 went to Russia. It went to pay the contracts which Russia's fiscal agent in the United States had made with business concerns in this country for munitions, and the bulk of the money was used for the purpose of paying these munition contracts which the fiscal agent had placed here. Then the goods did not go to Russia and were resold and manipulated by Mr. Bakmetieff and Mr. Serge Uget, the liquidating agent; and what became of that money? When we started to investigate it there was over $60,000,000 on deposit with the National City Bank of New York, and when we had completed our examination, in about 2 weeks' time, the funds had been drawn down to $1,000,000, and, mind you, the State Department and the Treasury Department referred Congress to Mr. Boris Bakmetieff for information as to where these funds went.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is another juggle with Russia, and I pray you Democrats to vote against this bill if you have at heart the interests of the American taxpayer, because, in the face of legislation which you have passed, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has already lent money to Russia. They propose to lend more money to Russia through these various agencies. There is no question about it, and trade will proceed with the individuals and corporations back and forth through our financial system, and credits through the Federal Reserve System will be made and handled in the same manner. This bill should be defeated.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman who has just preceded me, denouncing this bill as a fraud upon the American people, is running true to form. Had he not risen or opposed this bill I would have been disappointed. The fact is I feel that if the Lord's Prayer were being considered he would be opposed to it or want to amend it. [Laughter.]

I cannot understand such statements, when the purpose of this bill is to protect the American people and to show these foreign countries that we can do something when they default and refuse to pay their honest indebtedness to this Government.

Only a few days ago a Dutch organization undertook to float some securities of the French Government in New York City and when the matter was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury it was turned down. So we can stop additional securities being sold.

This is to protect the American people from buying this class of securities because they will not pay their debts to the United States, and they have no right to credit in this country. [Applause.]

When these nations refuse to pay their honest debts, when France refuses to pay, although we sold to her $4,000,000,000 worth of goods right after the war, munitions, and so forth, and we are informed that France sold most of those goods, when she has only paid us the pitiful sum of $82,000,000, this House proposes to stand behind this bill.

I am frank to say that I would go farther if I thought we could get the legislation through at this time.

Mr. KENNEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I have only a few moments left.

Mr. KENNEY. Does the gentleman know that there is a way to get some of the money back from France?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I hope so, but that is a matter for the State Department to look after.

I want to say this: I have a statement of indebtedness of the foreign countries as to the payments that have been made.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and print that list as a part of my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

[1] Payments due on account of war loans postponed in accordance with terms of funding agreement. Interest due on such postponed amounts has not been paid. United States has received same proportionate payment on account of amount due on stabilization and refugee loan of 1928 as other creditors, namely, a payment of $65,376, representing 30 percent of the annual interest for 1932. Payments of other amounts due on account of this loan have not been received, but assurances of treatment equal to that arranged for private holders of such bonds have been received.

[2] Rumanian Government paid on June 15, 1933, the amount of $29,061.46 as advanced interest on the amount of $1,000,000 due on that date. No payment has been received on account of the amount of $48,750.08 due on Jan. 2, 1934, under the moratorium agreement with that Government, but discussions regarding this payment have not been closed.

[3] Amount due (4,027,611.95 reichsmarks) paid on Sept. 30, 1933, to the conversion office for German foreign debts in Berlin in a "blocked account" for the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, to the credit of the general account of the Treasurer of the United States. Refunding agreement provides for payment in dollars at Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

[4] Hungarian treasury certificates in the pengo equivalent of the dollar amount due have been deposited to the foreign creditors' account at the Hungarian National Bnak. Refunding agreement provides for payment in dollars at the Treasury of the United States in Washington or at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

[5] No payments received since June 15, 1931.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I want to say, further, to the gentleman who referred to loaning money to Russia, that the President's remarks as quoted are true to this day. We are not undertaking to loan money to foreign governments, but this organization is merely for the purpose of trade, but there will be no trade unless they satisfy this Government as to their indebtedness.

There is but one corporation that could act under this, and that is the Export Corporation. The bank cannot, as my distinguished friend from Connecticut started to say, as they do not control the banks.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. RICH. If a nation is in default, is it a fact, as has been stated, that a subdivision of that country can borrow funds?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. The subdivision cannot borrow if it is in default. Paris could borrow from the United States, under the bill, if Paris was not in default. They might sell bonds or stocks.

Mr. BRITTEN. The bill says, "Any foreign government or political subdivision thereof."

Mr. McREYNOLDS. If it is in default, but there is no subdivision that is in default to the United States.

Mr. BRITTEN. The language in the bill refers to the government in default, not the subdivision.

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Oh, no; to the political subdivision.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. All time has expired. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SUFFERERS BY FIRE IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 770) for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss by fire in the State of Minnesota during October 1918.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the Chair permit a parliamentary inquiry at this time?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. This is a bill on the Private Calendar. It has been on the Private Calendar for several Congresses. It involves at least $10,000,000. It might cost the Government $15,000,000 or $20,000,000. With the exception of the one time when the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] was recognized to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill involving irrigation projects, which was more or less of a general public nature, this is the only private bill that I have been able to find in the history of the Congress that has been called up under suspension of the rules from the Private Calendar. I was wondering if the Speaker, in order to prevent a very bad precedent being established, which might hound the Speaker to death hereafter, would put into the RECORD the facts which will show what is in his mind to differentiate this bill from other bills on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that what he has in mind is that 9,000 people are affected by this bill. The Chair does not think it is really a private bill, but rather a public bill in view of the fact that such a wide interest is involved.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it does not come within the category of a private bill?

The SPEAKER. Not ordinarily. It may be on the Private Calendar, but it affects 9,000 different people, and the Chair thinks that is a matter in which the entire State is interested.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK. It is in order for the chairman of the committee having control of bills on the Private Calendar to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill, is it not?

The SPEAKER. If the Chair recognizes him; yes.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Chair recognizes him, but it is a matter of recognition, and I feel very sure the Speaker will be careful to protect the power of recognition, and not ever set the bad precedent of recognizing any Member to move to suspend the rules and pass a private bill. Such a precedent would be unthinkable.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to each claimant or its or his heirs, administrators, executors, or successors, the amount of whose loss on account of fire originating from the operation of railroads by the United States in the State of Minnesota on or about October 12, 1918, has been determined by court proceedings or by the Director General of Railroads, the difference between the amount of such loss so determined and the amount actually paid by the United States to such claimant less any amount paid to such claimant by any fire-insurance company on account of such fire: Provided, That notwithstanding the terms and conditions of any policy of insurance, or the provisions of any law, no fire-insurance company, except farmers' mutual fire-insurance companies shall have any rights in and to funds herein appropriated, the payments herein provided for, nor to any right of subrogation whatsoever. That said farmers' mutual fire-insurance companies shall be paid in the same manner and to the same extent as other claimants: Provided further, That no person who makes claim under this act by virtue of having acquired and succeeded to the rights of the original claimant through purchase and assignment from said claimant of said claim, shall receive more than the amount actually paid for such claim and assignment: And provided further, That in making payments to claimants, the Secretary of the Treasury shall promulgate rules and regulations as to proof required, as to the identity of claimants, validity of assignments, and all other matters in connection with said payments, and his determination as to the person entitled to receive payment shall be final.

SEC. 2. No payment under the provisions of this act shall be made unless an application therefor is filed with the Secretary of the Treasury by or on behalf of the person entitled to payment within 2 years after the date of the enactment of this act. All applications shall be referred to the Comptroller General of the United States for investigation and adjustment, and payment shall be made by the Secretary of the Treasury in accordance therewith.

SEC. 3. The words "person" and "claimant", as used in the act, shall include an individual, two or more persons having a joint or common interest, company, partnership, and municipal and private corporations.

SEC. 4. Any person or group of persons individually or collectively who charge or collect, or attempt to charge or collect, either directly or indirectly any fee or other compensation for assisting in any manner any person in obtaining the benefits of this act in excess of 10 percent of the amount of the claim actually paid under this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HOIDALE].

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Speaker, as has already been indicated by the Speaker, this is a most unusual bill. In the month of October in 1918 northern Minnesota was visited by the most colossal catastrophe that has ever come to my State or to any other State in the Northwest. We were at war. The Government was operating the railroads of this country, and on that date the railroads, so operated by the Director of Railroads, set fire to a forest region in northern Minnesota. By nightfall on October 12, when the sun went down, 500 people had suffered death and 2,000 people had become maimed and injured and wounded by reason of that calamity. Children on their way home from school, laughing and playing by the roadside, were caught in the flames, and their charred bodies were scattered throughout the region. It was a terrible calamity. The question is, Who was to blame?

If anybody was to blame, there is responsibility to those suffering people that should be made good. The question as to who was to blame has been definitely and positively settled. There were seven test lawsuits scattered throughout the territory decided in favor of the claimants. Four of those lawsuits went to the Supreme Court, and in these four books which I have here will be found the decisions in four different cases in which the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota held that the Government of the United States was liable and to blame for that fire and responsible for the death of those 500 people and for the destruction of millions and millions of dollars' worth of property. That liability and responsibility rests upon the Government of the United States today. Think of it! Eight thousand homes burned and destroyed throughout a region 30 miles long and 30 miles wide. The question of liability has been settled, and the question of the amount of the loss has been settled. Here is a book that I obtained today from the Railroad Administration, giving every case that is included in this bill, the amount claimed, and the amount settled for and the amount paid upon the basis of 50 cents on the dollar.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOIDALE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. What is the total value of those claims?

Mr. HOIDALE. About $1,000 each, and amounting to about $8,000,000 altogether.

Mr. FLETCHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOIDALE. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Had there been similar fires occur while the railroads were in private ownership; and if so, did they collect from the private corporations?

Mr. KELLER. Oh, there were many.

Mr. HOIDALE. Now, why have these settlements not been made? Why has the Government of the United States not paid the full amount due these unfortunate settlers? This is the reason: They began the contest in the courts, of course, to determine the question as to whether the Government was liable.

Those test cases were had and the liability was established. When those cases were pending, Mr. Davis, Director of Railroads, said:

> If you beat me in these cases, I will pay. I do not want to pay unless the Government is legally liable; and if they are liable, we will pay 100 cents on the dollar; and if not, we will not pay a cent.

That was the attitude.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOIDALE. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in thorough sympathy with the purpose of this bill and expect to support it. Is there an official report of the statement to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. HOIDALE. The gentleman will find it in the report. Now, the trial courts and the Supreme Court upheld these cases. The bill was recommended by the Claims Committee of the House on three different occasions and has now passed the Senate. The Senate Claims Committee reported it out unanimously. The Senate passed the bill unanimously last week.

When the attention of the President was called to this matter by the Governor of the State of Minnesota he took an interest in the terrible situation that had been created and wrote a letter to the Attorney General asking him to look into the merits of this bill. After looking into the matter at the request of the President of the United States, the Attorney General wrote a letter to the President, under date of December 27 last, which letter will be found upon the last page of the report.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOIDALE. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Neither the President nor the Attorney General say that the claims ought to be paid; they merely say that they are entitled to consideration; and that is what we are giving them now.

Mr. HOIDALE. All right; but we are going to give them fair consideration; it is no humbug. [Applause.] The bill comes here with the good will of the Attorney General, after a full and fair investigation, and with the good will of the President, after he had looked into the situation carefully.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mrs. MCCARTHY). The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask recognition against the bill. This is not a legal claim against the United States. It is not an equitable claim against our Government. It has no moral standing. It is wholly without merit. It ought to be defeated. We must not let it pass.

This was a big fire back in 1918. Many good people there did suffer by it. Deep, sincere sympathy did go out to them from the warm-hearted people everywhere. They did file claims. They did file numerous suits. But said claims and suits were all compromised and settled, and our Government has paid to these claimants back in 1922 the stupendous sum of $13,000,000 in cash, which $13,000,000 these claimants received and put in their pockets, and accepted same in full settlement of all of their claims. And these claimants executed in writing legal binding releases, acknowledging that the $13,000,000 paid them by the Government was in full settlement of all claims they had against the United States.

There was no fraud whatever connected with said compromise and settlement. It is not claimed that there was any fraud. So such compromise and settlement cannot be set aside because of any fraud, because there was no fraud.

There were no misrepresentations on the part of the Government respecting said compromise and settlement. It is not even claimed that there were any misrepresentations. The proposal of settlement was reduced to writing, was submitted to the numerous, able, efficient, experienced, and expert attorneys of the claimants, who took plenty of time to discuss and consider such proposal with their clients, and they accepted such proposal, received their $13,000,000 in cash from the Government, and executed releases to the Government acknowledging that they received and accepted said $13,000,000 in full settlement of all claims against the United States.

So all of this that we have heard rumored around on this floor about duress and about these claimants and their lawyers accepting this $13,000,000, and signing full releases to the Government being done under duress is poppycock and rot, pure and simple. Just what did the Government do that constituted duress? Did it threaten anybody? No! Did it force anybody to accept the money? No! Did it compel any claimant to sign? Certainly it did not. Did it exercise any occult power over all of these able, experienced, expert lawyers of the claimants? Not one of them would admit that. Such a thought is ridiculous and absurd.

Hon. James C. Davis, Director General of Railroads, representing the United States, while he at all times contended that the Government was in no way responsible, and that the fire suffers were citizens of Minnesota, acted with fairness, justice, and generosity, in trying to effect a settlement that would be just to everybody. He cooperated in every possible way with the Governor of Minnesota. Every Member of this House ought to carefully read the letter which Director General Davis wrote to the Governor of Minnesota in January 1922, which culminated in the settlement, to wit:

> UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
> Washington, January 26, 1922.
> Hon. J. A. O. PREUS,
> Governor of Minnesota, St. Paul, Minn.
> MY DEAR GOVERNOR: There has been some dissatisfaction growing out of the adjustment of the fire claims against the Railroad Administration because of the conflagration in October 1918. This dissatisfaction has had for its source two general causes:
>
> First. There has been a serious misunderstanding on the part of the settlers, and I think perhaps this has been fostered to some extent by some of the attorneys representing the claimants, who know better, a great many of the settlers believing that there was a general appropriation made by Congress for the benefit of the fire sufferers, which should be distributed on equitable rules rather than on the ground of legal liability, and there has been some propaganda started on the idea that Congress had made an appropriation of $20,000,000 for the Russians and had made loans to allied countries during the period of the war, and that the Government should treat its own citizens as well as it did foreign nations and people.
> Second. The other source of dissatisfaction has been the fact that I think perhaps our local representatives, actuated by the best of motives, had tried to zone the territory into too refined districts, attempting to make adjustments with settlers on percentages running from 50 down to as low as 10 or 15 percent.

At the request of Senator Kellogg, on Tuesday, the 24th, I gave a full hearing to all attorneys representing these claimants. The hearing was attended by some 12 or 14 lawyers, largely from Duluth, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Cloquet. Everybody had a full hearing, and as a result on yesterday I announced a definite plan which the Railroad Administration would adopt.

So far as I could judge, there was entire unanimity on the part of the attorneys representing the claimants in the approval of this proposed plan. In effect, it divides the burned district in St. Louis and Carlton Counties into two zones at 50 and 40 percent.

I have given a great deal of thought to this situation, have had the best advice obtainable upon same, and I think this is not only a fair but a very liberal proposition from the Government under the circumstances. I am enclosing you a copy of my ruling, and I will be much obliged if you will read at least the first three pages, for the reason that that sets out the limitations as to the authority I have to settle, and the basis of the adjustment.

I have always appreciated your cooperation in this matter, and I want you to keep in touch with what I am doing, with a view to our continued coordination of effort. I want it understood, however, that this is the final conclusion of the Railroad Administration in this particular matter, and I believe it is going to be accepted with cordiality at least by the attorneys representing the claimants.

With personal regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

JAMES C. DAVIS, Director General.

What is there about that proposal of settlement, submitted to the Governor of a great State, that evidences any duress? Was this Governor a child? Was he a weakling? Was he under some spell? Was he afraid of Director General Davis? Did this letter he received by mail scare him? All this cry of duress raised years after these claimants and their lawyers accepted $13,000,000 in full settlement from the Government is an afterthought, is a subterfuge, is a sham, is a camouflaged scheme to get some more millions out of the United States.

In his report of December 27, 1933, Attorney General Homer Cummings calls our attention to the fact that claimants contend that the passage of this bill would not cost the Government more than $12,000,000, but he says, "There are indications in the file that the aggregate might run as high as $15,000,000." So this is a $15,000,000 case that Congress is attempting to try here, with only 20 minutes allowed each side for consideration.

I want all of us here to keep in mind that not only the 12 or 14 expert lawyers who represented the claimants at the conference table passed upon this settlement but also United States Senator Kellogg, and the Governor of Minnesota also approved it. Here is what Director General Davis said to the Governor of Minnesota in January 1922:

At the request of Senator Kellogg, on Tuesday, the 24th, I gave a full hearing to all attorneys representing these claimants. The hearing was attended by some 12 or 14 lawyers, largely from Duluth, St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Cloquet. Everybody had a full hearing, and, as a result, on yesterday I announced a definite plan which the Railroad Administration would adopt.

And he then said:

There was entire unanimity on the part of the attorneys representing the claimants in the approval of this proposed plan.

And he said:

I think this is not only a fair but a very liberal proposition from the Government under the circumstances.

And every Member here should read the letter which Director General Davis wrote to Senator Kellogg on January 25, 1922, outlining his plan of settlement and calling attention to his conference with the 14 lawyers for the claimants. There was no hurry. He took no advantage of anybody. His proposal was carefully considered and discussed by the claimants, their numerous attorneys, by their United States Senator, and by their Governor of Minnesota, before they accepted.

Will you please tell me where there was any duress? There was no duress. These claimants and their attorneys, aided and advised by their governor and United States Senator, made this compromise settlement with the Government, which was fair, just, and binding, and they received and accepted $13,000,000 in cash from this Government, and acknowledged in writing that it was in full settlement of all claims against the United States. That should be final. They received 50 cents on the dollar on their claims. That is more than juries ever give a plaintiff in a railroad damage suit. Usually one gets about one third of what one asks for in a damage suit, and feels satisfied.

Mr. KELLER. Why?

Mr. BLANTON. Because plaintiffs claim more than they expect to get when their lawyers file a damage suit.

They accepted; and they received $13,000,000 from your Government, from the people you represent back home, the taxpayers' money. Thirteen million dollars was taken out of the Treasury and paid to these people and they accepted it in full settlement. They accepted it, and their lawyers accepted it, and it was an honest and fair settlement made with your Government; and "as they bound themselves, so shall they be bound."

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], who filed an admirable report.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I wish it were possible for me to support this bill, not only because I sympathize with the great distress that this catastrophe in Minnesota caused, but because of my friendship for the splendid gentlemen from Minnesota who are interested in it and especially because of my admiration and friendship for that fine Representative from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE] who was sworn in as a Member of this House with me and on the same day. But if you will read the report filed in this case, and if you study the facts in it as I have studied them, I feel sure you will reach the same conclusion I have reached, that it would be a most dangerous precedent for the Government of the United States to reopen these claims after having made a fair and full settlement, the terms of which were agreeable to all parties when made.

Every man who had a cow killed on a railroad in your district during the time the administration operated the railroads will come to you and want the same thing done for him, and he will have the right to have it done. Every man who had an automobile run into by a railroad train during that period, or whose loved ones were injured, will have the same right under the precedent which will be set by this bill to ask Congress to give them the balance of what they claimed was due them, after having made settlement.

This settlement was made freely and voluntarily. It was approved by the Governor of the State of Minnesota; it was approved by the judiciary of the State of Minnesota; it had the approval of the then President of the United States, the late President Harding; and it had the approval of the Senator from Minnesota and of everybody concerned at that time. It was a fair settlement, a settlement arrived at in spite of the fact that the Government contended and continued to contend that in a vast majority of these cases there was no legal liability and could not possibly be. It is true some cases were tried, and the Supreme Court of the State of Minnesota upheld the verdicts against the railroads; some cases were reversed; and many, many cases were filed, but never tried. The Railroad Administration always contended that they could be in no way connected with many of the fires started by others.

It was a terrible catastrophe and I sympathize greatly with the people who suffered the loss. It is a dramatic story, one that naturally appeals to us and one we would like to do something about; but I say to you it is a precedent that this Congress will certainly regret if we establish it at this time, because the Claims Committee and the Members of this House will be swamped with similar claims based on just as good and equitable rights by thousands of people who have settled claims growing out of the operation of the railroads by this Government during that period. For the reasons set forth I cannot vote for the bill. I am sorry that I cannot. I wish I could vote for it, but under my conception of my duty here I cannot support this legislation. [Applause.]

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to deal with just one phase of this problem which goes to the question of the precedence that may be established.

May I point out the difference between cases of this character and the case of a person who is injured by an automobile, as cited by the gentleman from Georgia? In the Minnesota cases Mr. Baldwin, the Solicitor General, said in no uncertain language that, if the Government lost, these claims would be paid in full, and after the verdict in the 268 cases grouped in one was rendered Mr. Baldwin reneged on his agreement. The result was that these claimants were face to face with a practical situation which made it impossible for them to go through 10 or 12 years of trial in order to determine their rights. That is exactly what it meant to these people in Minnesota if they were obliged to submit all of their claims to trial after trial. The judges who handled the case admitted the practical impossibility of ever determining their rights in a court of law. This is why we are establishing no dangerous precedent if we pay these claims in full. These claims were proven in the courts of Minnesota, and if they are just Congress should not permit a settlement which was forced upon these sufferers to stand in the way of the complete fulfillment of a Government obligation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Davis states, according to the report:

> There never was any agreement, express or implied, oral or in writing, looking to a settlement, except the written offer on January 25 above referred to, except some form of amendments written or made in that offer, but the amendment did not change the substance of the offer in any particular.

In other words, he states that this written statement was the only one that was made by the Administrator.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The record clearly discloses that Mr. Baldwin in open court made the statement that if the Government lost the claims would be paid in full, and then, instead of regarding these as test cases upon which all had a right to rely, he proceeded to announce that each case must be decided upon its own merits. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, when I was a young man and first commenced to practice law, like most young lawyers I did not have so much to do, and I spent a great deal of time around the courts. I saw a great many cases in the courts, including damage cases against railroads and against other people. I never saw a case against a railroad involving a cow where it was not a mighty good cow, and I never saw a claim for damages arising out of a fire where it was not the best barn that was ever built, nor a house case where it was not a valuable house.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Not now. I am sorry. There are 20 minutes allotted to the discussion of this measure.

Mr. BLANTON. And a $10,000,000 bill. This is a $10,000,000 case we are forced to try in 20 minutes.

Mr. TABER. Two hundred and seventy-eight cases were tried. There were 7,000 cases altogether, as appears in the minority report. These cases were compromised after a lot of effort on the part of Senator Kellogg, President Harding, and the Acting Director General of Railroads, with Congress cooperating, for $13,000,000. That money was paid and these people signed releases. If you had a case against the railroad and signed a release for it upward of 10 years ago, you would figure that that release of yours was good today. This was not entered into under fraud.

Of course, I feel sorry for these people. They had this fire and it is regrettable, but I do not feel that we should reach down into the Treasury of the United States and take $10,000,000 more and hand it to these people after they have made a bona fide settlement and were treated fairly. I am sorry if any of them lost beyond what they were paid. If they have, they should not have made settlement. You know and I know that it is customary for lawyers who bring claims of this kind to put in all the value that they think they can prove and a little extra to make up for good measure. When they go into court it is customary for the jury to allot them what they think is fair, and I have hardly known of a jury to award as much as was asked. I have seen thousands and thousands of damage cases of one kind or another tried.

That is this proposition. The Government through the railroads made the settlement. We are asked to wipe out this settlement and add another $10,000,000, and I honestly do not see how we can do it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. These settlements and the releases these claimants executed contain the statement that they accept the $13,000,000 paid to them in cash by the Government in full settlement of all claims against the United States. If we wipe these settlements out and annul their releases and allow these people another $10,000,000 in cash after all these years, what is the use of putting this clause, "in full settlement of all claims against the United States", into each one of the bills that we pass, when "it is in full settlement" will not mean anything?

Mr. TABER. They might come back here in another year or two and ask for $20,000,000. I do not think we ought to pass this bill at the present time. I think we should vote it down and send it back. It is absolutely ridiculous, in my opinion, to go ahead and hand out $10,000,000 in this way.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, this is one of those bills that lie around Washington a long time. Finally someone gets interested in the bill as a lobbyist. May I say to my Democratic friends that this bill would not be before this House today except for the fact that the chief lobbyist during the present administration is the power back of the measure. I refer to Arthur Mullen, who resigned under the lashing of the President from the chairmanship of the Nebraska Democratic State committee. He is still here as a lobbyist. This is one of his bills. May I say to the Rules Committee, if any of the members are here, that this is the same gentleman to whom I referred who tried to deceive the membership of this House by denying the fact that he had been attorney for Henry L. Doherty and his group of companies. He represents interests that are trying to get something out of the Government—for the reason that he wants fees as a lawyer lobbyist. His influence is evident in this case. It has the approval of the President and the Attorney General.

I hope the Rules Committee will report out my bill, House Resolution 287, which proposes to stop some of this kind of business. If the President and this administration are sincere in desiring to stop lobbying by its national committeemen and its lawyers, the place to stop it is right here on this bill. I do not know how much fee this man is going to get on account of this bill, but I want to tell you this is one of his measures and, apparently, he is using the strength of the administration to get through this $10,000,000 bill because he wants his fee.

Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I will; yes.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield two and a half minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KVALE].

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, let me first invite the attention of the gentleman from Texas, who is a diligent and a conscientious legislator, since he complains about not taking up this bill during consideration of the Private Calendar, to his own remarks on the evening of March 15, when there was under discussion a bill involving the payment of over $900,000—a small fraction of what is involved here—and the gentleman from Texas properly—perhaps—said:

That is too large an amount to take out of the Treasury with only a few minutes' consideration and pay it to a corporation. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. And that applies now to this $10,000,000 bill.

Mr. KVALE. Certainly; but this is nevertheless an effort to give more consideration than would be allowed under the rules governing procedure under the Private Calendar to which this bill, under the House rules, has been referred, and where one opinionated Member can block any consideration whatever.

Mr. Speaker, in 1930 the Claims Committee of the House took this bill under careful consideration. The committee went into it at some length. It heard the testimony of this long list of witnesses which I now show to the Membership of the House. It evaluated that testimony, and on the basis of that testimony, and not through the influence of Arthur Mullen or any other person whose name may be drawn in here, that bill was reported favorably. The bill was denied passage because it was placed upon the Private Calendar of the House.

Today the bill is being considered, by the grace of the Speaker, under suspension of the rules. It is possible, I grant, that some amendments could have been offered. It is possible that some changes could have been made. But I rather doubt it.

These amounts were set by the Railroad Administration during the long past. Do not forget that. They were forced down the throats of these people. Helpless because of their economic situation as a result of this fire, they had to have money. They had to have some settlement, and they were the victims of an unfair compromise that was literally forced upon them. The record proves it.

Now, an effort is being made to give them what is properly theirs, as has been declared by the courts. It is the administration's own figure, and I say let us help these people at this late day. It is only belated justice. They have now spread to all parts of the United States. A substantial number of them are still in Minnesota, but in every State of the Union there are people who will be affected by this measure, and I ask you to picture for yourselves——

Mr. BOILEAU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. Is it not a fact that the figure which the gentleman is using is the figure that the Government agreed to as being the actual damage and not any fictitious value which the lawyers may have placed upon the claim?

Mr. KVALE. I am pleased that the gentleman has brought that out, because I tried to do that in my own feeble way.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include in them a copy of a letter written by the Attorney General to the President and a copy of a letter written by the President of the United States to the Chairman of the House Committee on Claims and other brief quotations in reference to this measure.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I add first the correspondence which clearly demonstrates the lively and the sympathetic interest of the President of the United States in this claim, and which likewise shows the friendly reaction of the Attorney General after a careful and complete review which had been asked personally by President Roosevelt. These letters are of public record; they are part of the committee reports of both bodies of Congress:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, December 27, 1933.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to respond to your request for information as to the status of the Minnesota forest-fire claims, and to your further request for the preparation of a reply to the letter addressed to you by Governor Olson, of Minnesota, with reference to the matter.

On October 12, 1918, northeastern Minnesota was swept by a forest fire which developed into a disastrous and devastating conflagration involving portions of four different counties. The fire covered about 1,500 square miles in area, and caused the loss of over 500 lives and great destruction of property. It was asserted that the fire was started by a railroad locomotive and spread due to the fact that the State was suffering from a severe drought. It was further asserted that the fact that there were a number of individual fires started by railroad employees at various points for the purpose of burning old ties and rubbish assisted in the spread of the conflagration.

Inasmuch as the railroads were then being operated by the Railroad Administration, and in view of the fact that the statutes provided that the Railroad Administration might sue and be sued, a large number of suits were brought against the Railroad Administration in the Minnesota State courts. Several cases were selected as test suits and were tried. After prolonged trials judgments were rendered for the plaintiffs and these judgments were affirmed by the highest court of the State.

After its legal liability was thus established, the Railroad Administration offered to settle all claims on a basis varying from 30 to 50 percent of the amount of damages, and this basis of settlement was accepted by the claimants. In those cases in which judgments had been rendered, the settlements appear to have been for 50 percent of the amount of the judgment. In other cases formal agreements were negotiated as to the amount of damage caused by the fire, and then amounts varying from 30 to 50 percent of the sum thus agreed upon was paid in full settlement of the claim. I am informed that a general release was exacted from every claimant at the time of settlement.

It is asserted in behalf of the claimants that most of them were impecunious, many of them being on charity or relief rolls at the time, and that they were impelled to accept the basis of settlement imposed by the Railroad Administration in view of their great need for financial assistance. It is further contended that since legal liability was established by the decision of the Minnesota courts and that since the amount of damages was agreed upon in each instance and thus was not in dispute, it was inequitable for the Federal Government to pay any sum less than 100 cents on the dollar in liquidation of these obligations.

While there does not appear to be any legal liability in the matter on the part of the United States, both because the United States is not suable in tort and because the claimants executed binding releases at the time of settlement, nevertheless, the contention that there is a moral and equitable obligation on the part of the Federal Government in the matter is not devoid of merit. It seems to me to be entitled to further study and consideration.

Bills to pay the claimants the difference between the actual amount of damages as found by the courts or heretofore formally agreed upon with the Railroad Administration and the amount actually paid to them were introduced in the Seventy-first Congress and reported favorably by the House Committee on Claims (S. 3329; H.R. 5660). A similar bill was likewise introduced in the Seventy-second Congress and was again reported favorably by the House Committee on Claims (H.R. 491).

Bills of the same tenor were again introduced in the first session of the Seventy-third Congress and are now pending (S. 770; H.R. 4774).

The Governor of Minnesota has written you requesting you to include action on these bills in your program of early legislation. He suggests that the total amount involved in the pending bills would not exceed $12,000,000. There are indications in the file that the aggregate might run as high as $15,000,000. He also suggests a personal conference with you if you desire.

I enclose a draft of a proposed reply to be sent to the Governor and am also returning his letter herewith.

Respectfully,

HOMER CUMMINGS,
Attorney General.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 24, 1934,

Hon. LORING M. BLACK, Jr.,
Chairman Committee on Claims,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR CHAIRMAN BLACK: I am enclosing a copy of a letter from the Attorney General in relation to the status of the Minnesota fire forest claims. I note particularly that legal liability of the United States was established by decision of the Minnesota courts, but that subsequently many settlements were made with individual claimants for sums much lower than the original awards. The Attorney General says:

"While there does not appear to be any legal liability in the matter on the part of the United States, both because the United States is not suable in tort and because the claimants executed binding releases at the time of settlement, nevertheless, the contention that there is a moral and equitable obligation on the part of the Federal Government in the matter is not devoid of merit. It seems to me to be entitled to further study and consideration."

I concur with the opinion of the Attorney General. I am writing similarly to Chairman BAILEY.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, I offer a copy of the letter addressed by the Attorney General to the chairman of the Senate committee and embodied in the Senate report, and especially invite attention to the concluding three paragraphs, definitely stating that—

Accordingly, in my opinion, the bill is meritorious.

The President in sending this letter forward on the following day, as the Senate report shows, said in so many words:

I concur with the opinion of the Attorney General.

The letter reads as follows:

JANUARY 23, 1934.

Hon. JOSIAH W. BAILEY,
Chairman Committee on Claims, United States Senate,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have your request for information and my opinion as to the merits of S. 770, a bill for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss by fire in the State of Minnesota during October 1918.

A study of the files, as well as of the testimony taken before congressional committees, tends to indicate the following facts:

On October 12, 1918, northeastern Minnesota was swept by a forest fire which developed into a disastrous and devastating conflagration involving portions of four different counties. The fire covered about 1,500 square miles in area and caused the loss of over 500 lives and great destruction of property running into many millions of dollars. Many of the survivors lost all or the greater portion of their possessions and were rendered destitute.

It was claimed that the fire was started by sparks from a railroad locomotive and spread rapidly due to a combination of the facts that the State was then suffering from a severe drought and that a very heavy gale was blowing at the time. It was further asserted that a number of individual fires started by railroad employees at various points for the purpose of burning old ties and rubbish assisted in spreading the conflagration.

The railroads were then being operated by the Railroad Administration. Accordingly, a large number of suits for damages were brought against the Railroad Administration in the State courts of Minnesota. Several test suits were tried. After prolonged trials, judgments were rendered for the plaintiffs, and these judgments were affirmed by the highest court of the State. (See Hall v. Davis, 150 Minn. 35; McCool v. Davis, 162 Minn. 281.) At the trial of the Hall case five judges sat en banc, and the trial lasted a number of weeks.

After its legal liability was established in several test cases, the Railroad Administration offered to settle all claims on a basis varying from 30 to 50 percent of the amount of damages. This offer included those persons who had reduced their claims to judgment, as well as those who had not. Apparently the Railroad Administration indicated that unless all of the claimants expressed a willingness to accept this basis of settlement, it would insist that each of the numerous cases be separately tried. It has been estimated that if the latter course was pursued it would have been impossible for all the cases to have reached a final disposition for a number of years, even if the State courts of Minnesota devoted themselves entirely to the trial of this class of litigation, which obviously was impossible. The offer made by the Railroad Administration was accepted and settlements were made on a basis varying from 30 to 50 percent, different percentages being adopted for different zones. In instances where the claim had been reduced to judgment, the amount paid was computed on the amount of the judgment.

In the large number of cases where no judgment had been obtained the claimant was required to submit proofs of loss to the Railroad Administration. These proofs were then investigated and a contract agreeing upon the amount of damages was negotiated and executed. In such instances the amount paid represented the fraction of the sum fixed in the contract. The face value of the amount of damages suffered by all of the claimants, as found either by judgments or by formal agreements, aggregates approximately $30,000,000. It appears that a general release was exacted from every claimant at the time of settlement.

The bill under consideration provides for the payment to the claimants of the difference between the amount of the damages suffered by them as determined either by judgments or agreements, and the amounts heretofore actually paid them by the United States. Fire insurance companies, other than the farmers' mutual fire insurance companies, are excluded from the benefits of the bill and from any right of subrogation. Assignees of the original claimants are limited to receiving no more than the amount actually paid for the assignment.

It is asserted in behalf of the claimants that they should not be held bound by the releases executed by them. It is said that many of them were destitute and impecunious, a large number of them being on charity relief rolls at the time that they were impelled by their necessities to accept the basis of settlement offered by the Railroad Administration, knowing that if they declined to do so, their rights might not be adjudicated and settled for a number of years to come. It is further contended that since legal liability was established by the decisions of the courts and that since the amount of damages was liquidated either by judgment or contract in each instance and thus was not in dispute, it was inequitable for the Federal Government to pay any sum less than 100 cents on the dollar in discharge of these obligations.

While there does not appear to be any legal liability in the matter on the part of the United States, nevertheless there is much force in the contention that a moral and equitable obligation on the part of the Federal Government exists in favor of these claimants. Accordingly, in my opinion, the bill is meritorious.

In reaching the conclusion on the merits of the bill I have not considered its financial aspects, as such matters are within the province of the Director of the Budget.

Very truly yours,

HOMER S. CUMMINGS,
Attorney General.

Then, Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend, I add the following extracts from the testimony of my former colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. Pittenger, before the committee, which appears on page 282 of the hearings which were conducted in the spring of 1930 and which persuaded the committee unanimously to approve the bill. Mr. Pittenger may be truly called the father of this bill; he knew his facts and proved them. He then said:

ADDITIONAL STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM A. PITTENGER

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Pittenger, you are permitted to make the closing statement, in connection with your bill, H.R. 5660.

Mr. PITTENGER. This committee has patiently listened to testimony and argument for several days, and I do not wish to prolong the hearing. The opponent of the bill, the United States Railway Administration, has had opportunity to fully present its arguments, and the people representing the fire sufferers have likewise had an opportunity to present their side of the case and to set forth the reasons for the passage of the bill, H.R. 5660.

I want to say to the committee that I am not a fire sufferer, nor are any of my relatives interested in any way in the bill. Nor have I ever had any connections with the attorneys representing the fire sufferers in the litigation against the Government. I did not take part in the litigation. I can say fairly that as between the fire sufferers and the Government, in their litigation, I have never been identified with either side. Perhaps, in this connection, I ought to add that after the attorneys for the fire sufferers established legal liability against the Government I did commence some 8 or 10 cases against the Railway Administration for people whom I had represented in other legal matters. Some of those cases were dismissed because they were outside the settlement area, and the others were disposed of by partial payment of the loss as fixed by the Railway Administration, the same as several thousand other cases.

So I can frankly say to this committee that my interest in this bill is the same interest that the people of my district have in the pending legislation. A large number of the fire sufferers still reside in my district. Many of them have moved to other parts of the United States. The people of my district want this legislation enacted, because they believe it only fair, just, and meritorious.

When I was elected to Congress, among other problems I was confronted with the claim of the fire sufferers. I was living in Duluth at the time of the great fire of October 12, 1918, and have continuously resided there ever since that date. I was familiar with the struggle of the fire sufferers in the courts against the Government. I witnessed the bitter fight waged by the attorneys for the Railway Administration to defeat the fire sufferers in the courts. More than once I sat in the court room, at special term, on Saturday, while waiting for my own legal matters to be heard, and listened to the Government attorneys interpose legal objections and technical arguments in connection with the trial of these cases. Then, when one or two cases were finally won by the fire sufferers, and at the request of a few of my clients, I decided to start lawsuits. When the statute of limitations was about to run and bar the bringing of more actions, I remember well the last day on which legal papers could be served on the railway agents. I remember it because I served the papers myself, and, in some mysterious way, those agents were hard to locate. I knew their place of business and knew they were customarily there. It took me some hours to find them. Finally, probably by accident, I located the man I wanted, and handed him the summons. In plain language, he had been dodging, and whether you like it or not, the responsibility for his attitude rests on the Railway Administration, and upon the former director general, James C. Davis, who tried to argue to this committee his extreme generosity. The next day these cases were to be outlawed, and it was through no fault of the men for whose acts Mr. Davis took full responsibility, before this committee, that I was able to serve the papers on the day in question. I knew during the years following the fire of the inability of the courts to try the enormous number of cases and of the efforts made by disinterested parties to get the Railway Administration to make some concessions to our destitute people. I saw the conditions as pictured here by other witnesses after October 12, 1918—homes destroyed, people destitute, some cared for by relatives, some living in livery stables, many fed by the Red Cross in order to avoid starvation. No words will describe the desolation and the hardship of these people during that winter and subsequent thereto.

The flu epidemic was at its height. Every available church, hall, theater, hospital, and other vacant building was commandeered and filled to overflowing. The Red Cross workers turned in to help relieve the suffering. The persons badly burned were given a place in the hospitals wherever possible; doctors and nurses donated their services; everybody contributed to help relieve the suffering.

I know that the railroad attorneys were licked in the courts. I know they had expected to win. I know they were keenly disappointed when the courts decided favorably to the fire sufferers. I know that there was never a suggestion of a settlement until the railroad attorneys were licked in the courts. I know the procedure they followed, investigating and determining the loss, and then paying part of that loss only. I know, because I settled five or six little cases. I know that the railroad attorneys told the claimants that they would have to accept the offer of part payment of a loss determined by their investigators or they would get nothing, unless they wanted to try their cases in the court. I know that would have meant years of litigation and delay, and that the expense for the average claimant might substantially exceed the amount of his claim. I know that the fire sufferers had no money to carry on that litigation. I know that Mr. Davis was saving the Government money by settling for a percentage of the loss, and that this saving was made at the expense of the people who were impoverished and in need. I wondered how he could keep a straight face before this committee the other day, when he talked about his fairness and his generosity. Only a cold-blooded person could do it or else a man not acquainted with the facts.

Last summer I made trips throughout my district and met with the fire sufferers at Cloquet, Brookston, and other points. At their request and in their behalf I have introduced this bill.

There was some talk before the committee about the matter being referred to the Court of Claims or about a commission to deal with these people. I think it apparent to everyone who listened to the testimony that the appointment of a commission in 1919 would have been proper. I think congressional action should have been taken at that time, and that the Representative from this district where the fires occurred could have presented this situation to Congress as a war loss, without in any way reflecting upon the ability or skill of Mr. Davis or his assistants in the Railway Administration. From testimony before your committee it is clear that the railways set numerous fires and were unable to take care of them. The country was at war, labor was scarce, 14-year old boys were working on the railroads, and they were not properly manned or operated. All this appears from the testimony and without any criticism of the Government, which was handicapped by the World War struggle. In other instances disasters such as this were treated as a war loss, and the people damaged were paid in full. The explosion and fire at Morgan, N.J., in October 1918 has been referred to by witnesses before your committee. This was a powder explosion. Its cause has never been determined. The property loss was heavy. Yet the Government report made in 1921 has this to say:

"Congress has apparently appropriated money for the relief of the sufferers as it would in case of any great catastrophe and not upon the theory of any legal liabiliay on the part of the Government."

In this case Congress acted ex gratia and paid the damage 100 cents on the dollar.

But no such results followed for the fire sufferers in northern Minnesota, whose calamity came in the same month and the same year as the explosion at Morgan, N.J. The Railway Administration, operating the railroads, directed and controlled by a former railroad attorney, and assisted by railway claim agents, promptly denied liability, carefully prepared for litigation, sent numerous claim agents in the territory, took statements. Then there came the suits against the Railway Administration. In response to suggestions that it ought to make some sort of settlement it announced, as good railroad lawyers do, that if the courts held there was liability it would pay in full, and if the courts held there was no liability the fire sufferers would be paid nothing. Well, gentlemen of the committee, the courts determined that the Railway Administration was liable. It was conclusively shown, and the Supreme Court of Minnesota upheld the finding that the Railroad Administration started the fires on its rights-of-way which burned over the territory on October 12, 1919. These cases tried were test cases. Their determination established the liability for various areas. In other words, the same fire which destroyed the places involved in litigation also destroyed the neighboring territory.

Then followed what I consider a shameful episode. The Government repudiated its promise, and refused to accept liability.

Instead it established its settlement areas, where it knew liability was established, and announced that it would settle the actual loss by paying only a portion—40 percent in some cases, 50 percent in other cases, and that the fire sufferers could take it or leave it. Unable to litigate further, they were forced by circumstances to take what the Railway Administration would pay them. By no stretch of the imagination can any sane man call this a compromise and settlement of a disputed liability or claim.

There can be only one answer to this harsh and unfair procedure on the part of the Government. The Director General of Railroads wanted to save the Government some money, just as a good railroad lawyer wants to save his railroad money. No human element entered into it, only the question of dollars and cents. No question of right or wrong was considered by the Government representatives. They refused to abide by the decision of the courts and repudiated their own agreements. The only question for them was, How cheap? And then President Harding was advised what an advantageous settlement had been effected for the Government.

Call it a "mistaken policy", if you wish, on the part of the Railway Administration. Call it by any other name; I care not. But surely this Congress ought to be willing to right the wrong that was done. The evidence here is conclusive that the fair thing was not done.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me again point out that the ill-considered statement of opponents to the measure to the effect that final settlement had been made and that complete satisfaction was had has abundantly been answered by the record of court evidence and committee testimony. In fact, the committee report contains this concluding sentence:

Either the Government owed the fire sufferers the amount of loss which each of them sustained or else it owed them nothing. It recognized liability in making part payments on these claims. The only way that justice can be done is to pass this bill and pay the balance.

Mr. Speaker, court records, careful committee examination, a special study by the Attorney General of the United States, and a frank concurrence in his favorable recommendation by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, all urge favorable consideration by the House of this measure. The Senate has passed the bill without one dissenting vote. The President will sign it. Only our action remains in the way of this modest effort to confer a just and fair and legal return to these victims of a terrible disaster after a wait of 17 years. I cannot believe the membership of this body will deny that appeal.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PEAVEY].

Mr. PEAVEY. Mr. Speaker, I am not so concerned with the technicalities advanced by the lawyers in the consideration of this bill. I wonder if this House wants to set up a double standard in dealing justice to the people of the several States. I want to call your attention to the fact that there was another and a comparable fire catastrophe that occurred in the month of October, 1918, over at Morgan, N.J., and I wish to tell you, briefly, what the Government did in that case. The matter was called to the attention of Congress, which was then in session, and Congress immediately, by resolution, created a commission and sent the commission to Morgan, N.J., to ascertain not only the property loss but the personal injury incurred and pay it in full. The Congress appropriated money in the next 60 or 90 days to pay these bills in full, 100 cents on the dollar, and I ask you here today if the people of Minnesota are not entitled to the same consideration that you extended to the people of New Jersey at that time?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PEAVEY. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It should not be a question of $10,000,000, it should be a question of justice, should it not?

Mr. PEAVEY. The gentleman is absolutely right.

I may call your attention to this further fact. The loss of life, the loss of property, and the loss in suffering in the Cloquet fire was five or ten times what it was in the Morgan, N.J., fire. The only reason in the world why Congress and the President at that time, President Wilson, issued a proclamation in behalf of the Morgan, N.J., people was because part of the loss at Morgan, N.J., was due to dynamite and powder explosions, and it caught the headlines of the newspapers of the country. Unless the House passes this bill today we are going to hide behind the railroad claim agents who fought these claims.

Do you want Uncle Sam to hide behind the railroad claim agents to deny the people of Minnesota justice?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOWELL].

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to represent the district in which lives the former Administrator of the Railroads. I have a letter from him here, and I want to call attention to a paragraph in it. After reciting a number of facts relative to this matter and reviewing the proceedings had by the Administrator of the Railroads, he tells of his efforts to help the sufferers.

I want to read a paragraph from his letter:

> These settlements were finally carried out, and each claimant was paid the amount provided for in that settlement. I insisted that the contingent fees of 40 percent were too much due the attorneys and that was reduced to either 20 or 25 percent.

The paragraph just read clearly indicates that the Administrator for the Railroads was trying to get for these sufferers all that was possible out of these settlements, and at his suggestion the contingent attorneys' fees were reduced.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. CHRISTIANSON].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I do not rise at the behest of any Mr. Mullen or other high-powered or low-powered lobbyist. I rise because I have first-hand knowledge of the situation which existed in northern Minnesota in the fall of 1918. A few weeks after the fire I visited that section and saw the people living in tar-paper shacks under the most wretched conditions, trying to exist on the benefactions of the State. I was a member of the legislature at the time, and we appropriated $1,800,000 to help the victims of the disaster keep body and soul together. It is my intimate acquaintance with the situation that impels me to speak today.

It has been said that the claimants have released their claims against the Government. It is true that releases have been given, but they were given and accepted under duress. Compulsion, exerted by the Government itself, vitiates whatever validity those releases might otherwise have had. In that connection, I want to read a statement made in a letter from Mr. Albert Baldwin, special representative of the United States Government in the Minnesota fire cases. You will find it on page 14 of the minority report. He says:

> In cases where any of the above three requirements are not complied with, the offer of compromise will be deemed withdrawn in its entirety, and the claimant remitted to his legal remedies, the same as if the offer were not made, and his case will stand for trial in the usual way, upon the question of liability as well as damages.

That was after liability of the Government had already been established by the Supreme Court of Minnesota.

In other words, he said to the impoverished, destitute people in those pitiful tar-paper shacks, who did not have a dollar in the world: "Accept what we offer, or sue the great and powerful Uncle Sam. Carry your suit through the lower courts and up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and do it at your own expense." [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GLOVER].

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, we are going far afield in this bill. I do not think this House will pass it; I have too much confidence in its judgment for that.

Here is a cause of action, if there be one, that originated in 1918. It was litigated in the courts. Some Members are for it and some against it. Four years after that, when they had able counsel, they agreed to a settlement made by the Government that, in my opinion, was absolutely fair to them, and I think it ought to be binding on this Congress. They were paid $13,000,000 in settlement and now want ten million more. I will not vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I will close the debate against the bill and yield to myself the balance of the time remaining.

At the outset, Mr. Speaker, I want to brush away some of the cobwebs in this debate that obscure the main issue. It is contended that the Government promised to pay all of these claims in full. No such promise was ever made by any responsible representative of this Government, and you will find no such promise anywhere in the records. The Government at all times contended that the damaging fire was not set by the railroad, and that the Government was in no way to blame, and that the Government is in no way liable.

It is also contended that the Attorney General of the United States and the President have approved this claim and want it paid. That is not the fact. The Attorney General, Hon. Homer Cummings, on December 27, 1933, in his report distinctly said:

> There does not appear to be any legal liability in the matter on the part of the United States because the claimants executed binding releases at the time of settlement.

You will note that he said they executed "binding releases." He did not say that such releases were voidable because they were executed under duress, or that they were executed through fraud, accident, or mistake. He says they were "binding releases" to this Government. All on earth the Attorney General suggested was that the bill be given study and consideration by Congress. That is what we are giving it now. We are studying it. We are considering it.

The President did not tell us that he approved this bill. He did not tell us that it is a just claim. He did not tell us that the Government owes it and that we should pay it. He merely quoted what the Attorney General said. He quoted the statement of Attorney General Cummings that "there does not appear to be any legal liability in the matter on the part of the United States because the claimants executed binding releases at the time of settlement", and he merely passes the matter up to Congress for its study and consideration. The President makes no recommendation whatever as to what we should do with the bill. It is this Congress that must determine whether this Government owes anything to these people or not.

As I have said before, the Director General of Railroads, Hon. James W. Davis, on behalf of the United States, made a fair and just proposal of settlement to the 14 attorneys representing these claimants, sitting around the conference table, and then he submitted such proposal to United States Senator Kellogg, of Minnesota, who was actively looking after the interests of these claimants, and he also submitted his proposal in writing to the Governor of Minnesota, and all of them approved the proposed compromise and settlement, and these claimants duly executed binding releases to the Government, and received the big sum of $13,000,000 in cash from the Government, and acknowledged in writing that they received and accepted said $13,000,000 in full settlement of all claims they had against the United States Government.

And they did this in 1922. And now in 1934 they want this Government to treat their binding release as a scrap of paper and to annul it for no good reason at all, and without reason or justice or equity or in good conscience to pay them some more millions, at least amounting to $10,000,000 more, and which, as Attorney General Cummings tells us, will aggregate possibly as much as $15,000,000 additional to the $13,000,000 they accepted in full settlement. Is this House going to do it? I cannot believe it. I have more confidence in it than that. I believe that it is more concerned than that about the rights and best interests of the whole people of the United States who are trusting us here to protect them from all improper claims.

This settlement proposed by the Director General of Railroads was duly approved by the claimants. Their Governor approved it. Their United States Senator approved it. Their lawyers accepted it. The Governor of Minnesota accepted it. All the officials of this Government accepted it in full settlement and paid those people $13,000,000 in spot cash, which they put down in their pockets. After they got the money in 1922 and gave the United States binding releases, 12 years later they come to Congress and ask you to set aside their solemn agreement and dig down into the Treasury of the United States and take the tax money of the people and pay them $10,000,000 more. I do not believe this Congress will do it.

I do not believe you will go back to your homes and face your constituents and tell them that after the Government paid $13,000,000 back in 1922 in full settlement of all claims, and the people accepted it and signed a release, and said they had been paid in full, you will go back and face your farmers in the country and your constituents in the cities who are out of jobs and say, "Oh, we set that binding release aside; they were under duress, and we paid them another $10,000,000 of your money." What do you expect your constituents at home to think of you when you do that?

Of course, it is easy when you have got a former Congressman here in this city lobbying for this bill——

Mr. LUNDEEN. Name him.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Name him.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I have named him. You know who he is. When you have a big lawyer like the one mentioned by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who represents these claimants, it is easy for us to get up here and say, "Oh, we will let this $10,000,000 bill pass. It is not our money." It is easy for us to vote out the people's money.

Let us vote down this bill. Let us kill it. Let us stop it here and now. Let us save this $10,000,000 for the people of the United States. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield one half minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I believe the demands in this bill are just, reasonable, and fair, and these poor people in my State should be given help. I cannot agree with the lawyer-judge-legislator-Congressman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in saying that a lawyer is here lobbying. As I look over this Congress day after day, I think a majority of the people here are lawyers, making the laws for the people of this country.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. If this has no merit, why did not the Attorney General say it had no merit?

Mr. BLANTON. In effect, he did say so in his report.

Mr. KELLER. Oh, no; he did not.

Mr. BLANTON. Attorney General Cummings on December 27, 1933, used this language: "There does not appear to be any legal liability in the matter on the part of the United States because the claimants executed binding releases at the time of settlement."

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. I believe it would have had merit if he had been living up there in that country when the fire was there. [Applause.]

I sincerely hope that this Congress will pass out this measure for the relief of certain fire sufferers who sustained damages during the Government's operation of the railroads in 1918 in the northern part of my State of Minnesota. Many of them were burned out completely and were forced to start all over again. This disastrous fire which swept the north woods and through the farms and small communities took a toll of over 500 lives and laid waste millions of dollars of personal and real property. This section of our State has not yet fully recovered from this tragic blaze, and hundreds of the residents of this district have never properly adjusted themselves.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JOHNSON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Many of the residents of this district have since spread to all parts of this Nation and are residing in 33 States. The Government, after the disaster and because the highest courts in the State definitely laid the responsibility at the doors of the railroads, settled these claims on a basis of approximately 40 percent. The courts contended, however, that these should be paid on the full value of the damage suffered by the residents, and the payment made by this Congress will once and for all settle this claim.

I hope that the House will pass this bill. I know that this body is anxious to do the human and right thing. Although I understand that the Government of the United States will not be liable or suable in tort, because the claimants signed releases, nevertheless the just thing for this Congress is to pay these claimants not 40 percent of their losses, but the full amount in which they suffered in property loss. None of us can measure what these poor people lost in the way of broken homes and shattered lives. I am sure if we could measure the suffering and the physical privations that these persons went through and the loss of their friends and relatives, I have not the slightest doubt in my mind but that every Member of this body would vote to correct this by the passage of this measure.

The President of the United States, upon receipt of a letter from the Attorney General, Mr. Cummings, filed a communication with the Chairman of the Claims Committee, Mr. BLACK, in which he said in part that—

> The equitable obligation on the part of the Federal Government in the matter is not devoid of merit. It seems to me to be entitled to further study and consideration.

The chairman, Mr. Black, in reporting this bill out favorably from the committee, I know gave it a full and impartial hearing. They have carefully considered the evidence presented and their decision in behalf of the claimants is one that is based on equity and an honest desire to see these fire sufferers granted the relief they so sorely are in need of.

The merit of the bill is further evidenced by the Attorney General of the United States in a later letter of January 23, 1934, addressed to the Chairman of the Senate Claims Committee handling this measure, when he said:

> While there does not appear to be any legal liability in the force in the contention that a moral and equitable obligation on the part of the Federal Government exists in favor of these claimants. Accordingly, in my opinion, the bill is meritorious.

The Attorney General, Mr. Cummings, has made a careful study of the history of this bill and the long litigation that immediately followed the fire caused by the railroads then operating under Government control.

Over on the other side of the Capitol the Senate has voted unanimously to pay these claimants. The money paid to these people will directly go into the communities in which these persons are residing, and for the most part will be used to rebuild and enlarge the property which was burned and destroyed by this awful and disastrous fire.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HOIDALE].

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Speaker, all these 8,000 claims are on file with the Railway Administration. I have brought up a number of them, but I am calling this one to your attention to dissipate the idea that these claims were settled upon an unreasonable and inflated basis.

This is the claim of Theresa and this is the report of the investigator who made the statement. This is what he says:

> Takes in washing; does house cleaning; also kept roomer before the fire; seems to me an honest old woman.

What was the history of that? This honest old woman who washed and scrubbed floors put in an itemized claim, under oath, showing that her little house which sheltered not her and her child but sheltered the family cow, was worth $3,800. That was under oath. That claim was reduced by the Government to $2,800. They cut off a thousand dollars, and the amount that the woman got was $950 upon a claim of $3,800. That is the way that every one of these claims were scaled down, and those people were defrauded out of what they were entitled to.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOIDALE. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I may say that this is the first time since I have been a member of the Claims Committee the President of the United States has written directly to the chairman of that committee requesting further consideration of any bill. [Applause.]

Mr. HOIDALE. I wish to say to the gentleman from Texas, who says there has been a settlement, "Yes; there has been a settlement, but what kind of a settlement?" A settlement on paper. If I had a claim for $1,000 against the gentleman from Texas, and my child was sick and my family was starving, and I needed care for the child and bread for the children, and I went to the gentleman and I said, "Give me that $1,000", and he said, "No; I know the fix you are in. You have to have money. I will give you $500 if you will give me a written receipt." I am in a position where I have to take that money because I have no other way out. Is that the kind of a settlement the gentleman says the United States must live up to? We are setting a dangerous precedent before the people of the United States when we permit a settlement of that kind to stand.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. HOIDALE] has expired.

All time has expired.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 44, noes 65.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that it discloses that a quorum is not present.

Mr. BLANTON. There were nearly two thirds against the bill, Mr. Speaker; it ought not to pass.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I withhold my point of order temporarily.

HOUR OF MEETING

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, as I stated this morning, by previous arrangement it is expected that the House will adjourn over Friday and Saturday until Monday. In order that we may take up and conclude the calling of the Consent Calendar and such other suspensions as may be on the Speaker's desk, and also possibly to go on to the Private Calendar tomorrow, if possible, to do so within reasonable hours, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

WAS IT A CRIME TO OVERRIDE THE VETO?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks, and to insert therein a speech of my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW] printed in the Boston Transcript.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following statement by my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW]:

[From the Boston Evening Transcript, Apr. 2, 1934]

I have received a raft of abusive letters and telegrams this past week attributing to me nearly every crime in the decalogue for not having stood by the President on his veto. Curiously enough many of the harshest of these communications have come from the same men who within a fortnight have written with equal vehemence demanding that I vote against other measures which the President has clearly stated that he favored—the stock-exchange regulation bill, the Wagner-Connery labor disputes bill, and the unemployment insurance bill. Other rather bitter denunciations have come from gentle ladies expressing their never-to-be-forgotten disgust. Even a minister of the gospel in Ipswich went so far as to send this Easter message: "Judas Iscariot would have been pleased with your cowardly vote of yesterday. You are a disgrace to Massachusetts." Tomorrow, likely as not, the mail will bring some suggestion of affiliation with Benedict Arnold and the Borgia family.

This spleenish outpouring means that a portion of the public at least are wholly misinformed as to what the bill contained which the President vetoed and which was passed over his veto by an overwhelming majority of both parties in both Houses. From some of the letters, it appears that the writers even think that the bill had something to do with the cash bonus, with which, of course, it was in no way concerned, and against the prepayment of which, as a matter of fact, I, along with all the other Republican members of the Massachusetts delegation, voted several weeks ago.

Because of the wide-spread ignorance and misunderstanding of the bill, I feel that the public is entitled to a brief explanation of what was the real difference between the President and Congress.

The provisions of the bill which led the President to veto it had to do with the restoration of some (not all) of the pay cuts of Government workers and veterans ordered by the President last year.

The President has reiterated and reiterated his appeal to private employers to increase wages, but at the same time he had himself reduced by 15 percent the pay of the only employees over which he has any control, and has opposed any immediate restoration of any of that reduction, or more than 5 percent next July. Congress voted to restore 5 percent of the reduced pay immediately, and another 5 percent in July. This is in line with what the steel corporation, the General Electric and many other private employers of labor have recently done at the President's behest.

The President last year made very drastic cuts in veterans' compensation, some of which I think were wholly justified, and some of which I think were very cruel. The bill which he vetoed did not propose to restore pay to any of the more than 400,000 World War veterans who were receiving pensions for non-service-incurred disabilities, as many have been led to believe. It did restore (1) 100 percent pay to the World War victims of injuries due directly to their service, (2) 75 percent of the pay of those veterans the Government had long ago decided, and still believes, were suffering from disabilities presumably due to their service—mostly tuberculotic and neuropsychiatric cases—and (3) 75 percent of the pay that had been cut off from the aging Spanish War veterans which the Government had granted them many years ago and upon which they had long since come to depend. In the case of presumptives, every case still remains subject to review and elimination by the Government.

A considerable number of these restorations had already been made by the President by Executive order, and Congress merely voted to make them a matter of law. Nevertheless, they are included in the total increase in expenditures attributed to this bill. The most careful estimates that I have seen of the difference in cost between the veteran provisions of the bill passed by Congress and the orders issued by the President amount to less than $30,000,000, and the difference between the cost of the bill as a whole and the cost of the President's proposals is placed at less than fifty millions—not two hundred and twenty-eight millions as is generally believed.

While I agree that the situation of the Treasury is indeed alarming, that is due to the President's spending nearly a billion dollars every month upon projects of his own choosing, and thereby increasing the deficit by a round sum of $600,000,000 month after month. It is preposterous to attribute this calamity to Congress for having overridden the President's veto of this bill.

TO PROHIBIT FINANCIAL TRANSACTIONS WITH FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS IN DEFAULT ON OBLIGATIONS TO THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill failed to pass and to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. KVALE. The vote has not been announced.

Mr. BLANTON. The vote has been announced. The Speaker announced there were 44 ayes for the bill and 65 noes against the bill. The gentleman from Minnesota then made a point of no quorum and then withdrew it, and other business has intervened.

Mr. KVALE. I withdrew it temporarily. I renew it at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that where the Chair announces a vote and a point of no quorum is made and withdrawn and intervening business transpires, that makes the announced vote final.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum has not been withdrawn. The gentleman from Minnesota kindly withheld it temporarily for the convenience of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. But intervening business was transacted.

The SPEAKER. He retains all his rights. The Chair will recognize him to renew his objection to the vote on the ground there was not a quorum present.

GUARANTY OF HOME LOAN BANK BONDS

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that the majority and the minority leaders, the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, including the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who objected the other day, all want to take up the home owners' loan bank bill tomorrow under suspension of the rules. There seems to be little objection to it; and the request will be made tomorrow that an hour a side be given under suspension of the rules. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL] to move to suspend the rules, with the understanding that the time may be extended to an hour on a side.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether the recognition will be made at the opening of the session at 11 o'clock or later in the day?

The SPEAKER. That bill will be called up first.

SUFFERERS BY FIRE IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I renew my objection to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman withold his point of order temporarily?

Mr. KVALE. Will there automatically be a record vote on the bill?

Mr. BLANTON. No; because intervening business has transpired.

The SPEAKER. If the House adjourns now, the vote will be taken de novo tomorrow on the motion to suspend the rules, just as if there had been no attempt to take it tonight.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, to preserve the rules of the House, why does not the gentleman ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken tomorrow?

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. Then we have transacted a whole lot of business here without a quorum being present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not as yet announced that a quorum is not present.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following appointments to committees:

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees:

Messrs. JONES, FULMER, DOXEY, HOPE, and KINZER.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make an announcement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, may I say that Mr. Ed Everson, national president of the Farmers' Union, will address a meeting to be held in the old House Office caucus room tonight on the Frazier bill, and I should like to have as many Members present as possible.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE WHITE RIVER VALLEY

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I present and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred an important letter addressed to me having relation to the improvement of the White River Valley.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WALTON RICE MILL, INC.,
Stuttgart, Ark., March 31, 1934.

Senator JOE T. ROBINSON,
Washington, D.C.

HONORABLE SIR: I desire to bring to your attention a matter that on previous occasions has been attempted but for various reasons has been discarded. It now seems, in defense of the position of the Arkansas rice industry, it must be carried to a favorable conclusion, otherwise we greatly fear the industry will pass out by reason of the condition possibly created by others who have pursued a more aggressive policy.

You will appreciate the Arkansas industry is completely at the mercy of rail carriers as a means of conveying our manufactured product from the mill to consuming markets. You are also aware that under the stress of economic conditions for the most part carriers have been reluctant to grant concessions in rates that might normally be expected by reason of commodity declines. You probably would be surprised that during the past year or so we have made shipments to many markets where the rate assessed by carriers even exceeded the value of the shipment itself.

These all are glaring facts, and we must tell you that these conditions are undermining the industry, which, if left uncorrected, will eventually cause the Arkansas rice industry to dry up and pass out of the picture entirely.

In the first part of this letter I mentioned others who have been more aggressive. Reference is made to millers located at both Louisiana and Texas who have taken, so to speak, mere remnants of a waterway and developed it into a modern system of inland canal, with the result these millers today, although located many miles more distant from the interior market than we, can now compete favorably with the Arkansas millers and in addition participate in export business, to the detriment and expense of the Arkansas rice-milling industry.

Just recently the Arkansas millers have filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission a petition attacking all clean-rice rates from Memphis, Tenn., Louisiana, and Texas as being preferential and discriminatory to the Arkansas milling interests. This will be a long-drawn-out procedure, as you are aware, and most probably in the end will not give us the necessary relief.

As you know, traffic on the Mississippi River now extends from New Orleans to Chicago. This, coupled with intercoastal canal through Louisiana into Texas, gives these mills access to important interior destinations that previously were only available by rail movement, and even into the Ohio River crossings, all of which has pushed the Arkansas miller into such a small territory that his very existence is now in jeopardy.

This industry has only asked a small consideration from the Government in the past, and has, wherever possible, fought its battles to maintain its existence as best it could without enlisting outside assistance. We now have apparently reached the end of the rope unless we can enlist your support in a move to create a lasting and permanent relief.

The confidence of Arkansas, if not the Nation, is invested in you to assist and fight for any worthy cause. So now the Arkansas millers are asking that you assist in the development of White River to a point where the fertile Arkansas White River Valley can again encourage its industry and enjoy to the important inland markets or to the ports, as they choose, an outlet on a competitive rate structure such markets as are available for the consumption of our manufactured products.

I cannot stress the importance of such a move too vigorously, and I sincerely hope you will lend full support to a successful conclusion of this project, that I feel would be a monument to the future of Arkansas.

With kindest regards and all good wishes I shall anxiously await your further reply.

Very sincerely,

C. R. WALTON.

Mr. HEBERT and Mr. SHIPSTEAD each submitted an amendment, Mr. CLARK submitted two amendments, and Mr. McKELLAR submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to House bill 7835, the revenue bill, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

EXEMPTION FROM TAX OF OILS USED FOR MEDICINAL PURPOSES—AMENDMENT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I present an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending revenue bill, and ask that it may be printed in the usual form, printed in the RECORD, and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. COPELAND to the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, is as follows:

In section 602, paragraph (a), on page 214, line 15, strike out the period and insert the following: "nor the use of any of the oils included in this paragraph in the manufacture of an article or product not intended for use as food for human consumption or for medicinal purposes."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the purpose of this amendment is to exempt from the excise tax of 3 cents per pound coconut oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, sesame oil, whale oil, sperm oil, and cod oil when used in the manufacture of articles or products not intended for use as food for human consumption, and cod-liver oil, halibut oil, and other vitamin-potency fish oils which are used for medicinal purposes. In other words, when the foregoing oils are used in the manufacture of an article or product not intended for use in a food for human consumption or for medicinal purposes they would bear no excise tax. By the adoption of this amendment the Senate could save the American public a tremendous burden of expenses in connection with these excise taxes and yet not interfere to any appreciable degree with such benefits as would accrue to the farmer from the levying of these excise taxes.

In the case of coconut oil, about 70 percent of the total annual consumption of this oil goes into the manufacture of soap, rubber auto tires, and the tanning of leather and miscellaneous manufacturing activities. It is even used in the manufacture of road-building materials. In none of these can it be said that it is in any way competitive with oils and fats of domestic origin.

I am informed that the original purpose in the House in placing a tax on coconut oil was to protect the butter maker and the dairyman. Neither the butter maker nor the dairyman produce anything which is used in the manufacture of soap, automobile tires, or the tanning of leather. The butter maker and the dairyman, on the other hand, are purchasers of these nonedible products into which coconut oil enters.

The industrial users of coconut oil testified before the Senate Finance Committee that when they purchased coconut oil they did so because of its lauric-acid content, and they further stated that there was not a single domestic oil or fat which contained any lauric acid. It is lauric acids which make a soap made from coconut-oil lather. The rubber-tire manufacturer who employs coconut oil finds that the lauric acids therein give the rubber tire longer life and greater mileage, and the tanners of white leather testified before the Finance Committee that coconut oil was the only oil which they could use which did not turn the leather yellow as it aged.

In view of the fact that there is a definite constituent of coconut oil which the industrial users require, nothing is accomplished in the way of increasing the consumption of domestic oils and fats by trying to tax coconut oil out of the market. If we pass this tax, it will make it almost impossible for the concerns which require coconut oil to carry on their business. This is not fair. It is not just.

Not only is the exemption of these oils used in industrial channels from this excise tax, which is approximately 100 percent of the value of the oils and fats against which it is levied, of importance from the angle of the consumer, but it is a serious question if the industries which use these oils can bear up under the tremendous burden which it is proposed to place upon them. The Senate, if it levies these taxes, would be levying the heaviest tax on consumption ever levied in the history of the country upon essential commodities. The total tax burden, when applied against all of the oils and fats which it affects, amounts to in excess of $34,000,000 per annum, as based on the 1933 imports. This does not mean that anywhere near that amount of revenue would result from the levying of these taxes, because it is very doubtful if these industries could sell their products with these taxes applying against the raw materials from which they must make them.

There are dozens of firms in the State of New York which employ these oils and fats which are affected by the proposed excise taxes, and the report received from every one which has been heard from is that the levying of these taxes without giving the consumer additional purchasing power is going to make it very difficult for them to sell their finished products. There does not appear to be any justification for singling out a single group of industries for this kind of treatment.

The second most important of these oils which would be exempted in my amendment from the excise tax when not employed in the manufacture of food for human consumption is palm oil. The Senate Finance Committee has already exempted palm oil when used in the manufacture of tin plate from the application of the tax. Doubtless palm oil is an essential in the manufacture of tin plate, but it is certainly no more of an essential in the manufacture of tin plate than it is in the manufacture of textile soap.

The textile-soap manufacturers in the State of New York, of which there are many, one and all testify to the fact that there is absolutely no substitute for palm oil in the manufacture of textile soap. The textile-soap manufacturers consistently paid more for palm oil than other oils and fats used for soap-making purposes were bringing in the market. It would be very difficult for them, however, to carry on their business if they had to pay as much as 3 cents per pound more for palm oil used in the manufacture of textile soap than they pay at the present price level.

It should be borne in mind that if the prices of all commodities in the United States were suddenly to advance 100 percent, which is the effect this tax will have on the imported oils and fats it covers, then on this inflated price basis it would not be difficult for any given industry to sell its products. But suppose that we single out a single group of industries and make them bear the burden of a tax of these proportions without there being any general inflation of prices of other commodities. It does not seem reasonable to expect that the group of industries which use these oils can escape tremendous injury.

Very little palm oil, probably not more than 10 percent of the total annual importations, is utilized in the manufacture of any kind of food product. It appears that the palm oil is so high in free fatty acids, which is essentially the element of rancidity, that it is impractical to utilize any quantity of it in the manufacture of edible oil. This is borne out by the fact that such a small proportion of it, according to the Bureau of the Census records, gets into edible channels. That portion of it which is not used in the manufacture of textile soap goes into the manufacture of yellow household laundry soap, plus what goes into the manufacture of tin plate.

The exemption of the palm oil used in the manufacture of tin plate is in line with the amendment which I have proposed, but I cannot understand how the committee would exempt from the tax palm oil used in the manufacture of an article like tin plate without exempting at the same time palm oil used in the manufacture of soap.

There is scarcely a nation in the world which does not accord preferential treatment to oils and fats imported within their borders for the manufacture of soap. They do this for sanitary reasons. They do it because they place a high value upon the matter of cleanliness. Why should we break the precedent which is followed throughout the world by trying to make the price of soap vastly higher than it should be? Hospitals, visiting nurses' organizations, welfare centers, charitable organizations, and dozens of other groups of similar nature have protested to me against the application of this tax on soap-making oils and fats. One and all have stressed the importance of keeping the price of soap at a reasonable point to the public. Soap is the one commodity of all commodities which should be merchandised at the most reasonable possible figure, and here we are proposing to place a tax of 100 percent ad valorem upon all of the imported soap-making oils and fats. Why is it that in this effort to levy an excise tax we are centering our activities upon the soap industry? There are a lot of other industries who import oils and fats into the United States, and their raw materials have not been molested.

The next of these oils which is affected by this tax, which is important in the industrial field, is palm-kernel oil. Here again is another important soap-making oil which the soap makers in my State desire to have access to. It already bears a duty of 1 cent a pound if used for edible purposes, and if we apply this excise tax of 3 cents per pound on the edible phases of the oil, then certainly that should be enough to satisfy the demand for keeping it out of edible channels. What harm will it do anyone to allow this soap-making oil to come into the country?

Sesame oil is the next oil which would be affected by the tax of 3 cents per pound. Sesame oil was exempted from taxation in the 1930 tariff if not employed in edible usage. The importations do not amount to much, but since we decided upon this policy in framing the 1930 tariff there seems to be no reason why we should not adhere to it now. If the use of sesame oil for nonedible purposes without the payment of tariff taxes was satisfactory in 1930, it should be just as proper to utilize it for such purposes now without the payment of an excise tax.

The next important oil is whale oil. As far as can be ascertained, there is no imported whale oil used in the manufacture of edible products in the United States. But, in case there might be, we can levy this 3-cent excise tax on the whale oil if used in the manufacture of an edible product for human consumption and let that whale oil which goes into the manufacture of soap and the tanning of leather be exempted from the tax. Our farmers buy the leather goods which the whale oil is used in tanning and they buy the soap. They will profit from having both soap and leather at reasonable prices.

The next important oil to which this excise tax would apply is sperm oil. The domestic production of sperm oil is almost nothing. The textile and the rayon industries and the tanning industries all require sperm oil. Being really a wax and not an oil, it is not used in the manufacture of soap and could not be, but the textile mills, the rayon mills, and the tanners need this oil. Why not let them have it without this enormous excise tax? It is by nature a nonedible oil.

The next important oil which my amendment will exempt from taxation is Newfoundland and Norwegian cod oil. This fish oil is used in the manufacture of leather. The tanners in my State tell me that there is absolutely no oil which can take the place of cod oil. We produce scarcely any in the United States. It is produced from the codfish. The placing of this excise tax is not going to make our fishermen catch any more codfish. This excise tax could not help them, but it will be a tremendous burden upon the tanners of leather who must have cod oil with which to tan leather. They need it on the type of leather which goes to make harness which the farmer purchases. Why should we make the farmer pay more for harness when we are talking about helping agriculture by levying these excise taxes?

The next of the oils which this amendment of mine would exempt from taxation is cod-liver oil. It is made from the fresh livers of the codfish. Cod-liver oil is used for medicinal purposes and for the feeding of poultry and livestock.

It is used in these directions because of its vitamin potency. An excise tax upon this oil would be a cruel injustice. It is a tax upon the sick and the ailing children. Just like the tax upon the soap oils, it is a tax upon health.

Think of the thousands of poultry feeders whom we are going to penalize with this tax on cod-liver oil. We are certainly not going to help the farmer who is raising chickens in a brooder and who requires cod-liver oil to raise these chickens possessed of proper strength and vitality. We should exempt all of these vitamin-potency fish oils from this tax. In this category comes halibut oil. Halibut oil is exactly the same kind of oil as cod-liver oil and is used for precisely the same purposes. It will be assessed with this 3-cent per pound excise tax and there is no justification in doing it.

As a matter of fact, in levying these excise taxes on imported whale oil, imported fish oils, and imported marine-animal oils, we are violating every international treaty which we have with foreign nations. Article VIII of the German treaty provides as follows:

> The nationals and merchandise of each high contracting party within the territories of the other shall receive the same treatment as nationals and merchandise of the country with regard to internal taxes, transit duties, charges in respect to warehousing, and other facilities and the amount of drawbacks and bounties.

Please note that we implicitly agree in this treaty that we shall levy no higher internal taxes upon the imported merchandise of foreign nations than we levy upon domestic merchandise, and under the most-favored-nation clause which we have with 47 other nations we agree to accord the same treatment to merchandise imported from other foreign nations. Therefore the rights accorded to Germany with regard to internal taxes on merchandise imported from Germany are accorded to all the nations with which we have commercial treaties. In other words, we cannot levy higher internal taxes upon the merchandise imported from these countries than we levy upon the merchandise of our own citizens.

Despite this fact, in three places the Senate Finance Committee bill proposes to levy this 3-cent tax upon imported articles—imported whale oil, imported fish oil, and imported marine-animal oil. If we pass this bill with this word "imported" in it, applying to these marine-animal oils, fish oils, and whale oil, no foreign nation will have any respect for the treaties which this body has ratified in the past. We cannot pass a treaty one day and violate it the next.

Since none of these imported whale, fish, and marine-animal oils are used in edible channels in the United States, it is really needless to include them in the category of the oils which would bear the excise tax if used for edible purposes. Since they are not used for edible purposes in the United States, it should be satisfactory to leave them within the amendment as I have proposed it.

Let me call attention to the fact that there is another consideration involved in placing these excise taxes on the oils and fats which we import from the various countries with which we enjoy the balance of trade. I desire to introduce into the RECORD a statement of the trade which we have with the countries from which these oils and fats come. (See table.)

One of the important agricultural items which we export to the countries from which these oils and fats, such as palm oil, come is lard. We have been exporting about 50 percent of our lard to Great Britain, from whom, or her dependencies, we procure about 50 percent of our palm-oil importations. I quote from an article appearing in the March 31 issue of the National Provisioner, published at Chicago, Ill. The portion I desire to read is as follows:

> Commission-house buying on resting orders was encountered on on the declines, and there was some buying of lard based on the relative steadiness in cotton oil. The lard trade was puzzled somewhat over possible future developments, particularly should the proposed 3-cent-a-pound tax against imported oils be adopted by Congress.
> There were fears in a great many quarters that foreigners would take adverse action against lard imports. In fact, Germany further restricted imports of American products. As a result, the foreign situation in lard was attracting more attention. Foreign exchange rates ruled rather firm.

It can be seen from this that the exporters of lard are frightened as to the prospect of what will happen to our lard exports if we put these taxes on. Please bear in mind that this agitation for these taxes began back in December 1933; and let me call your attention to the fact that this article states also that lard exports from January 1, 1934, to March 17, 1934, have dropped from 160,000,000 pounds at the same time last year to ninety-five and a half million pounds at this time. You can see what the threat of levying these excise taxes is resulting in.

I do not believe that the foreign nations will object to our keeping the oils and fats out of edible channels in the United States, and if we adopt this amendment whereby the oils and fats are allowed to come into the United States and be used for nonedible or medicinal purposes, it will doubtless clarify the situation to the complete satisfaction of our foreign customers. This is just another reason why the amendment as proposed should be adopted.

I ask that the table to which I have referred and an article from the National Provisioner may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table and article were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROVISION AND LARD MARKETS—WEEKLY REVIEW

MARKET FAIRLY ACTIVE—UNDERTONE EASY—HOG RUN MODERATE—HOGS STEADY—RELIEF BUYING FACTOR—CASH TRADE MODERATE—GRAIN WEAKNESS DEPRESSING

Market for hog products continued to display a disappointing trend. Undertone was easy as a result of scattered selling and liquidation and less aggressive speculative support. While the hog run was moderate and hogs steady, the market generally continued to ignore relief buying and was influenced, in the main, by weakness in the grain market caused by fears of governmental action against exchange operations.

Commission-house buying on resting orders was encountered on the declines, and there was some buying of lard based on the relative steadiness in cotton oil. The lard trade was puzzled somewhat over possible future developments, particularly should the proposed 3-cent-a-pound tax against imported oils be adopted by Congress.

There were fears in a great many quarters that foreigners would take adverse action against lard imports. In fact, Germany further restricted imports of American products. As a result, the foreign situation in lard was attracting more attention. Foreign-exchange rates ruled rather firm.

HOG PRICES LOWER

Hedge pressure was in evidence at times, but was very moderate. Professionals appeared to be on both sides of lard. There was no inclination to press the market owing to fears of possible inflation developments at Washington. At the same time, the Lenten season is rapidly drawing to a close, and as a result there was a tendency to look for considerable improvement in the domestic demand for meats. Some were looking for a fair decrease in the lard stocks the last half of the present month.

Receipts of hogs at western packing points last week were 367,700 head, compared with 398,400 head the previous week and 396,900 head the same week last year.

Average price of hogs at Chicago at the outset of the week was 4.25 cents, against 4.40 cents the previous week, 3.90 cents a year ago, 4.20 cents 2 years ago, and 7.65 cents 3 years ago. Top price of hogs at Chicago, however, was very steady, holding around 4.55 cents.

Average weight of hogs received at Chicago last week was 236 pounds, against 233 pounds the previous week, 247 pounds a year ago, and 233 pounds 2 years ago.

Reports from the A.A.A. from 42 States indicated that between 900,000 and 1,000,000 contracts had been signed to date in the corn-hog adjustment program. The sign-up campaign is nearing completion in a number of States. Reports from the major corn- and hog-producing States indicate that approximately 160,000 contracts have been signed in Iowa, 110,000 in Illinois, 94,000 in Missouri, 82,000 in Indiana, 75,000 in Minnesota, 80,000 in Nebraska, 60,000 in Kansas, 60,000 in Ohio, 50,000 in South Dakota, and 33,000 in Wisconsin. In Oklahoma 40,000 are expected to sign up, and in Texas 25,000 have been signed to date. Colorado expects a total of 12,000; Tennessee, approximately 20,000.

LARD EXPORTS DROP

Official exports of lard for the week ended March 17 were 5,599,000 pounds, against 8,758,000 pounds a year ago. Exports from January 1 to March 17 have been some 95,477,000 pounds, against 160,637,000 pounds the same time last year. Of the week's exports only 786,000 pounds went to Germany, 288,000 pounds to Cuba, 3,622,000 pounds to the United Kingdom, 489,000 pounds to other European countries, and 414,000 pounds to other countries. Exports of hams and shoulders during the week were 207,000 pounds, against 573,000 pounds; bacon, 560,000 pounds against 95,000 pounds; pickled pork, 91,000 pounds against 129,000 pounds.

The Government was a buyer of hogs in a fair way at Chicago throughout the week. Aside from maintaining a steady tone to the hog market, governmental activities in provisions was again without effect. Passage of the cotton bill was delayed in the Senate for one reason or another, but the prospects of cotton production being limited, with a consequent smaller output of cotton oil, was considered by some as constructive on lard for the long pull.

Pork: Market was steady, but demand moderate at New York. Mess was quoted at $20.25 per barrel; family, $21 per barrel; fat backs, $15 and $16 per barrel.

MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANIES AND CAPITAL-STOCK TAX—AMENDMENT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 7835, the revenue bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the House bill contained no provision levying capital-stock and excess-profits taxes. The Finance Committee presented an amendment, which has been adopted by the Senate, providing for a capital-stock tax of one tenth of 1 percent. Certain exceptions are made to these capital-stock taxes, and these exemptions are in section 701 (c), page 238 of the bill. Among the exemptions are insurance companies subject to the tax imposed by sections 201 and 204.

However, insurance companies which have no capital stock whatever, such as mutual companies, and which are subject to the tax under section 207, are not specifically exempted.

Since these companies have no capital stock there was no intention to impose a capital-stock tax on them and, therefore, this amendment is merely in the nature of a clarification of that purpose.

In order to accomplish this, all that is necessary is to change the wording of section 701 (c) (2), line 16, page 238, by the addition of the numerals "207" and the transposition of the word "or" and the addition of a comma.

TAX ON WATCHES—AMENDMENT

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I also submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to House bill 7835, the revenue bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the classification of certain watches as luxury items is unfair. In view of the urgent need for revenue in 1932, and the assurance that these excise taxes were temporary, the watch industry submitted without serious objection to a tax on what it believed to be items of necessity.

Since the Finance Committee in the case of clocks and furs has recognized that some items classified as luxuries are really necessities, the industry feels it is entitled to the exemption of watches not of the luxury class. This exemption should at least include watches sold by the manufacturer for less than $25.

It would be impossible for many industries to function without timepieces. For example, railroads cannot operate unless rigid standards of time are adhered to in the operation of trains. Every railroad or street-car employee engaged in the operation of trains or cars is required to carry a carefully regulated watch. This he buys from his wages. Some 987,000 men come within this category on the steam railroads alone. In addition to these, nurses, doctors, clerks, and superintendents in charge of industrial activities must operate with almost split-second accuracy.

The elimination of this tax would put additional men to work, as watch manufacturing is 80- to 90-percent labor.

A manufacturers' tax of $2.50 becomes $7 or $8 by the time it reaches the consumer.

It appears inconsistent to eliminate the tax on clocks, which are now exempt up to $3, and which really represents clocks that might be classified as luxuries, while classifying as an item of luxury watches that sell for $5, $10, $20, and so forth, and which enter into the everyday life of our citizens.

The revenue derived from the entire jewelry industry last year amounted to only $3,068,000.

The committee has already exempted clocks, and the exemption of watches selling for less than $25 would cause no great loss in revenue, and would be more than compensated for by increased employment.

If the tax on watches classified as necessities is removed, the increased income from corporation and income taxes accruing to the Government from increased business and profits will render the Government a greater return than now received from this tax.

MOTHER'S DAY

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following resolution (S.Res. 218), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas by House Joint Resolution 263, approved and signed by President Wilson, May 8, 1914, the second Sunday in May of each year has been designated as Mother's Day for the expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of our country; and

Whereas there are throughout our land today an unprecedentedly large number of mothers and dependent children who, because of unemployment or loss of their bread earners, are lacking many of the necessities of life: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon our citizens to express, on Mother's Day this year, our love and reverence for motherhood;

(a) By the customary display of the United States flag on all Government buildings, homes, and other suitable places;

(b) By the usual tokens and messages of affection to our mothers; and

(c) By making contributions, in honor of our mothers, through our churches or other fraternal and welfare agencies, for the relief and welfare of such mothers and children as may be in need of the necessities of life.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE OF A RESOLUTION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask that Senate Resolution 198, creating a select committee to investigate charges against the superintendent of the Shiloh National Park, Tenn., be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. It was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but under a later rule it is required to go to the Military Affairs Committee, and I ask unanimous consent that the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate may be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs before being considered by the Audit and Control Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL CLERICAL ASSISTANCE FOR SENATORS

Mr. BYRNES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Resolution 213, which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 213) submitted by Mr. BYRNES on March 22, 1934, and reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That whenever, during the remainder of the present session of Congress, a Senator, having no more than four employees in his clerical force, or in that of the committee of which he is chairman, shall file with the Chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a statement showing the necessity for an additional clerical assistant to enable him to discharge the duties of his office, such Senator may appoint one assistant clerk to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate at $1,800 per annum until the end of the present session of Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BYRNES. I offer an amendment to the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On line 2, after the word "Senator", it is proposed to strike out "having no more than four employees in his clerical force, or in that of the committee of which he is chairman."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

NATIONAL RECOVERY—THE NEW DEAL'S BALANCE SHEET

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask to have printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table an editorial appearing in the New York Daily News of March 11, 1934, having relation to the National Recovery Administration and to the new deal's balance sheet.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL RECOVERY ADMINISTRATION—THE NEW DEAL'S BALANCE SHEET

[An editorial appearing in the New York Daily News, Mar. 11, 1934]

We all know that some groups in our social and economic system have profited from the new deal; some large groups.

Workers working shorter hours at the same or only a little less pay have profited. Farmers paid by the Government for reducing or swearing they have reduced acreage have profited. So have millions of people on C.W.A., C.C.C., or other forms of Government relief. So have employers who before the N.R.A. were being undercut by unfair competitors employing child labor or using other cutthroat competition methods.

Naturally, few complaints are heard from these people about the new deal—except in the form of howls for an even bigger and faster new deal.

Who's losing under the new deal, if anybody is, up to now?

The bulk of the complaining is being done by industrialists; business people who say the money to pay for all these benefits is being gouged out of their pockets without adequate return.

It sounds reasonable, and it has worried many people; has made them fear that industry can't carry the burden indefinitely, and will sooner or later be forced into curtailed activity if not into wide-spread bankruptcies.

The National City Bank of New York has just published a table of figures which ought to console a lot of people who are worried about the new deal's dollars-and-cents outlook.

This table shows comparative profits or losses rolled up in 37 major industrial groups in the years 1932 and 1933. It is worth running through rather carefully, we think. The letter D means that old 1932 devil deficit; figures without a D mean profits.

Miscellaneous services	54	3,148,000	3,034,000
Total		D 45,802,000	440,643,000

There we have the balance sheet on the new deal's first year. It totals up to a net deficit for America's major industries in 1932 of almost $46,000,000, as against a net profit in 1933 of $440,000,000.

These figures show that the new deal in its first year began making money not only for labor and agriculture but for large and important elements of business; that it began paying its own way, by and large, from the start.

We think a lot of industrial critics of the new deal would do well to stop squawking and pay more attention to cultivating the new home markets the new deal is opening up for them.

ARMY DAY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, tomorrow will be Army Day. In reference thereto, I send to the desk two letters, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, March 2, 1934.

Lt. Col. GEORGE E. IJAMS,
Commander in Chief Military Order of the World War,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR COLONEL IJAMS: The celebration of Army Day on April 6 each year, commemorating as it does our entrance into the World War, indicates, in part, the gratitude of our Nation to our Army, which so valiantly has served this country in its every emergency.

I wish to offer on this Army Day my best wishes to the men comprising the components of our land forces, the Regular Army, the National Guard, and the Organized Reserves.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS,
MILITARY ORDER OF THE WORLD WAR,
Washington, D.C., April 3, 1934.

Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD,
Chairman Military Affairs Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR SHEPPARD: On Friday, April 6, there will be celebrated Army Day, the sixteenth anniversary of America's entrance into the World War.

Army Day, which was inaugurated 6 years ago by the Military Order of the World War and which has ever since been sponsored by our organization, will be celebrated throughout the United States and its insular possessions by parades, drills, meetings, and banquets, the purpose being to once a year bring to the attention of our citizens the ideals of the Army and what it stands for in times of peace.

The President of the United States, as well as the Governors of our several States and mayors of our various cities, have issued statements and proclamations in honor of the day.

I am taking the liberty of enclosing herewith a photographic copy of President Roosevelt's statement, which, together with this letter may be incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 5, for the interest of the Members of the United States Senate.

There will be a large parade of military, National Guard, cadet, and veteran organizations which will pass the east plaza of the Capitol promptly at 1:30 p.m. on the afternoon of April 6. Those Members of the Senate who are interested are cordially invited to review the parade from the Capitol steps. It will take not more than 1 hour to pass.

With every good wish, I am, sincerely yours,

EDWIN S. BETTELHEIM, Jr.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I hope all Senators who can conveniently do so will repair to the Capitol steps tomorrow at 1:30 o'clock p.m. and view the Army Day parade.

DISPOSITION OF INDIAN LANDS

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the last time we had a call of the calendar in the Senate, Senate bill no. 1135, having to do with a new plan for determining the heirs of deceased Indians and the disposition of their property, was passed. It is an administration bill. I find that an identical bill was passed by the House and is now with the Committee on Indian Affairs. That is the bill (H.R. 5075) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1910, as amended.

I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Indian affairs be discharged from further consideration of the House bill (No. 5075) the title of which I have just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. FRAZIER. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the House bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota explain what the bill is?

Mr. FRAZIER. It is an administration bill having to do with determining the heirs of deceased Indians and the disposition of their property by a better method than prevailed under the old law.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection.

There being no objection, the bill (H.R. 5075) to amend section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes", approved June 25, 1910, as amended, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act to provide for determining the heirs of deceased Indians, for the disposition and sale of allotments of deceased Indians, for the leasing of allotments, and for other purposes" (36 Stat. 855), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That when any Indian to whom an allotment of land has been made, or may hereafter be made, dies before the expiration of the trust period and before the issuance of a fee simple patent, without having made a will disposing of said allotment as hereinafter provided, the Secretary of the Interior, upon notice and hearing, under such rules as he may prescribe, shall ascertain the legal heirs of such decedent, and his decision thereon shall be final and conclusive. If the Secretary of the Interior decides the heir or heirs of such decedent competent to manage their own affairs, he shall issue to such heir or heirs a patent in fee for the allotment of such decedent; if he shall decide one or more of the heirs to be incompetent, he may, in his discretion, cause such lands to be sold: Provided, That if the Secretary of the Interior shall find that the lands of the decedent are capable of partition to the advantage of the heirs, he may cause the shares of such as are competent, upon their petition, to be set aside and patents in fee to be issued to them therefor. All sales of lands allotted to Indians authorized by this or any other act shall be made under such rules and regulations and upon such terms as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, and he shall require a deposit of 10 percent of the purchase price at the time of the sale. Should the purchaser fail to comply with the terms of sale prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, the amount so paid shall be forfeited; in case the balance of the purchase price is to be paid on such deferred payments, all payments made, together with all interest paid on such deferred installments, shall be so forfeited for failure to comply with the terms of the sale. All forfeitures shall inure to the benefit of the allottee or his heirs. Upon payment of the purchase price in full the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be issued to the purchaser patent in fee for such land: Provided, That the proceeds of the sale of inherited lands shall be paid to such heir or heirs as may be competent and held in trust subject to use and expenditure during the trust period for such heir or heirs as may be incompetent as their respective interests shall appear: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to issue a certificate of competency, upon application therefor, to any Indian, or in case of his death to his heirs, to whom a patent in fee containing restrictions on alienation has been, or may hereafter be, issued, and such certificate shall have the effect of removing the restrictions on alienation contained in such patent: Provided further, That hereafter any United States Indian agent, superintendent, or other disbursing agent of the Indian Service may deposit Indian moneys, individual or tribal, coming into his hands as custodian, in such bank or banks as he may select: Provided, That the bank or banks so selected by him shall first execute to the said disbursing agent a bond, with approved surety, in such amount as will properly safeguard the funds to be deposited. Such bonds shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I now enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the identical Senate bill no. 1135 was passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

Mr. FRAZIER. I move that the House be requested to return to the Senate the Senate bill no. 1135.

The motion was agreed to.

AMERICA MUST DEFEND HERSELF—ARTICLE BY HON. JAMES W. GERARD

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I send to the desk an article appearing in Liberty magazine of the issue of April 7, 1934, by Hon. James W. Gerard, former United States Ambassador to Germany, entitled "America Must Defend Herself", which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Liberty, Apr. 7, 1934]

"AMERICA MUST DEFEND HERSELF"—A PLEA FOR AN ECONOMIC DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

(By James W. Gerard, chairman of the Committee for America Self-Contained, former United States Ambassador to Germany)

Last year Japan swamped the United States with 79,000,000 electric-light bulbs. Japan can undersell American manufacturers because of her low standard of living. However, it is not only the Japanese against whom America must defend herself industrially but the whole world.

The committee of which I am chairman is submitting the following principles to the American people:

1. America's interests are basically different from those of other nations.

We must start by solving our own problems.

2. Science has made America self-contained.

There are now very few essentials that we cannot grow or make. Consequently we are free to choose our international trade contacts and to import and export at will.

3. Self-containment spells plenty for Americans.

Once we are free from entangling alliances we can distribute our plentiful resources among our own people.

4. We can abolish our poverty only by freeing ourselves from the world's poverty.

Now is the time to build for the future of the American standard of living.

5. We must put our foreign trade on a sound bookkeeping basis.

Call it barter if you will. It is a matter of simple arithmetic. We need coffee, tea, rubber, cocoa, sugar, raw silk, some tropical fruits, tin, manganese, and some lesser metals. Aside from these, we can produce everything we need within our own borders. We can dispense with silk by substituting rayon. We can grow tropical fruit in our own possessions. We are progressing toward self-containment in potash and nitrates; looking forward to it even in rubber. However, for some things we depend upon foreign nations, and will for some time to come. But we can choose the markets from which to buy. We should never buy where we cannot sell. And we propose to reserve for American labor the manufacture of our raw materials.

Above all, as Samuel Crowther points out in his book, America Self-Contained, we must extricate ourselves from economic illusion. The war loans turned us "export crazy." We set out to capture the trade of the world. Had we kept bookkeeping accounts of these transactions we might have asked ourselves whether our debtors would have the capacity to pay in money, or how they could repay us in goods without crippling or destroying American industries. We learned nothing even after the crash of 1920. We kept no international ledger. By 1924 our bankers were again squandering loans abroad. Three crusades followed:

The crusade of salesmen—who found that they could sell anything anywhere on credit.

The bankers' crusade. They found no bad credit risks anywhere.

The crusade of captains of industry. Among other things, they installed plants abroad which manufactured articles we had formerly supplied.

The Department of Commerce estimates our private long-term investments abroad by the end of 1932 at more than $15,000,000,000. We proceeded on the theory that the money which we were so freely scattering in Europe would purchase American goods. The facts do not support this theory. The exports by no means increased with the loans. Much of the money went to purchase American securities and to create demand deposits, which amounted to some $3,000,000,000 in 1929. This means, according to Mr. Crowther, that we gave to foreigners the right to claim and ship overseas practically the entire gold stock of the United States. In other words, we gave to foreign interests the right to control our domestic credit.

Nor is this all. Part of our money was used to equip foreign plants with American machinery which eventually made foreign countries independent of our products. We shipped goods for I O U's. We lent money to destroy our own business.

What we need is a broad tariff policy adapted to the principles of self-containment. To have this:

1. Raise tariffs upon all manufactured goods to such heights that all foreign goods will be put into the extreme luxury class.

2. Prohibit the import of any raw materials which we mine or grow or that our chemistry can now produce.

3. Certain safeguards would have to be taken to avoid inconveniences caused by shortages. There is no point, furthermore, in striving for self-containment at one bound. Since we do not need to purchase from abroad, our imports would be incidental to collecting debts.

Taking the 1922–26 averages, our restricted imports would amount to about one and one half billions as against nearly four billions during the same period. The actual amount, however, would be regulated by the reading in our international balance.

President Roosevelt's note to the London Conference emphasized the basic idea of American self-containment. The National Recovery Act is a step in the same direction.

Through perfect balance, free of disruptive foreign influence and with all international money dealings passing through and visaed by the Federal Reserve banks, we would control all factors in our domestic economy and plentifully distribute our great wealth among ourselves. Then, and only then, shall we cease to be at the mercy of too much or too little rain in far parts of the earth, or of speculators in continental bourses.

We have paid and shall continue to pay dearly for our mistakes. We should profit by them. We know the factors with which we must deal. We see the direction in which our recovery and prosperity lie. United, we must head that way.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, requested a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. JONES, Mr. FULMER, Mr. DOXEY, Mr. HOPE, and Mr. KINZER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 326) referring the claims of the Turtle Mountain Band or Bands of Chippewa Indians of North Dakota to the Court of Claims for adjudication and settlement with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know whether the Senator from Louisiana desires recognition at this time or not. The RECORD shows that a unanimous-consent agreement was entered into on yesterday afternoon, to which the Senator from Louisiana said he would agree, provided he was recognized this morning. Is the Senator from Louisiana seeking recognition?

Mr. LONG. I am.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I send to the desk two amendments to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD for information, and to be printed and lie on the table.

The amendments submitted by Mr. CLARK are as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. CLARK to the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, viz: On page 13, line 14, strike out "in excess of the credit against net income provided in section 26."

On page 14, at the end of line 20, insert the following:

"Interest upon obligations of the United States or its possessions, or of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia; or upon obligations of any instrumentality of the United States or any possession thereof, or of any instrumentality of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or of the District of Columbia, shall be included in gross income."

On page 16, beginning with line 23, strike out through line 19, on page 17.

On page 19, beginning in line 23, strike out "on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry, or the proceeds of which were used to purchase or carry, obligations or securities (other than obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917, and originally subscribed for by the taxpayer) the interest upon which is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title, or."

On page 30, strike out lines 5 to 17, inclusive.

On page 33, strike out lines 12 to 18, inclusive.

On page 137, lines 16 and 17 and lines 21 and 22, strike out "in excess of the credit provided in subsection (c) of this section."

On page 138, strike out lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

On page 138, strike out beginning with line 24 down through line 2, on page 139.

On page 141, strike out after "indebtedness", in line 8, down through "title", in line 14.

On page 146, strike out lines 9 to 12, inclusive.

On page 146, strike out beginning in line 23 down through line 3, on page 147.

On page 159, line 10, strike out "in addition to the credit provided in section 26".

On page 245, after line 13, insert the following: "If the application of this act with respect to the taxation of the interest upon any obligation of the United States or its possessions, or of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or the District of Columbia, or upon any obligation of any instrumentality of the United States or any possession thereof, or of any instrumentality of any State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof, or of the District of Columbia, is held unconstitutional, so that the interest on such obligation is held to be wholly exempt from Federal income taxation, no deduction shall be allowed on interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry such obligation."

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. CLARK to the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, viz: On page 237, after line 20, to insert the following:

"SEC. —. Termination of tax on certain imported articles: The tax imposed by the following paragraphs of section 601(c) of the Revenue Act of 1932 shall not apply to articles imported after the date of the enactment of this act: Paragraph (1) (relating to lubricating oils); paragraph (4) (relating to crude petroleum and refined products thereof); paragraph (5) (relating to coal); paragraph (6) (relating to lumber); and paragraph (7) (relating to copper and copper products).

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. This morning I was approached by gentlemen interested in furs. They seem to be quite distressed over a section of the bill adopted yesterday. What can the Senator from Mississippi tell me about that section?

Mr. HARRISON. What happened with reference to fur was that the House made no change in the text of the bill as reported to the House. When the bill came to the Senate Committee on Finance, the committee recommended that furs of $20 or less in value be exempted from the tax, and that provision was adopted yesterday by the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. That is to say, those interested in the fur business are that much better off than they were under the bill as it came from the House?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. Was the committee in unity in the belief that that was the best that could be done?

Mr. HARRISON. That was their uniform belief.

Mr. COPELAND. Does the Senator believe it would be useless for me to press the matter further at this time?

Mr. HARRISON. I am afraid the Senator might lose what we have gained.

Mr. COPELAND. Then, I think perhaps I had better not press it further. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FESS. Are we operating under a limitation of debate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] has had the floor 4 minutes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I did not know my time was being used. However, I am not going to need the entire 30 minutes to which I am entitled.

On yesterday my friend the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS] propounded a question to me, the full effect of which I did not grasp at the time, and I did not make the answer which I would have made had I understood his inquiry. I want to take the opportunity while the Senator from Ohio is here to give him a better answer. I have quite a little authority for the answer which I am going to make.

The Senator from Ohio wanted to know what is going to be done with men like the man who runs the National Cash Register business and other equally important men of that type. The Senator seems to think that any effort to strike at the amount of fortunes such men hold is an indictment against the men themselves. Yet the facts are that these men are today enveloping themselves in a sea that is paralyzed in business. They cannot trade with one another and go very far.

I venture the statement today that a large part of the physical property of Mr. Patterson, of the National Cash Register Co., is tied up in his own plants. He has probably spent in that way a great deal of the earnings he has had in other lines before this year. Today these very men, big and strong as they are, find themselves with nobody for customers except themselves; that is, to an extent that is not compensatory in the businesses they are operating.

I found last night a book from which I quoted sometime ago, and I took occasion to extract a few paragraphs from it. I am going to ask the clerk to read the extract. I have digested several hundred pages into a couple of typewritten sheets, and I hope I may have the careful attention of the Senate as the clerk reads.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Extracted from the Epic of America, by James Truslow Adams]

Conditions adapted for a more or less equalitarian society, combined with the new technology, began to create an unprecedented gulf between the wage earner and the incipient billionaire. * * * The size of individual fortunes had been growing with each generation * * * in an alarming degree. * * * There seemed room for everything except the heart of man and the old independence of the individual to work out his own life and scale of values * * * (prior to 1914). We had our minds intensely focused on moral problems and the effort to work out ways and means of making our own land a better and cleaner one in all its aspects. * * * The progress that was at last being made in controlling instead of destroying big business all seemed to promise the nearer fulfillment of the American dream. Suddenly the whole of western European civilization appeared to have burst into flames. * * *

Statistics when used nationally can be very misleading, and although it was true that the national wealth had been enormously increased and that the country was prosperous, the new wealth was very unevenly distributed. * * * In a modern industrial state an economic base is essential for all. We point with pride to our national income, but the Nation is only an aggregate of individual men and women, and when we turn from the single figure of total income to the incomes of individuals, we find a marked injustice in its distribution. There is no reason why wealth, which is a social product, should not be more equitably controlled and distributed in the interests of society. * * *

A system that steadily increases the gulf between the ordinary man and the superrich, that permits the resources of society to be gathered into personal fortunes that afford their owners millions of income a year, with only the chance that here and there a few may be moved to confer some of their surplus upon the public in ways chosen wholly by themselves, is assuredly a wastefull and unjust system. * * * Nor is it likely to be voluntarily altered by those who benefit most by it. No ruling class has ever willingly abdicated.

The members of the Morgan and Rockefeller groups together (about 1903—it is far worse now) held 341 directorships in 112 banks, railroads, insurance, and other corporations, having aggregate resources under their control of $22,245,000,000. In an after-dinner speech, one of the group made the tactical mistake of declaring that it had been said that the business of the United States was then controlled by 12 men, of whom he was one, and that the statement was true. This remark, made among friends, was deleted from the printed report of the speech when given to the public, but the public was well enough aware of the general situation without such an admission. Never before had such colossal power concentrated so rapidly into the hands of a few, whether we consider the resources and income at their command, the population affected by their orders and acts, or the millions of persons in their direct employ.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that statement was made in 1903 at a meeting of bankers. As the incident is recorded by Mr. Adams in his very splendid book called "The Epic of America", one of them rose and said:

The statement has been made that 12 men in America control all of its business.

He said:

I am here to tell you that that is true, and I am one of the 12.

That statement was deleted from some of the current newspaper reports; but the fact that it was made is well known, and it is recorded by Mr. Adams in this splendid book that has been given to the country. Today there is only one difference: Instead of there being 12 men who control the business of America, Mr. President, there probably are not more than 4 today.

When you go outside the pale of influence in business of the Rockefeller families and the Morgan connections and the Mellon connections you go outside the business of America; and their influence even extends into foreign countries.

There is not a business in America today, there is not any kind of an industry in America today; there are not in the whole United States today as many people as could be put on the soil of this city alone, whose business is not directly or indirectly controlled by the three fortune-holding elements of Morgan, Mellon, and Rockefeller. The only difference is that today there are 3 instead of 12. There is not a single institution of any magnitude at all in America today that is not in their grasp and in their control; and, beyond that, their influence is such that it affects everything else, regardless of how little or how big it is, even to the tie hacker who works away in the woods by himself.

I spoke so long on this subject yesterday afternoon that I am going to conclude by sending up to the desk what I extracted from the Bible last night in addition to what I handed in yesterday.

The laws of the Scripture which I gave to the Senate yesterday are in the report of the speech I made. There were certain things enjoined upon us and certain things forbidden by these laws. In addition, there was a statement as to what would happen to a country that observed these laws, and what would happen to a country that did not observe these laws. I am going to send to the desk some further extracts I have made, and ask the clerk to give me the benefit of his voice in reading them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the clerk will read, as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

If ye walk in my statutes * * * ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely.

And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid.

* * * * * * *

And if ye shall despise my statutes, or * * * break my covenant * * * I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague * * * and cause sorrow of heart. (Leviticus 26:3–17.)

Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the Lord * * *? for they would not walk in His ways, neither were they obedient unto His law. (Isaiah 42:24.)

Did not Moses give you the law, and yet none of you keepeth the law? (St. John 7:19.)

Mr. LONG. And thus, today, America ignores God's law; it allows all wealth and income to be concentrated in the hands of the few, while the millions starve in the midst of plenty.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I note the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]; and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum being suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement as to the differences between the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin and the action of the Committee on Finance, as well as of the House.

I shall make no attempt to reply to surplus remarks made on yesterday. I shall offer no defense of what this side of the aisle did during the Hoover administration. It needs no defense on the part of good Democrats, and I am sure the country appreciates the fact, when men charged with a high responsibility here attempt to cooperate in trying to bring this country back to economic normalcy.

Of course, the leader on this side of the aisle needs no eulogy from me, because what is in my heart, my estimate of him and his labors and services here, are shared by every Member of the Senate on both sides of the aisle, with possibly one exception.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAILEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. In speaking of the leadership, I had more particularly in mind, as well as anybody else, the Senator from Mississippi. I was not speaking only of the Senator from Arkansas. When I spoke of the leadership, I think the Senator knows I certainly had him in mind for the tax policy he has pursued. He need make no defense of anyone else; let him take care of himself.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad the Senator looks on me as being included in the leadership. But if others care no more about his estimate of me than I care about it, it makes no difference, because in my view the opinion of the Senator from Louisiana is less respected by the Membership of this body as a whole and by the country than that of any other Senator here.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to proceed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to proceed.

Mr. LONG. A parliamentary inquiry. Would it be pertinent for it to be shown that the people of Mississippi thought so little of the Senator's opinions as to elect as Governor someone other than the candidate of the Senator?

Mr. HARRISON. The people of Mississippi have been quite generous to me. I have never been defeated for political office yet, and I will be a candidate for reelection when the time comes.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to discuss the matter before us. Men honestly differ on the question of the rates of taxation which should be imposed. I have the highest regard for the opinions of those Senators who believe that high surtaxes should be imposed, because in most instances they believe that that is the proper thing to do. Those of us who do not support every amendment that is offered to increase the high surtaxes should not be put in the category of those who are not in favor of the imposition of fair and equitable taxes. The history of the Democratic Party shows that it believes in the income tax, that it believes it is a fair tax, and that people should pay according to ability to pay.

It was not so long ago, in 1913, that the first income tax was imposed, and at that time the normal tax was 1 percent. In 1916 it was raised to 2 percent. Following that the taxes were increased, and just for the RECORD and for the information of Senators I shall give the figures.

In 1918 when the war was on and we needed money, we increased the normal rates to 6 and 12 percent, and the surtax to 65 percent. That is the highest surtax we have ever imposed in the history of the country.

When the Treasury began to recoup we immediately reduced the normal rates to 4 and 8 percent, leaving the surtax at 65 percent until 1921. Then we began to pile up surpluses, as the Senate remembers, and in 1922 we all joined, without division, in reducing the income taxes. In other words, the opinion was that no country could prosper if it tried to exact more taxes from the people than were required for the ordinary expenses of the Government; and that is a very just principle to follow, and a very true theory.

In 1924, 2 years later, when surpluses were piling up, and the country was more prosperous, we reduced the normal rates still further, to 2, 4, and 6 percent, and reduced the surtax to 40 percent.

In 1930 we reduced the normal rates again, to 1½ and 3 and 5 percent, and the surtax down to as low as 20 percent.

In 1932 we needed money, and we increased the taxes again, the normal rates from 1½, 3, and 5 percent to 4 and 8 percent, and we increased the surtax in the highest brackets from 20 percent to 55 percent, and today under the law the highest surtaxes are 63 percent.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber? I am sure every Senator wishes to hear the remarks of the Senator from Mississippi.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the highest surtax today in the highest brackets is 63 percent. In other words, 63 cents out of every dollar, in the highest brackets, goes into the Treasury of the United States in the form of income tax. We are not letting wealth get out so badly in that regard.

In the pending bill we have reduced the normal tax, in order to catch the tax-exempt securities, from 8 to 4 percent, and we have given a corresponding increase in surtaxes, making the surtax 59 percent. So, if the committee amendment shall be agreed to and this bill shall be enacted, in the highest brackets 63 cents out of every dollar will be paid to the Federal Government. So no one can say that we are not making wealth pay its just proportion of the expense of running the Government.

In addition to that, Mr. President, in the bill we have increased the existing 1-percent penalty on consolidated returns of corporations to 2 percent, and the last time we passed a revenue bill we increased the rate on corporations to 13¾ percent. Then, too, we have tried to plug the loopholes through which the rich have been evading taxes; and we have plugged them to a large extent. We may not have plugged them in every instance, but certainly the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance have been most diligent in trying to so frame the law that the rich might not escape their just taxes.

Mr. President, let us see what has been the effect of what we have done. If I believed that the adoption of the pending amendment would hasten economic recovery and result in the collection of more taxes, I would support it. I may be wrong in my opinion, but I have a belief, which amounts to a conviction, that there is a certain line to which we may go, and that if we go beyond that we will hamper legitimate investment. If the La Follette amendment were the law, if a man who had money to invest were required to pay as taxes 77 cents out of every dollar he earned, what would he do? Would he go into the uncertainties and the doubts and the hazards of some business investment which might employ labor, which might take up the unemployment of the country? No; he would invest in tax-exempt securities.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator stated that my amendment would take 77 cents out of every dollar.

Mr. HARRISON. In the highest brackets.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator means that, taking the surtax and the normal tax rate and adding them together, it would take 77 cents out of every dollar of income above a million dollars.

Mr. HARRISON. I said in the highest brackets, and adding the normal tax and the surtax. Of course, exemptions come out.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I simply wanted to correct the Senator's statement, because he said it would be 77 cents out of every dollar an individual earned, and that is not correct. It is in the top brackets, that part of the income above a million dollars, on which the individual would pay that rate.

Mr. HARRISON. I said in the highest bracket, which is over a million dollars.

Mr. President, if a majority of the Senate think we would get the men of great wealth to put money in capital investment after any such increase in surtaxes as is proposed, then vote this amendment into the bill. However, the record discloses that every time we have increased the taxes to such high figures, with perhaps one exception, the revenue has fallen off, and that when we have reduced the taxes to more moderate rates money has poured into legitimate investment, and the Government has received larger returns in revenue.

Here are the facts in relation to that matter. In 1918, during the war, when the normal rates were 6 and 12 percent, and the surtax was 65 percent, the income-tax returns showed $1,128,000,000. In 1928, when the normal tax rates were 1½, 3 and 5 percent, and the surtax maximum was only 20 percent, the returns showed $1,164,000,000.

When we increased the normal rates of tax of 1½ and 3 and 5 to 4 and 8 percent, and the surtax to 55 percent, in 1932, the revenues of the Government dropped off from $477,000,000, the return in 1930, to $325,000,000, returned in 1932. I could go down the line and cite the figures to show that that has been quite the record of the Treasury.

Mr. President, much is said about the consolidation of wealth; and there is too much consolidation of wealth. The Senator from Wisconsin has offered an amendment, following the action of the Finance Committee, recommending an increase in the estate tax. It is through high estate taxes that we can dissolve large consolidations of wealth. That is where we touch the rich and provide for redistribution of some wealth.

Under the estate tax law prior to 1932 we exempted every estate of $100,000 and less from the payment of an estate tax. In the highest bracket the tax went up to only 20 percent. But in 1932 we reduced the exemption from $100,000 to $50,000, and we raised the highest surtax from 20 percent to 45 percent, and we will receive much money from that. But we propose to go even further in that respect than we went in the 1932 law. The Committee on Finance recommended that the rates be increased from that maximum of 45 percent to 50 percent.

Personally I do not know whether the Senator from Wisconsin wants to accept that recommendation or not. I suggested to him that in his estate-tax amendment, where he proposes to reduce exemptions from $50,000 to $25,000, he reduce the exemption to $40,000. It must not be overlooked that many States tax the small estates quite heavily, and we do not desire to double up on such taxes too much. The committee would accept the suggestion to go as high as a 60-percent tax in the highest brackets on estates and to lower the exemption from $50,000 to $40,000. In that way we might get at the consolidation of wealth and provide for redistribution of large fortunes in this country.

But, Mr. President, when we start to put unreasonably high surtaxes, such as 71 percent, together with the 6-percent normal rate, we are likely to undo what we hope we have done in part and what we are striving to do, which is to start the wheels of industry going, to take up the slack of unemployment, and to continue the program of economic recovery.

Do we need the money at this time? Senators say we do; that we must provide the money for the purpose of giving relief in this country. That is true. We must carry on some relief. But, Mr. President, I know of no Congress that has in a tax bill increased taxes more than the levy of taxes suggested by the administration officials.

Why should we pile up taxes in these times of distress simply to have the money expended lavishly in the building of something that might be put off at this particular time? I know that when we get huge sums of money into the Treasury it is an encouragement to those who hold the purse strings and direct the expenditures to spend more than should be expended.

Mind you, payment day will come, and we ought to try to balance the Budget. We ought to make expenditures and receipts balance. There has been no request from the administration of a proposal to increase taxes more than we have increased them.

The President suggested that $150,000,000 could be raised through administrative changes in the tax law by plugging up the loopholes, and so on.

The bill as it came to us from the House provided for an estimated increase of $258,000,000.

The other day Congress overrode the President's veto. I have no quarrel with any Senator who voted to override the President's veto, and I would be the last one in the Senate to try to criticize Senators for their votes on that occasion. I believe that those who so voted voted conscientiously. I voted to sustain the President's veto. But, Mr. President, let us see what excuse there is now, simply because Senators overrode the President's veto, for piling up higher taxes. The facts are, with reference to what was done by the Senate in overriding the veto, that the cost of government has increased. Here are the facts: It will cost $27,000,000 more for the remainder of this fiscal year to pay what we gave to the employees of the Federal Government. It will cost between $62,000,000 and $70,000,000 more during the next fiscal year to take care of the provisions of that law with respect to increased wages to the Government employees. There is an increase by virtue of the change in the Veterans' Administration to $82,000,000, as carried in the plan adopted by the Congress, from $22,000,000 in the plan suggested by the administration. In other words, there will be an increased expenditure of about $60,000,000 for that purpose. In all, the increase will amount to approximately $150,000,000.

Bear in mind, Senators, that in the President's message concerning the repeal of the eighteenth amendment he or those under him estimated that we would receive from liquor taxes an increase of only $50,000,000. Every expert with whom I have talked believes we will get $200,000,000 from that source, or $150,000,000 more than was suggested in the President's message, as estimated by the Bureau of the Budget, with respect to the liquor tax. So we are not in such terrible condition as some would paint.

Let us not try to put more taxes on the people than are required for the orderly and economic administration of the Government. I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] will be defeated and that the recommendations of the committee will be accepted.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, my friend from Mississippi has taken occasion to make insulting remarks about me——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAILEY in the chair). The Senator from Louisiana is recognized only for the purpose of stating a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. LONG. I am going to state a matter of personal privilege. The Senator from Mississippi, Mr. President, has made a speech here on the floor of the Senate in which he has attacked me personally. He has stated that he knows of no one in the United States Senate whose opinion is so little regarded as mine. He has seen fit to make that remark, and he has seen fit to extend the challenge for the future in political campaigns. He has seen fit to extend a challenge which I did not ask him to extend. I want the Senator to know that his challenge will be accepted.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas will state the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator from Louisiana is not stating a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. LONG. I have some time left on the pending amendment. I have 25 minutes left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the Senator has no time whatever left on the amendment now pending.

Mr. LONG. Then, Mr. President, I will ask whether there is any objection to my replying to the remark that has been made by the Senator from Mississippi concerning myself?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are objections. The Senator may state his question of personal privilege——

Mr. LONG. That is what I am stating.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And confine himself wholly to that.

Mr. LONG. That is all. I am stating a personal matter between myself and the Senator from Mississippi. I do not see why the Senator should have made his statement, Mr. President, in referring to the attack which he says is made on the leadership. I made no attack on the leadership in this body. I stated what the Senator from Mississippi says himself. After having made the attack, he then goes ahead and reaffirms what I stated here on the floor. I said, speaking of what was done with reference to the tax bill which came out of Congress last year——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LONG. No, sir, Mr. President; I do not yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from Louisiana is violating the rule which was agreed to yesterday, to which he subscribed, that no Senator should speak more than once or longer than 30 minutes on the pending amendment.

Mr. LONG. All right; I will yield——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For the second time the Chair will say that the Senator must confine himself wholly to the question of personal privilege.

Mr. LONG. I yield the floor, and I announce that I will speak as soon as the Senate has disposed of the bill. I will then take up the case of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in what I shall say with respect to the pending amendment I am going to assume that everyone in the Senate is acting in good faith. I will only digress long enough to say to the brethren on the other side, how pleasant it is "to see brethren dwell together in unity." I hope when the surface matters have been cleared up we will all look at the pending amendment as one involving the best interests of our common country.

I have no fault to find with a man who is satisfied with the committee amendment, if he believes that the rates provided by it are as high as we should go. I agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that our taxation should be modeled according to the expenditures and in accordance with the expenses of the Government. We have never been presented with a greater need on the part of the Government for the immediate expenditure of money, the appropriation of money, and raising of money than we are presented with at this moment.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] referred to the high tax we levied during the war. Mr. President, at the moment when we levied that tax we were not presented with as difficult a financial condition as confronts us now. Our country was practically free from bonded indebtedness.

As I remember, we levied a tax then that amounted to 67 percent. We went on with the war; we from time to time issued bonds; we loaned eleven billion or twelve billion dollars to other nations engaged in the war, and while that immense debt was confronting us, such a debt as never before had been dreamed of in our country, there came this terrible depression, worse in its economic aspects than any condition which had ever confronted us at any time during the war. There never was a moment when there was any doubt in any man's mind about the stability of our Government or about our ability to raise sufficient funds to prosecute the war; but now we are confronted with another war, presenting in a financial way a greater question than was ever before presented, and we are confronted with that problem at a time when we have the greatest indebtedness we have ever had in the history of our country. So if there ever was an excuse for a high rate of taxation it is now; it is now, Senators, much more than it was during the heat of that terrible war.

It is always unpleasant to levy taxes; it is not an easy task for the legislators to levy them. However, we are now confronted with a necessity because of which we are called upon to do many things we do not like to do. We are confronted with the fact that we are expending, and are very likely going to continue to expend for several years, more money with which to carry on our Government than has ever been expended previously.

The people, the ordinary man and the ordinary woman, cannot stand the burden. We must raise the money somewhere, and, without any ill will, without any intention of imposing a hardship upon anyone, we must go where the money is in order to get it. It is always a wise thing when we are levying a tax to see how much money the taxpayer will have left after he shall have paid his tax. Let us take this amendment. In the first place, remember these incomes are all net, representing what remains after all deductions allowed by law are first taken out. Suppose one has a net income of $10,000—and, Mr. President, millions and millions of our people would shout in joy today if they had anything like a $10,000 income—a man having an income of that amount, if this amendment shall become a law, after he shall have paid his tax, will have left, in round numbers, an income of $9,000. How many of our constituents, how many of our people have such an income? There are millions of them who are suffering because they have no income at all. The imposition of such a tax would not be a hardship. A man who is in receipt of a net income of $10,000 ought to be satisfied if he is left a profit of $9,000.

Suppose the taxpayer has a net income of $25,000. After he had paid his tax, if this amendment should become a law he would have left, in round numbers, $21,500. That would keep the wolf from the door in these times. The man who, after he has paid his tax, has left $21,500 should not have great difficulty in getting along. Most of our people would be satisfied if they had that much property. This, though, is income we are talking about; this is income in 1 year amounting to $21,500 after the tax is paid. If a man has an income of $25,000 he ought to rejoice that he is able, in these days, to make a contribution of $3,500 for the support of his Government that is now on the verge of financial bankruptcy in a great many respects.

But suppose the taxpayer has a net income of $50,000; after he has paid his tax out of that he will have, in round numbers, $37,000 left. That would keep quite a large family. The man who has that much income left is not suffering from want; we have done no hardship to that man, we have not injured him. We have left him not $37,000 of property, but we have left him $37,000 of profit in 1 year. If he had the same income the following year, and so on, he would not live very many years at least until he would feel that there would not be any danger of the poorhouse gathering him in.

Suppose the taxpayer has a net income of a hundred thousand dollars. After he has made his tax contribution to his Government he has $57,000 left. He is pretty well fixed; he has a profit, a net profit, of $57,000. That is more than most men earn in a lifetime of toil. Our constituents at home do not have that much money, including all their property; but we have left the man with an income of $100,000 with a profit in 1 year of $57,000.

I think it is a matter of fairness when our country is in need, when we must somewhere get the money, if we can take it from such men and leave them that much profit in a year. We have not injured them thereby; they can live in luxury; they will not know want; they will not know suffering. We are much easier and much more lenient with him than in the case of the man in the smaller bracket who has only an income sufficient to keep his family, even though he has to pay a very much smaller tax. The man with an income of $100,000 a year will not miss the tax he has to pay; he would not know it if he did not look at his books. He will never stop to count it. The tax absolutely does him no injury.

So, on up, the man with $1,000,000 income will have about $284,000 left him in 1 year.

Mr. COUZENS. I think he will have more than that.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps he will have more than that. He would not know the tax he paid if he had not signed the check and looked at its size. He cannot miss it from his luxurious income. There are not many of these men, and why should we not take this much of a contribution from them?

So, Mr. President, there is not any idea on the part of those who support this amendment of trying to injure someone; there is not any feeling of enmity against a man because of his wealth; there is not any desire to bring a hardship upon anyone, regardless of his wealth; there is not anyone criticizing him because he is wealthy. He ought to be glad; he ought to rejoice that he is able to make a contribution, we can almost say to charity, because he sees all around him millions of his fellow citizens just as honest as he is and just as patriotic asking for alms. Why, when he has this kind of an income, should he not be willing to contribute to his brothers?

The Senator from Mississippi said that the highest bracket in the amendment, being 77 percent, means that out of every dollar earned the millionaire would have to pay 77 cents in tax. The Senator corrected that statement afterward. He was very fair about it, but I want to emphasize it. Many people believe that the highest bracket in the income-tax law attaches to all of a man's income. They should get away from that idea. It does not do anything of the kind. The 77 percent applies only to the excess above $1,000,000 in any one year, and it ought not to make a millionaire feel as though he had been injured when he has to pay that tax. If I have a net income of $1,000,000 a year that I am allowed to keep, and then 77-percent tax is levied on all above that $1,000,000 a year, I would be a hard-hearted man, it seems to me, if I should object when that levy is made to alleviate the sufferings of humanity and to support the Government under whose laws I made the money. If it were not for those laws, no man would have been able to make that much money; but the country that gave him, whether rightly or wrongly, the legal right to make more than a million dollars of net profit in 1 year will, if this amendment shall go into effect, take 77 percent of all excess over and above $1,000,000 a year. The rate that he would pay on his entire income would be much less, depending, of course, upon the size of the income.

The Senator from Mississippi said that such a tax would drive money out of business. Will a man who is getting, we will say, $50,000 a year net, quit business and not make anything because of this tax? Will the man with a net income of $100,000 quit work because of this amendment and do nothing and become a pauper? Will the individual, let us say, who is receiving a salary of $200,000 a year—and some of them get more—say, "Rather than pay this tax I will resign my position and not get anything"? If he has the patriotic spirit we all ought to have, and if he has the love of human kindness in his heart, he ought to rejoice that he is holding a position that enables him to build up his country and to save his fellow men to a greater extent than can the ordinary individual on the street. He ought to rejoice that he is enabled to give succor to the unfortunate individual who has a wife and family suffering for lack of food and without proper clothing, shivering with the cold. He ought to rejoice that because he has such a salary he is enabled to make a contribution that the law would require for the benefit of his country and for the benefit of his fellow man.

The Senator from Mississippi said such a tax would drive men out of business. I think there is nothing to that argument. He said they would invest their money in tax-exempt securities. We can remedy that situation, and we are going to have an opportunity before this bill shall be passed to vote on an amendment that, if adopted, will remedy it. There is no reason in my judgment why there should be, in time of peace, any tax-exempt securities. I am not finding fault with the man who has them. It is a natural thing and a legal thing, and sometimes a patriotic thing, to help one's municipality or county or State by investing in such bonds. But we ought to pay, and if we do our duty I think we will pay, a tax on income from that kind of securities.

I do not have the figures on that point, but I think there is perhaps some considerable exaggeration. I am not desirous of leaving any loophole of that kind. Perhaps it would not make much difference in the aggregate, because probably the securities which are now tax-exempt would draw a larger rate of interest; but if we had no such thing as tax-exempt securities it would at least clear the atmosphere of any prejudice that might exist, and to some extent I think rightfully, on account of them.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. Just as an illustration and a point for consideration, let me refer to the farm-loan bonds, which are exempt from taxation. It has been estimated, and I think clearly established, that if those bonds were taxed, the rate of interest charged the farmer would be about 2 percent higher than it now is on his loans. I do not know whether it would be exactly 2 percent, but it would be about that. Where the farmer now gets his loan at 5 percent, if the bonds were not tax exempt, he would have to pay a higher rate of interest. He would have to pay probably 6 or 7 percent for his money.

Mr. NORRIS. As I said, the importance of the question is probably exaggerated, because what we may make on one side we may lose on the other side. But I do not want now to discuss the question the Senator has raised, because later on in the consideration of the bill some amendments are to be offered touching that point, and I propose to discuss the question then rather fully. I do not want to go into it now except to say that, in my judgment, if we had no tax-exempt securities we would relieve ourselves of many difficulties and would raise a lot of additional funds for the Government.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Before the Senator leaves the question that has been raised that money might be driven out of investment for business purposes, I should like to call his attention to one fact which, it seems to me, is a complete answer. Every movement in the country today is to prevent overproduction. It is claimed that we have too many factories of every kind. None of us has any reason to believe now that if we levy an income tax the people are going to put their money in unprofitable business enterprises. It seems to me there is absolutely nothing to that argument.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, let me pass to the subject which I wanted to take up, because I do not have very much time left.

I started to say when I was interrupted that this amendment, perhaps, would have a tendency to prevent the accumulation of large fortunes, and the concentration of wealth in a few hands. I shall not have time to discuss that subject now; but I desire to say in passing that while I think that would be true, and I am favorably disposed toward the amendment on that account, that is not the reason why I am advocating its adoption now. I believe in its adoption because we must get the money somewhere. We shall get it under this amendment from people who will not miss it. It will not be a hardship, especially on those in the higher brackets. It may work some hardship to those in the higher brackets, but as a rule it will not be a hardship, and we must get the money. Unpleasant though the task may be, somewhere our Government must secure a greater income; and those who are opposed to financial legislation ought to be favorable to an amendment of this kind, because if something of this kind is not done, and other things like it which must be done, we shall have to resort to other means to debase and to cheapen our currency.

Mr. President, I believe as a fundamental proposition that before we can ever return to normal prosperity, before we can ever bring ourselves out of the terrible situation in which we are at this time as a result of the depression, two things must happen. To me, they seem fundamental. One is that the hours of labor must be reduced. The other is that some law must be passed that will bring about a greater distribution of the wealth of the country.

We have now reached a time when the best students of political economy agree that one of the difficulties of our situation is the unequal distribution of wealth, the accumulation of wealth in a few hands. This amendment has a tendency to help out in that respect.

In my opinion, the great remedy to bring that about, which would not inflict a hardship on anyone or do an injustice to anyone, would be increasing the estate or the inheritance tax. If I could be assured that the inheritance tax or the estate tax in this bill would be increased so that it would have that effect, I should not care very much whether this amendment is agreed to or not. We are not going to be able to do that, however, in this bill. We are not going to be able to reach the point we ought to reach and will have to reach some day in order to bring permanent prosperity to our people; so we ought to favor this amendment as tending to do a little to bring that about. We ought to favor it because in its administration it will not inflict a hardship upon any living soul, especially in the higher brackets. The tax will be paid by men who can pay it without any feeling—if they are patriotic—of resentment or prejudice. It will be paid by men who will hardly know that they are paying it, who will not feel it. After all, when some men receive incomes of as much as a million dollars a year, when thousands are living in luxury and never know what want is, while at the same time we have millions of paupers, millions who are starving and suffering, it seems to me it is self-evident that in our country and under our laws there is something wrong.

This amendment will have a tendency to relieve distress, to help the country, and will not injure the man who has money. It seems to me, therefore, that when we are confronted with a proposal of this kind there ought to be—there can be, as I look at it—but one way out. If we do not take this action now, we shall have to do it in the future, when the hardships will be greater. If we do not give relief now, we shall have to give relief when it will be much more needed, when it will be much more urgent, and ultimately we shall come to a time when there must be a division, even though it is not made according to law.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I agree very heartily with what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has said; and

I desire to take just a minute or two to insert in the RECORD some figures which I find in the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee on the Revenue Act of 1934, on page 34. These figures were put in the record by Benjamin Marsh, of the People's Lobby.

He states that England obtains four times as much from income tax as the United States in proportion to wealth and income. During the fiscal year of each nation—that is, the United States and England—in 1932 the proceeds of the individual and corporation income tax were, in England, figuring the pound at $4.86, $1,781,500,000; in the United States, $1,056,756,697; or an excess in England over the United States of $724,743,303.

In other words, England's revenue in 1932 from income and surtaxes was $724,000,000 more than ours; and Mr. Marsh goes on to state that in the fiscal year 1933 the disproportion was even greater, England getting from those two taxes $1,527,900,000 and the United States only $746,791,404.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LOGAN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. Referring to the statistics which the Senator has read relative to revenue from income taxes as between Great Britain and the United States, is it not a fact that England is deriving that superior revenue by imposing very large taxes on very low incomes, while we are not doing so? Does the Senator mean to assert that England gets her superior revenue from taxes on the wealthy, or does she get it from taxes on the poor? And would the Senator advocate that we put income taxes on people of low incomes?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, as I understand, a few years ago, when England got behind, and had to raise more money to balance the budget, the English increased their tax levies, especially in the high brackets. I will admit that they probably had more tax on the low incomes also; but they increased the income tax on the high brackets, as I recall, to almost 100 percent.

Mr. BAILEY. Then a tax by England on low incomes is no argument for a tax by America on high ones, is it?

Mr. FRAZIER. They also have a tax over there on high incomes.

Mr. BAILEY. But they do not derive their superior revenue from that tax, and that is the point I have in mind.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes; I appreciate that, but the fact is that in England they have a very high tax, almost 100 percent, on the incomes in the high brackets.

It has been stated here that a high tax would drive money out of business. I believe our wealthy business men are just as patriotic as the wealthy business men of Great Britain, and I can see no reason why they should not be taxed. I believe that those who are best able to pay should pay the tax. I believe that corporations and business men who are making great profits in these hard times should pay the bulk of the income tax.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, all that may be true; but I am directing the Senator's attention to the fact shown by the statistics he has read, that England derives her superior revenue from taxes on low incomes.

Mr. FRAZIER. I think the figures bear out the statement that we derive a large part of our income from the low brackets, too.

Mr. BAILEY. Relatively less. If the Senator will read the morning papers, I think I can call his attention to a statement——

Mr. FRAZIER. I think it is relatively less; but that is no reason, so far as I can see, why we should not increase the tax on the high brackets at the present time.

Mr. BAILEY. But is the fact that England derives a superior revenue from low incomes a reason why we should impose a heavier tax on high incomes?

Mr. FRAZIER. Not at all. The fact is that England has not by any means as many wealthy corporations in comparison as we have in the United States, because there are better laws, I regret to say, to govern that kind of thing and control the amassing of great wealth in England.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do.

Mr. FESS. The last tax bill changed the exemptions in the United States so that the number of income taxpayers under the old law, about 3,000,000, was increased in the recent revision to 6,500,000. That was done by reducing the exemptions. That more than doubled the number on the list of income taxpayers. Have we any data showing how much the tax has been increased by lowering the exemptions, whereby we doubled the number of income taxpayers?

Mr. FRAZIER. I have not the figures, and I have not heard them quoted.

Mr. FESS. That would answer the question of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

Mr. FRAZIER. Undoubtedly that brought in a large amount of additional money, but, in my estimation, that is no reason why at this time we should not increase the tax in the high brackets on the very large incomes.

Mr. FESS. Furthermore, the last tax legislation increased the corporation tax about 1 percent.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. FESS. So there would be a larger amount of taxes by reason of the change of the law, but just how much it would be I do not know.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is perfectly true. I do not know how much it would be, but I wanted to bring out the fact that in England they increased their taxes both on those in the high brackets and on those in the low brackets, but especially on those in the high brackets, taking almost 100 percent, as I recall; and, according to press reports, during the past year England had a surplus of income over expenditures, which we have not had for some time. If we are going to get out of our present great indebtedness, if we are going to balance our Budget, it seems to me the adoption of the La Follette amendment is one of the best ways in which we can raise the increased revenue that is needed at this time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if this were a conflict between relatively low income taxes and high income taxes, the argument would be overwhelming in favor of imposing rates high enough to raise at this time, in view of our Treasury needs, considerable income. But that is not exactly the case we have before us now.

Under the bill as it stands, the rate on incomes of a million dollars or over runs as high as 59 percent surtaxes, plus, of course, the normal rate of 4 percent, giving a combined rate of 63 per cent. Even upon incomes between $80,000 and $90,000, the combined rate is 49 percent. That is to say, even upon that comparatively low income, as we have known incomes in the past, 51 cents out of every dollar is saved to the earner or taxpayer, while 49 cents goes into the Treasury.

On incomes between $90,000 and $100,000, the combined tax amounts to 54 percent. That is to say, 54 cents out of every dollar earned, if the taxpayer falls within this bracket, goes to the Government, while he is privileged to retain only 46 cents.

Mr. President, there has been prepared by the experts a table of the rates under the committee bill and under the bill as it is presently revised, under the amendment prepared by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which he will probably urge, and under the La Follette amendment, and I ask that this tabulation be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am aware of the fact that many arguments have been advanced against high rates which will not bear close analysis, but when the taxes already imposed are high—and no one can say that they are not high—those arguments have more validity and more force, because they are based upon some sound reasons. They are exaggerated frequently by those who wish to escape just taxes, and they have lost much of their force and effect because they have been so often misused or abused.

Mr. President, the question of imposing and collecting income taxes is a practical thing. We are not considering an ideal or a Utopian situation, and when the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] recalls to mind the net income, and impresses upon the Senate what the man who earns $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 or more has left after the payment of the tax, it sounds very different from what happens in real life, in practical life, in many cases.

When this country comes back—and it is coming back; we have made progress, and real progress—it will come back in inventories; it will not come back in cash money in the pockets of taxpayers. Hoarding was certainly one of the evil practices during the depression. Money was money, and it was kept in liquid form, if I may use the expression. Banks carried liquidity not only to a senseless extreme, but virtually crucified the business of this country and made it impossible for business to go on. So that if we recover—and we shall recover—it will be because we have built up inventories; it will be because we have put men and women back to work making and doing things; increased incomes will not be in cash; they will in many cases be locked up in nonliquid assets.

So let us look at this matter from a practical point of view and understand exactly what we are doing. We may have the little business man, who is operating his mercantile business, with an inventory at the beginning of the year of only $5,000, and, let us say, $1,000 in cash. At the end of the year, let us assume, his inventory is $15,000, and yet he has but $1,000 in cash. If we are not careful in the adjustment of the taxes, we will make it dangerous for a man to increase his income in inventory, in new business.

The income of the country, which will spell the return of prosperity, will be in many cases inventories—money made, it is true, but locked up in nonliquid form, in nonliquid assets.

Mr. President, let us see what burden will be imposed under the bill as it is proposed by the committee, upon the individual business man who has his increased wealth in an inventory, indicating that he has been willing to do business with and for his fellow men; indicating that he has not garnered his money and hoarded it in a liquid reserve; indicating that he has not put it in tax-exempt securities; indicating that he has made a real contribution to the welfare of his country, as well as to his welfare.

Let us take the case of the net income of $10,000. The tax paid, above all municipal taxes, above all State and county taxes, above all special taxes or licenses, under the committee bill as it stands, would be $465. Under the La Follette amendment it would be $600. There is here no great difference.

Let us take the income of $30,000, measured by an increase in the inventory of an active business. Under the committee bill we would take from that income $3,785. Under the La Follette amendment we would take $4,995. It might be said with a great deal of reason that an income of that size could stand such a tax. But let me repeat, if the income is represented in the inventory, not in cash, such a tax would be a heavy burden upon the business of the country.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not know whether or not I understood the Senator correctly, but I understood him to say that if the income had been in inventory, the taxpayer would have to pay an income tax. I do not follow the Senator in that.

Mr. GEORGE. Perhaps the Senator did not understand what I previously said. I illustrated what I am now saying by taking the case of a small business, with an inventory of $5,000 at the beginning of the year, and of $15,000 at the end of the year, but with no greater amount of cash on hand. There is an income, although it is represented entirely by increase in the inventory, increase in the merchandise, in the stocks on hand.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not understand that one would be taxed on an increase in his inventory.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly there would be no tax if it were a corporation.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not speaking of corporations. The Senator knows we are dealing with individual income taxes. But even a corporation is taxed on its inventory increase.

Mr. COUZENS. It pays on increase in the form of profits.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite true. I was presupposing the individual taxpayer made a profit.

Mr. President, on a net income of $100,000, under the committee bill, the taxpayer would pay $30,810; under the La Follette amendment he would pay $42,915.

It is easily conceivable that the payment of even $30,810 would be a great strain on an active, going business, and I am speaking for such taxpayers. When it comes to the man who has a money income, who has an investment which is yielding a cash dividend or return, the case is different. This country is in part at least made up of small business, it is made up of small business men, it is made up of merchants and manufacturers, it is made up of those men who do the useful work of the Nation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator from Georgia believe that there are very many businesses of the type he is discussing which are carried on by individuals; businesses which are not incorporated?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; a great many.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. All that any individual who is engaged in a business such as the Senator from Georgia describes, and operating on such a scale, would have to do to avoid paying on the profit realized from inventory under the individual income tax would be to incorporate his business.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President; the Senator from Wisconsin is wrong. He would pay precisely on the same basis, but the rates would be different on the corporation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It would be only 13¾ percent.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator is quite right.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It does not seem logical to me, if the Senator will permit me to say so, to assume that there are very many businesses, such as the Senator has described, being conducted by individuals under the existing income-tax rate.

Mr. GEORGE. I think the Senator is disposed to minimize the fact that a great many businesses in the country are carried on by individuals. The same principle is applicable to corporate income, so far as that is concerned. Many people derive their incomes or parts thereof from corporate dividends. But I am not discussing the corporation rate at all. I am discussing the individual income-tax rates. I am discussing it, not for the sake of making an argument against a just, even a high tax, but for the purpose of emphasizing, if I may, the full force and effect of legitimate argument against carrying the tax too high. That is my argument.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator's argument, and I was endeavoring to follow it, but I cannot see how under the existing rates in the 1932 act there can be very many businesses being conducted on the scale the Senator indicates, which have decided to operate as individual enterprises and pay the high income tax rates as against the 13¾-percent corporation rates which they would pay if they incorporated.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, of course I know that we are doing a tremendous volume of business, a very high percentage of business, through corporations, but nevertheless this levy is on individual incomes, and there are individuals who will be subject to it. What I am trying to say is simply this, that taxes are a practical matter. We talk about net income, and we visualize the man at the end of the year as having earned $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000, and we visualize his income as in liquid form with which he can readily discharge his tax obligation. The contrary is true. The contrary is true at least in a large number of cases, and therefore the argument ought to be examined, and it ought to be given weight when we are called upon to raise the rates above the relatively high rates in the committee bill, although they are not in excess of some of the committee's rates.

Mr. President, I believe as firmly as anyone in taxing all property, and I will vote as quickly as anyone in the Senate to tax Federal securities, or municipal and State bonds, but I direct attention to a fact brought to my attention but a short time ago, which is that on the day before yesterday $50,000,000 of New York State bonds were sold at an interest rate of 2.88, or less than 3 percent, lower than bonds of that State were ever sold before. Of course they are tax exempt.

We may close our eyes to the fact, if we wish to, but nevertheless this fact speaks louder than any language can say it, that the men who have money to invest are looking for tax-exempt securities. They always will look for tax-exempt securities. So there is a point beyond which we cannot carry rates without endangering our economic and financial and industrial progress, and particularly it seems to me we ought to have regard to that fact in a period like the period of the present depression from which we are emerging.

Mr. President, I am calling attention to the fact that the rates in the committee's bill on all income is relatively high. For that reason I am going to vote for the committee rates rather than the somewhat higher rates proposed by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin.

We can tax income until the tax will tend to discourage business enterprise, business activity. Just where that point is no one can say. It will vary under varying conditions, beyond all doubts, and any tax has some tendency to discourage active business enterprise if there is an avenue or a shelter under which wealth may shelter itself and escape taxation.

I would be happy to see all securities made taxable, subjected to the Federal income tax. I should be happy to see an equitable distribution of wealth in this country. I recognize the force of every fair argument made for the redistribution of wealth. However, there is but one redistribution of wealth that will be worth anything to the masses of this country or any other country, and that is an economic distribution brought about and supported by principles of public justice which make for a natural rather than an unnatural condition forced by arbitrary measures.

The mere arbitrary redistribution of the wealth of the country means chaos. The redistribution must come through the application of sound principles of public justice and as a step in an evolution which can be greatly aided and greatly facilitated by wise legislation and by the adoption of wise policies.

On that point there is much to be said, and I will go as far as any Member of the Senate may reasonably go in the taxation of estates or the placing of limitations upon the inheritable interest of anyone upon wealth transmitted through death.

Mr. President, I have made these scattering suggestions for the purpose, if I can, of emphasizing what seems to me to be just reasons for supporting a tax that runs as high as 62 percent on incomes of a million dollars and over—59-percent surtax and 4-percent normal rate, making the combined rate of 62 percent.

It may be that there is no insuperable obstacle in going to the higher rates proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin of 77 percent upon a like income—surtax rate of 71 percent plus the 6-percent normal rate, or a combined rate of 77 percent.

The necessity for raising revenue is recognized. The desirability of not increasing our bonded indebtedness, as far as possible, is recognized. But it may be in the present state of our industry and general business that we will get more revenue out of the lower rates, which cannot be said to be low, than we will get from the higher rates suggested by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin. At least, Mr. President, I believe that we will; and I believe profoundly that during the next 2 years—and this tax act can stand no longer than 2 and possibly no longer than 1 year—it is well to bear in mind that what we need and want in this country is the active dollar—not the liquid dollar—the liquid wealth both at the beginning and end of the tax year.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I had not intended to speak upon this subject, but the Senator from Georgia seems to have unconsciously misled the Senate with respect to the difference between the corporation tax and the individual income tax. He specifically gave the instance of a taxpayer who had $5,000 in inventory at the beginning of the year and had $15,000 at the end of the year, or, in other words, had added $10,000. In that case, as an individual he would have to pay a tax of $618, while as a corporation he would have $1,375 to pay.

When the income goes up into the higher brackets, the same condition does not apply. For example, if a corporation has an income of $100,000 it pays $13,750, based upon the corporation tax, but an individual with the same income pays $42,993. Obviously the individual would be stupid to operate his business as an individual if from it he derived an income of $100,000, for he has to pay $42,993 of income tax as against a corporation paying $13,750. So, Mr. President, I lose all interest in the Senator's argument about the growth of inventories as applied to individuals, because the individual always has the option of operating as a corporation or as an individual.

Certainly these rates as applied to individual income will not be onerous so far as inventories are concerned. In fact, there are 5 feet of records now piled in the office of the Banking and Currency Committee showing salaries of individuals ranging from $10,000 to $250,000 and $500,000, plus bonuses, which are all received in cash. Certainly, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] pointed out this morning, even if the rates proposed shall be assessed against such incomes, there will be quite sufficient left for the recipients to live on, and it cannot be said that a man who is investing his income in inventories will in any sense be affected by these rates. Anyone who operates so that his increase in income is brought about by inventories would be an unwise if not a stupid business man if he failed to incorporate and get a 13¾-percent rate rather than pay the 42-percent rate as, for example, in the case of the $100,000 income.

Mr. President, there is no justification for not adopting these rates. Every taxpayer has all the opportunity he wants in doing business to increase his business, as the Senator from Georgia properly said, under corporate form, and to evade these high individual income taxes.

Mr. President, there is another thing. As I have said, the list of the salaries that were reported by the Federal Trade Commission as a result of the resolution adopted by the Senate under the instigation of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. COSTIGAN] stands about 5 feet high. Those people have been drawing these salaries, in nearly every case, all during the depression, and have in no sense paid a comparable return on their incomes while the rest of the country has been in such great distress. It seems to me if our worthy President is going to gain his objective in bringing about a recovery in business through the expenditure of public money, then certainly those who are benefiting by such expenditure of public money should pay their share toward recovery. When we come to consider the hundreds of thousands of names of individuals who have not contributed, but have had these lucrative salaries all during the depression, there appears to be no reason why they should not now be called upon to pay something toward returning to the Government the money the Government has spent in aiding them to increase their incomes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, may I call the Senator's attention in his time—because I cannot speak again—to the fact that even in 1933 the income of individuals, exclusive of wages and salaries, amounted to $1,287,883,245, and that the income of partnerships, which, of course, is returned as individual income, amounted to $450,275,907, which is also exclusive of dividends, salaries, and wages. So there are many individuals yet in the United States who are doing business as individuals and whose income in a large number of cases consists of an increase in the corpus of their estates or inventories and not in cash money in the pocket.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator respond to a question?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. COUZENS. Will the Senator tell me why the individual business man, for whom he is pleading, would find any difficulty in increasing his inventory $10,000 if he had to pay $618 in taxes? And that is what this amendment calls for. Yet if he was doing business in corporate form he would have to pay $1,375.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand that.

Mr. COUZENS. Then, why the plea for the individual business man, when he has the option of incorporating himself and getting a lower rate?

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator very well knows that the corporation is subjected to a great many more restrictions than the mere payment of a tax at the rate of 13½ percent upon its net income.

Mr. COUZENS. I thought greater liberality was accorded to corporations than to individuals.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no.

Mr. COUZENS. And I fail to understand why individuals incorporate if they do not thereby get more liberal treatment.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator very well knows that in this bill we are seeking to tax undistributed income or earnings of corporations; the Senator very well knows that in the case of consolidated returns we are putting a penalty upon the corporations, striving at least to bring their taxes more nearly in line with what we conceive to be the proper measure of taxes to be paid by them.

Mr. COUZENS. If these concerns and individuals are so prosperous, certainly the Senator from Georgia should not object if the provisions of the amendment should be applied and should not shed tears for them.

Mr. GEORGE. No, I am not shedding tears; the Senator has little warrant for any such insinuation; I am not shedding tears at all, but I am pointing out that in this country a great deal of its business is still being done by individuals who, because they elect to operate in an individual capacity, are not incorporated, and they are subjected to the taxes that are imposed by the Congress, whatever those taxes may be.

Mr. COUZENS. And yet those taxes, Mr. President, as to individuals in almost all classes of business are less than the corporate taxes. So I cannot see the force of the argument that an individual operating as such would pay these individual taxes when he could incorporate and get away with a tax of 13¾ percent.

Mr. GEORGE. I am sorry the Senator cannot see it, but I again call his attention to the fact that a taxable income in 1933, of $1,287,883,245, was returned by individuals, and no part of that income was wages or salaries as such.

Mr. COUZENS. That was because the rates were so low. There is not any argument about that, and I am not disputing those figures, but there is every temptation for individuals to continue in their individual capacity rather than in corporate form because of the rates. Now, when the Congress is endeavoring to bring the rates up to a more comparable form, the Senator objects. The figures given by the Senator would materially be reduced undoubtedly, and more and more returns would be received if this amendment were incorporated in the law.

Mr. GEORGE. I am not referring to corporate returns at all; I am simply referring to individual incomes in 1933; and I am calling attention to the fact that over a billion and a half dollars of income was returned by individuals and copartnerships in 1933, and that, therefore, there are a considerable number of individuals in this country to be affected by the tax on individual incomes.

Mr. COUZENS. Certainly, that is what the proposal is, to provide an increased rate on incomes. The mere mention of those figures by the Senator does not create any distinction between the man who is in business and the man who receives his income from salaries or other sources.

Mr. GEORGE. I stated to the Senator that these were incomes of individuals exclusive of wages received or salaries received.

Mr. COUZENS. No; those figures are not exclusive of salaries received.

Mr. GEORGE. They are according to the statement I have before me. If I have been misled, I have been misled by the light from heaven when perhaps the Senator knows better. I do not know as to that.

Mr. COUZENS. That does not include the income from salaries.

Mr. GEORGE. It excludes salaries and wages, according to the statement which is before me, and on that point I shall not argue with the Senator or anyone else. I can state that the figures show——

Mr. COUZENS. I do not care to have these figures repeated.

Mr. GEORGE. The amount is shown——

Mr. COUZENS. I cannot have my time consumed by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. The amount of the salaries and wages——

Mr. COUZENS. I have listened to those figures several times. I want to refer to another matter. The Senator from Georgia, as I recall in his statement, referred——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understood that the Senator from Michigan had yielded the floor.

Mr. COUZENS. Oh, no. My 30-minute limitation has not expired. I yielded in order that the Senator from Georgia might make a statement in my time.

The Senator from Georgia, if I recall correctly, stated that the income taxes were in addition to all other taxes. Of course, that is not correct. Taxes paid to the States are deductible before income taxes are computed.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. COUZENS. I decline to yield for the Senator to make any further statement. When he was making his statement I did not interrupt him, and if I am inaccurate he can get one of his colleagues to yield him time to refute what I have said. We are limited to 30 minutes, and I cannot yield further to the Senator from Georgia. However, I will give the Senator an opportunity to correct me if he did not say that these taxes were all in addition to the other taxes.

Mr. GEORGE. I said they were additional taxes paid, as they are. A man pays taxes to the State, the county, the city, and the Federal Government.

Mr. COUZENS. But they are deductible from his income tax.

Mr. GEORGE. The amount is deductible from gross income, but I said they were additional taxes paid. If this were the only tax we were called upon to pay, the effect would be different.

Mr. COUZENS. But, as I pointed out, the taxes paid to the States and municipalities are deductible from the gross income of the taxpayer, so he may wipe out his entire net income by deduction of such taxes.

Mr. GEORGE. I did not say anything contrary to that statement.

Mr. COUZENS. The inference was that a man does not get credit for the other taxes, when as a matter of fact he does. In any event, I sent to the Committee on Banking and Currency to see if I could get some of the reports from the Federal Trade Commission, but find they have not yet been printed. They are very illuminating as to the great desirability of increasing the income taxes. It can be done, as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] clearly pointed out, and still leave the taxpayer quite an adequate sum for living expenses.

I now yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. HARRISON. We had better have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COUZENS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Eighty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I have been so busy with other matters in the form of proposed legislation that I have not been able to prepare data that I should have liked to prepare on this subject. The principle involved, however, is so vital and so important that I feel constrained to say a few words before the vote is taken.

I think it is fortunate for the country and for the Senate that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has presented his amendment. It is an amendment that should be considered and voted upon here. It is an amendment that goes to the very heart of the taxing situation in this country today.

What do we propose to do with a budget, whether it be ordinary or extraordinary, in which the expenditures are billions more than the receipts? Are we to bond the country; are we to resort to sales taxes and at the same time allow those who are receiving enormous incomes to continue to receive them and take no larger part of those incomes in the form of taxation than we did in prosperous days? When millions of men and women have not the necessities of life, when the Government cannot afford to expend sufficient money to give all of them employment, is it possible that the representatives of the people in this body are willing that men shall continue to take out of the profits of production, out of the moneys which are unearned because of former profits, these enormous incomes, without taxing them in an amount sufficient to meet at least a part of this added expenditure?

To me it is unthinkable that in times like these any man or set of men should be permitted to put into their pockets literally millions of dollars while other millions of people have not the means of existence.

I am not a revolutionist. I am fearful of overturning the system that has taken us so far on the road to civilization. I am convinced, however, that it is the high duty of those who hope for a better condition of life for the millions of common men and women of America to put a stop to the accumulation of these vast fortunes at a time when our Treasury has not money with which to pay its bills except by borrowing still more money. I believe this is one of the steps we should take in the direction of reform at this time.

I cannot close my eyes to the fact that we are rearing in America a generation better educated than any generation of young people that has ever lived in this or any other land. We are still teaching them that the doors of opportunity are open, but the surrounding conditions make those teachings a literal lie. Something must be done in this country to make it possible for young people educated and trained and fitted for the duties of life to have an opportunity to make enough to take care of themselves, and to rear families as their fathers have done.

It is not enough to say that they can live and they can exist better than the people of 30 or 40 or 50 years ago lived. They have a right to better things; and this, it seems to me, is one of the steps to show them that those of us who have the power to levy taxes do not propose to permit these great fortunes to be accumulated or enlarged out of the profits of production in these distressing days.

I think the greatest need of today is some plan to divide the profits of production and to distribute the products of this land equitably among the masses of the people. I believe if everybody in this country—man, woman, and child—could be given the food they would like to have and that they need for their own good health, could be given the clothing they should have in a land like ours, in a civilization such as ours—could be given it, I mean, by earning it honestly—if they could be given the furniture in their homes, the carpets on their floors, the telephones and the radios and the automobiles they are entitled to have; if we could work out a system by which they could secure these things by their own labor, the consumption would be so great that it would almost keep all of our people employed, even with all our modern methods of production.

Here we have an opportunity to increase substantially the burden of taxation upon those who are making more than their proper share out of the profits of production. I remember years ago reading of the struggles in this body and the body at the other end of the Capitol over the subject of the income tax. I could not understand then, much less can I understand now, how men in times like these will refuse to vote to take a substantial—in fact, a large—percentage of that part of a man's income that is not needed in the ordinary activities of life.

I shall not delay the Senate. I only wanted to give expression to my feelings and my thoughts on this question. I hope the Senate will adopt this amendment. It does not go as far as some of us think it ought to go; but we know that legislation is a matter of compromise. We know also that it is wise to raise the rate of income taxes gradually. I think the proposal of the Senator from Wisconsin is a very moderate one, and I hope his amendment will be adopted by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BONE. Will an affirmative vote be a vote for the La Follette amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be.

The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE (when Mr. CUTTING's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]. On this question he has a pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. If the senior Senator from New Mexico were present, he would vote "yea", and I am informed that if the junior Senator from Florida were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). Upon this question I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], who is unavoidably detained from the Senate. I am advised that were he present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], who is absent. Not knowing how he would vote, I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS]. In his absence, and not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LOGAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted.

Mr. LOGAN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania. I do not know how he would vote if present. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. LEWIS. I regret to announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is detained from the Senate on account of a severe cold.

I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

Mr. McADOO. I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT]; but as he and I would vote alike on this question, I am informed that a special pair has been arranged for him. I am, therefore, at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. FESS. I desire to announce that on this question there is a special pair between the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. WALCOTT] and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]. If the Senator from Connecticut were present, he would vote "nay", and if the Senator from Montana were present I understand he would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT] is detained on official business. If present, he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—36

Ashurst	Connally	La Follette	Pope
Black	Costigan	Long	Reynolds
Bone	Couzens	McCarran	Russell

NOT VOTING—13

Cutting	Hebert	Pittman	Trammell
Davis	Logan	Robinson, Ind.	Walcott

So Mr. LA FOLLETTE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I was out of the Chamber when the roll call began, or I should have preferred at that time the request I am about to submit.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the close of the yea-and-nay vote a list showing the number of taxpayers in this country who have paid taxes on incomes exceeding $1,000,000 for each and every year since the income tax law was first enacted. Senators who are familiar with the history of our income-tax legislation will mark that when the rate went up the number of taxpayers went down, and that when the rate went down the number of taxpayers went up. I am sure Senators will read the statement with interest, because, like the geological strata of the earth, it tells an interesting story.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Number of people paying an income tax in United States on income $1,000,000 or more

1914	60
1915	120
1916	206
1917	141

REGULATION OF THE COTTON INDUSTRY

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 8402) to place the cotton industry on a sound commercial basis, to prevent unfair competition and practices in putting cotton into the channels of interstate and foreign commerce, to provide funds for paying additional benefits under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SMITH. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. SMITH, Mr. BANKHEAD, and Mr. CAPPER conferees on the part of the Senate.

PENALTY FOR PRESENTATION OF FALSE WRITTEN INSTRUMENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives returning to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 2686) to provide a penalty for the presentation of a false written instrument relating to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, Administrator of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, or Administrator of the Code of Fair Competition for the Petroleum Industry.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I understand, after the Senate passed this bill the House passed a bill on the same subject, and the Senate then passed the House bill, so that the two bills crossed. I move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

NOANK SHIPYARD, INC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2324) for the relief of the Noank Shipyard, Inc., which were, on page 1, lines 7 and 8, to strike out "with interest at 4 percent per annum from March 1, 1928" and insert "in full settlement of all claims against the Government of the United States", and on page 2, line 5, after "contractor", to insert ": Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

Mr. LONERGAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills and a joint resolution, and they were signed by the Vice President:

IN REPLY TO ATTACKS OF SENATOR HARRISON

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I undertook to speak earlier in the day, and was advised by the Chair, very properly, that I did not have a right to speak on the matters to which I undertook to address myself.

Mr. President, I am very sorry that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has seen fit to make an attack on me here this morning. I regret very much that he saw fit to go out of his way to make personal, uncomplimentary, and, I would say, except for the parliamentary rule, almost insulting remarks, for no good reason and for no good cause. However, I must reply to the Senator from Mississippi, and I must inform the Senate and the world of some of the blows I have taken from my good friend from Mississippi, and some of the things for which I have been held responsible, for which I should not have been censured, if anybody was to be—they should have been men like the Senator from the State of Mississippi.

I have been the friend of the Senator from Mississippi, I hope. I have never said an ill word about him. He has told me that he heard once that I had said something bad about him; that I had said that I would like to see him defeated for the Senate in the State of Mississippi; that in the Chicago convention, when he had voted against seating the Roosevelt delegates, I had said I would like to see him defeated in the State of Mississippi. It is possible that I did make some such statement in the Chicago convention, but, other than that, I know of nothing I have said that would have caused the Senator from Mississippi to go to such an extent as he has gone lately, particularly this morning, in what he has undertaken to say regarding me.

Mr. President, the State of Mississippi is very much like my State. My people come from Mississippi. My father was born there, and lived there a great part of his life, and many of my people still live in that State. I expect that more of my blood kin live in Mississippi than live in the State where I live, and I love the people of Mississippi and have no intention of undertaking to say that they are not capable of managing their own affairs and electing their own officers. I think they are.

However, on yesterday, in making some remarks I stated that the leadership on this side of the Senate in the last tax fight was in consort with the leadership on the other side of the Chamber and stood for a tax program which many of us who undertook to label ourselves liberals, or progressives, were undertaking to amend.

There was not anything in that statement to which any exception could have been taken. Everybody knows it is the truth. It happened today, the same as it did then. There was no reason why the ranking Member on this side of the Chamber at that time should have taken any exception, because he does not deny it, and he knows it to be a fact. But that is the ground upon which the Senator rises here and says that there is nobody in the United States Senate who has so little influence as the Senator from Louisiana, myself.

Mr. President, I am glad to know that the Senator from Mississippi at least points himself out as a man of influence; but, to his sorrow, I would contradict that statement. I have a vote in the Senate which I can cast as I see fit. I have one vote. The people of Louisiana have a vote when I am here, and, according to the way I look upon the vote of the Senator from Mississippi, the people of Mississippi have not a vote with him here. [Laughter.] I am going to tell the Senate why I say that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will please suspend. The occupants of the galleries will kindly maintain decorum and order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that is my opinion, and I am going to give the Senate my reasons for it.

First let me say, Mr. President, that I have never been other than the Senator's friend, as much as I know anything about anything. He has his ways, from which I differ. He has a peculiar way of being a friend. But we all have peculiar ways of being friends sometimes.

The Senator was a friend of James K. Vardaman, of Mississippi. I saw a written letter, about which I asked my friend, the Senator from Mississippi. It showed that he rode into the lower House of Congress by writing letters stating that he was a Vardaman man; that that was the tie that binds good men together in Mississippi; and upon that he came to the lower House of Congress. I asked the Senator from Mississippi about that one day at a lunch table and he told me that that was true. And so it was his advocacy and his pledge of being a Vardaman man that rode him into the first job that he ever had in Washington, D.C.

I was not in Mississippi at the time Vardaman ran against the Senator from Mississippi except for one day, when I crossed over the ferry at Natchez, when I was running for office myself on the other side of the river. I went over to Natchez on a Sunday to spend a day there, waiting to resume my campaign in Louisiana on the following Monday.

At that time, Mr. President, Mr. Vardaman, following the same lines that he had always followed, fought our entrance into the World War. In those days a man who had the nerve and the courage and the honor to stand out against that war, that damnable fraud against the American people, needed friends. It took a man with a heart of gold and courage of iron to stand out, and if he stood to save those young boys from the morass of murder and destruction, he had to put his life, politically speaking, in his own hands and risk it on the altar. And so Vardaman needed his friends. He needed his friends, Mr. President, because he had bearded the lion in his den. There might have been many good people who disagreed with him honestly, and there were. There might have been many of his friends who disagreed with him honestly, and there were.

The Senator from Mississippi who now sits here saw this friend, upon whose back he had ridden into office, to whom he had pledged loyalty and faithfulness until he rode himself into the lower House of Congress, and then when the man was faced with his enemies and called for friends the Senator from Mississippi announced himself as a candidate against the man on whose back he rode himself into the lower House of Congress.

Now, that is all right. That is his way of being a friend. That is all right. We have all got ways of showing our friendship to one another. That is his way.

Along about that time I had a friend, too. He was a State senator, S. J. Harper, of Winnfield. They indicted Harper because he published a book saying outside of Congress what Vardaman said in Congress, and we could not hire a lawyer to defend him. What did I do? I went and bearded the lion in his den under threat of contempt, and defended old man Harper in the United States court, and took my political life in my hands to stand by my friend. Oh, yes; I could have draped myself in the American flag, because the old man had resigned from the State senate, and I wanted to be a candidate for his job, too, but I stood by my friend and went to the bat for him and stood the torture that I had to endure.

Now, that is my way of standing by my friends. The Senator from Mississippi has another way of standing by his friends. Just the difference between people! We all have our way of working. One is just as honest as the other. One is, catch your friend in trouble, stab him in the back and drink his blood. The other is, stand by your friend and try to heal his wounds.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I call the Senator from Louisiana to order under clause 2 of rule XIX.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] must take his seat until the point is decided.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Missouri will let him proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not within the province of the Senator from Mississippi to make such request. The point of order has been made, and the Chair will hear the Senator from Missouri on the point.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, it is only necessary to read the rule to see its application. Clause 2 of rule XIX provides that—

> No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

Mr. President, I submit that the words just uttered by the Senator from Louisiana, imputing to the Senator from Mississippi the motive of sucking the blood of his friend, are in contravention of that rule.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope the Senate understands that I am speaking about——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will pardon the Chair, but when a Senator is called to order he must sit down, and may not speak until leave is granted.

The point of order is well taken under clause 2 of rule XIX.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed in order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I did not know that it is necessary for the Senator to yield to me. I simply wanted to move that the Senator from Louisiana be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana that the Senator from Louisiana be permitted to proceed in order.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana will proceed in order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am glad that no one took any exception to the remarks that the Senator from Mississippi was making about me this morning. I did not. I thank the Senator from Mississippi for his generous attitude in the matter.

I am referring to the matter politically only, Mr. President. I am not referring to the physical fact, of course, and I hope the Chair and the Members of the Senate understand. I was referring to the fact, Mr. President, in this way, and I will explain it, because I would not for the life of me have anyone think that I would unjustly reflect upon any Member of this body. I was simply undertaking to make this parallel, Mr. President. I had a friend who was a Senator who got in trouble, because he expressed himself about the war. That friend had been a friend of mine in politics, and I had been his friend. The Senator from Mississippi had a friend, and he saw fit to take a course different from mine.

I now want to deal a little further with my friend from Mississippi. A short time ago there was a great indemnity company in the State of Louisiana, located in New Orleans, that closed its doors and went broke. It had a large number of creditors. The magazines throughout the United States printed the great big story about the Union Indemnity Co. having gone broke, and they put the picture of HUEY P. LONG right in the middle of the story to show that the Union Indemnity Co. in the town in which I lived had gone broke, leaving the impression that I was the manipulator of the Union Indemnity Co. or owed it a lot a money, or something of that kind. They left the impression evidently that I was financially involved. I had to take that. Nobody rose to my defense in the Senate. Nobody said a word in my behalf.

I did not owe the Union Indemnity Co. a copper cent. I had not borrowed a dime from them. I did not own any stock in the business at all. But the publications at that time were extolling the great and conservative qualities of the Senator from Mississippi, when they were condemning me. He did not rise to my defense, but the Union Indemnity Co. was a creditor of his. They did not break because I owed them anything. I was not one of the men who helped break that company. I did not have a thing to do with it; not a thing on God's earth. It was not any debt of mine that caused them to break. But I had to be caricatured over the length and breadth of this country for something that I had nothing to do with, and I would have thought that my friend from Mississippi might have risen at that time, although I would not have asked him to have done so, and at least resented the fact of this kind of imputation being made against me, even though I had owed it money, which I did not at the time.

Only a short time ago, it seems, the Senator from Mississippi thought he ought to change his field of operations, which he has a right to do. He is a big man, as he says, on the floor of the Senate; he is a man with much more influence than I, and, of course, feeling that way, it is only natural he should extend his boundaries. So he extended over into the State of Louisiana and sent us a Mississippi citizen. He sent us a gentleman over there by the name of Kennedy, who had been the mayor of a town over there, and I think that town voted him out of office, notwithstanding the support of the Senator from Mississippi, in a town in which they both live. At any rate, we all lose mayors' races. I lost one myself a while back, so there is nothing to be said about that. But I did not undertake to go over and appoint the patronage in the State of Mississippi, but the Senator from Mississippi sent us one of his fellow citizens, a gentleman by the name of Kennedy. If he was going to improve upon the State of Louisiana, he at least could have sent us a man who did not leave a trail of bank notes in all the banks in the State of Mississippi that are closed up today on account of it.

He did not improve our business standing a bit by the kind of indebted statesman that he sent us from the State of Mississippi.

And again they paraded all over the papers of the State of Louisiana and all over the South, "anti-Long man appointed and sent to New Orleans." I had not opposed the Senator from Mississippi having his man in Mississippi appointed to take the job over in New Orleans. He told me that it would not have made any difference whether I had or not, but that was after the appointment was confirmed. I probably would have asked for a little inquiry if he had told me that before. But since he did not tell me before, I made no protest.

And then when it was abroad all over the country that HARRISON had sent an anti-Long man out of Mississippi to take a job over in the State of Louisiana, there it stood, and there it rested at the time. I thought that my friend might have said something about that matter, because I spoke to him about it, and made no opposition to their taking the job that was in the city of New Orleans at the time.

But now we get a little bit closer to this thing, Mr. President. I wonder if I cannot enlighten the Senate a little bit more. We go along and we develop a fraud in the Home Owners' Loan Bank in New Orleans. What is that fraud? They have got a racket down there by which they are having the appraisers appraise the property that the Government is to issue its home loans for at double the price the home owner is going to get, and they organize a corporation working in touch with those elements so that some outside source with a rigged-up partnership where someone in the home-loan organization gets half the bonds, and some building and loan gets the other half of the bonds, and the home owner is cheated out of half the money and the Government is cheated out of half the money. They have been carrying that on. I read the certificate from the bank examiner; and it was not denied in the paper; it was admitted, that that had in some cases been practiced. I am going to show the Senate by the list that is being made up that it is being generally indulged in.

I tried to understand why the Senator from Mississippi wanted to display such animus against me this morning; I ransacked my mind to find out. I looked, and I found that a gentleman by the name of Meyer Eiseman, a bankrupt of the city of New Orleans, had been made a prominent factor in the administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. "Who is Mr. Meyer Eiseman?" I said to myself. "It seems to me like I might be able to place him"; and, lo and behold, I called back to my mind that Mr. Meyer Eiseman is one of the business associates of the Senator from Mississippi, and, according to what I understand from the Senator from Mississippi, the notes of Mr. Meyer Eiseman and of the Senator from Mississippi, amounting to about $15,000, form a part of the bankrupt assets of closed banks on the coast of the State of Mississippi. But Mr. Eiseman is over there in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation of Louisiana, and the rats are being killed as fast as they dare to show their heads. Yet the Senator from Mississippi gets up here and makes an attack on me, when I have sat here, Mr. President, with those kind of things going on against my people, trying to be civil, trying to be orderly, trying to be just as righteous toward him as it is possible to be, and out of a clear sailing sky he gets up with this kind of attack on me.

I was given the credit for the great bank failures occurring down around the New Orleans area, Mr. President. They gave me the credit and my name was printed in box-car letters at the top of newspapers all over the country, although the Louisiana banks stayed open until all others had closed. Yet they gave me all the credit for their finally being closed. What was the difference between me and the Senator from Mississippi? I did not owe a bank a copper cent. There was not a bank that has got its doors closed today that can say, in whole or in part, its doors are closed due to the fact that I had them lend any friend of mine any money or that I went in there and left my notes and notes of my allies in those banks. There is not one of them that can say that about me. On the contrary, Mr. President, I borrowed what money I could from the insurance company and put it into the bank and lost my money when it closed, trying to help keep the bank open.

After I have taken all this kind of slander and never opened my mouth about it, I have had today added to the condemnation that I have had on account of it, which I stood for the benefit of the community down there on the coast and through Louisiana and Mississippi—I have had added to the condemnation the voice of the Senator from Mississippi and today his friend Mr. Eiseman profits through the chicanery that is being carried on in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. He ought to lend his help to us, instead of condemning us, and eradicate that kind of evil.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I again call the Senator from Louisiana to order under clause 2 of rule XIX.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I should like to know why.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Missouri please elaborate on the point?

Mr. CLARK. It is perfectly obvious from the rule, which has been previously read, that the Senator from Louisiana is attempting to cast discredit upon the Senator from Mississippi. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, if there is one forum of free speech left in the United States, it is the Senate of the United States; and I think the Senator from Louisiana should be permitted to proceed along the lines he has been proceeding, and for this reason: If there is one offender against the rule——

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Indiana will permit me, I will ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Louisiana may proceed.

Mr. LONG. No; I want this point decided.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Just a moment. I want to make this statement, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion that the Senator from Louisiana may proceed in order.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The Chair has not sustained the point of the Senator from Missouri, has he?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Indiana to make a motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I only wanted to make one observation, that if there is one Senator who has himself violated the rule by criticizing other Members of the Senate and imputing improper motives to them, it is the Senator from Mississippi. Therefore, I move that the Senator from Louisiana be permitted to proceed in order.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the Senator from Missouri, under clause 2 of rule XIX, which reads:

> No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Indiana to make a motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I move that the Senator from Louisiana be permited to proceed in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand I cannot continue my remarks along that line. May I be recognized now to speak on the bill? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will be recognized to speak in order. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] rose to propound a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LEWIS. My inquiry is this: The Senator from Indiana made a motion that the Senator from Louisiana be permitted to proceed in order. I take the liberty to suggest that the words "in order" there correct whatever evil there might be, and that the Senator from Louisiana, if he proceeds, will then proceed on the bill. That would be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of a like opinion, and the Senator from Louisiana will proceed in order. It is not the function of the present temporary occupant of the chair to deliver a lecture, but the rule is drastic, it is clear, and will be observed and enforced while the present temporary occupant is in the chair. The rule provides that:

> No Senator in debate shall, directly or indirectly, by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I want to say that even though I am the first perhaps to have the rule invoked against him, maybe it will be good for us all that the rule be observed hereafter. I will have no objection to the stringent application of that rule. There is no one in this body, I suppose, who has had more personal reflections made against him than myself, but I have never invoked the rule and I never shall, so far as I know.

Now, Mr. President, speaking on the bill, I live in Louisiana, and, as I said, for a part of my life I lived in Mississippi, also in Texas, in Tennessee, and in Arkansas. I have lived in all those States. The people are very much the same line of people down there and they are affected more or less by the same situations. I conceived, Mr. President, to try to help that part of the country. Our people are poor down there. We have not very much, we have very little of anything. All that our farmers in Texas and in Louisiana and in Mississippi, in Arkansas, and in the South down there, in what we call the deep South, have done is to work hard from sun-up to sun-down; but at no time, Mr. President, have we ever been heard to cry out in exclamation of any kind or character indicating that we had lost our faith in this Government or that we desired anything other than its preservation.

Those people down there are entitled to have something done for them; they are entitled to have us come here and do something that is going to take the immense, swollen profits that have been garnered into the hands of a few people and do something for the common underdog element residing in the country down there. What have I and men of my kind been doing here? What has been done for them? What has come out of the Senate Finance Committee? What has come out of the Appropriations Committee? What has come out of the other big committees primarily vested with the responsibility of recommending something that would do one thing on God's earth for the poor farmer of the State of Mississippi, or the State of Louisiana, or the State of Texas in the way of giving them some of the profits that have been taken away from them in all the past years?

Take as an example Mississippi, one of the greatest States in this country, constituting one of the finest communities of people to be found on the civilized globe. Do you know, Mr. President, that in the State of Mississippi there is hardly any such thing with the poor people down there except a mortgaged property? That is a farming country. The people are mostly farmers who earn their bread by the sweat of their faces, and day after day, day after day, they have seen the American Congress sit and legislate, the Congress worrying about what is going to be done for the good, big business interests of the country, with the poor farmer in the State of Mississippi going further and further and further into the slough of despondency and despair.

Unless we take a stand here for such people as those who live in Louisiana and Mississippi and other places, unless we take the stand that we are going to reverse the order of our legislation for the Nation which is in a way that the country continues to slide backward and backward and backward, while we furnish the sinews for other's wealth, then the American Congress neglects the duty it owes to the people, the services of whom it is going to have to have, and the need for which it will soon find out.

As I said, I disagree with my friend from Mississippi because of the way he voted on the last amendment. He disagrees with me because of the way I voted on the amendment. We will say, without question, that he has good motives. Whether he gives me credit for the same motives, of course, is immaterial. But the poor farmer of Mississippi carries the load. It would do no good for the Senator from Mississippi and myself to argue over the possession of pureness of heart and the influence which we have in this body, but in the meantime what has been done by us, what has been done for the poor Mississippian and the poor Louisianan and the poor Texan? What has been done for him by anything that has come out of the Senate Finance Committee or the Senate Appropriations Committee? We are going to have to turn our thought to that one purpose.

Mr. President, it seems I am being invited to go to Mississippi in a campaign. I have no intention of accepting the challenge to go to Mississippi in the campaign. I have no intention of going there, because the people of Mississippi will be able to handle their own affairs, I think. That is their business. They will know what to do as well as anybody else knows what to do.

Unfortunately, I was made an issue in the last campaign there when they had a contest for Governor. The issue in the campaign was whether or not they should have a man elected Governor of Mississippi who was friendly to HUEY P. LONG and whom HUEY P. LONG was trying to get elected Governor of Mississippi. The question made by certain elements of the election of a Governor of the State of Mississippi was not based on the merits or demerits of the respective candidates, but on whether the candidate was pro-HUEY P. LONG or anti-HUEY P. LONG. Evidently the people of Mississippi were not seriously affected against the candidate whom I favored in the race, because he was elected by a monster majority, notwithstanding the fact that such able men as the Senator from Mississippi, from good and proper motives, voted for the other man. So I said I would not accept the challenge then, and why should I accept the challenge now?

Of course, pure motives guiding the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], and I hope guiding me, as I believe they do, I would not represent Mississippi like he represents Mississippi if I were here representing that State. That is my opinion, and he has a right to his opinion. Of course, we represent similar communities. They are affected by the same problems and with the same interests. If I were here representing Mississippi, I would vote just like I have voted representing Louisiana: First, for the welfare of the Union; and, second, for the welfare of the section of the country from which I come. I would not vote like the Senator from Mississippi votes, but that is his business, and I am not going to try to take his prerogative away from him.

It may be that the poor people in Mississippi think we had better have the big fortunes. It may be that the poor people of Mississippi are satisfied to have all their homes mortgaged and all their farms mortgaged and all the people virtually penniless and starving in a land of plenty, while the big financial manipulators of this country wax richer and richer at the expense of the people of Mississippi, Louisiana, and that part of the country. It may be that the people of Mississippi want things conducted in that way.

There is a good argument for that idea, I admit, from people who evidently are sincere. There are many people in the country who honestly and candidly feel that the only way to have a country is to have the peasants at the bottom operating practically on the basis of living from hand to mouth, and seldom anything within reach of the hand for the mouth in hard times. There are many people who do not see that that is a bad system as long as the royal-blooded power of manipulated finance is allowed to control the American people.

If the people of Mississippi think that way about it, that is their business, and it is not my right to stand here and criticize Mississippi if the people there want somebody here to vote to keep that kind of thing in existence. They have the right to whatever they want. If they want the financial magnates of the country to own the farms and hold the mortgages and own the various properties of the people lock, stock, and barrel, then they have a right to have that done, and no man like myself has the right to go over there and tell them that they ought to try to elect somebody else to office to represent them. That is something they will have to work out for themselves. That will be their own problem.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires if the Senator from Louisiana yielded the floor?

Mr. LONG. I have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. MURPHY. Certainly.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure the Senator from Iowa, in view of what has gone on, will permit me to occupy the floor briefly.

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, it is very unfortunate that the Senate has to listen to such squabbles as have been occurring so frequently of late between the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] and other Senators. I apologize to my colleagues for occupying the floor now for a brief time to reply to the Senator from Louisiana.

I am sure Senators with whom I have served here, and for whom I have the highest regard and affection, know me well enough to disbelieve anything that might be uttered by the Senator from Louisiana that would reflect upon my integrity or upon my honor; and I am sure the people of Mississippi, who have honored me far beyond my deserts for nearly 30 years now, without on a single occasion having voiced their disapproval at the polls, will not permit such wild and rambling utterances as those of the Senator from Louisiana to influence them. I am sure the good people of the city in which I live, and the people with whom I have come in contact in a business way, know well enough that in all dealings I have ever had with my fellow men, I have tried to live up to every obligation.

I know that there is no other Senator here who would so forget the niceties of his office as to try to juggle in upon this floor the personal affairs of another Senator; and I shall pass by what the Senator said with reference to anything connecting my name with the Union Indemnity Co. by merely saying that I never had any business association with Mr. Meyer Eiseman, of whom he speaks as being in some homestead company which I knew nothing about, except that some years ago, in 1926, when many of us thought we were more prosperous than we are now, and when some of us thought we had at least made a little money in an honest way, I happened to sell to Mr. Eiseman a piece of property for a goodly sum of money. I think he still owes me some $15,000; and when he went broke the note that he gave me was probably in the Union Indemnity Co. or some other bank. So it was his note and his failure, as a result of which I never expect to collect it, that I am held up here now by a Senator in an attempt to blacken the character and public service of one who has tried to live honorably with his fellow citizens.

But be that as it may, I am not the first with whom the Senator has attempted to do that. Some of those in the galleries do not know as you and I know that it is almost a daily occurrence that the Senator makes assaults upon someone. He even brings up the name of an honorable Senator who has gone to his reward, Senator Vardaman, whom to his dying day, even though he and I clashed in political conflict, I held in the highest regard, and today I hold his memory in high respect.

I had been Senator Vardaman's political friend. I supported him in his race for governor. He made a very splendid governor. He and I differed when I came here as a Member of the House. I came here just before President Wilson was inducted into the White House. I am one of those peculiar individuals who believe that when my party is in power it is my duty to work in harness, and that when the country and my party have chosen a leader, it is my duty to follow him. So, during the 8 years that President Wilson graced the White House I followed him as I now follow my present leader in the White House.

It so happened, however, in the tragic days leading up to the war and during the war that Senator Vardaman most conscientiously and honestly differed with me as to governmental policies and as to the prosecution of the war, and the resulting conditions were such that I entered the contest with him upon that issue. There was nothing personal in the matter; and if, as the result of doing that, I am "drinking of his blood", or I am a "traitor", I plead guilty to that charge.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I should like to take occasion at this time to say that the son of former Senator James K. Vardaman is a constituent of mine who lives in the city of St. Louis. He was suggested for appointment as manager of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation at St. Louis. The Senator from Mississippi came to me and very urgently requested me to recommend Mr. James K. Vardaman, Jr., for that office. It so happened that I was happy to do it.

I have discussed the matter with Mr. James K. Vardaman, Jr., and he told me that while, of course, he was for his father in his contest with Senator HARRISON, he has always entertained great affection for Senator HARRISON and always regarded Senator HARRISON as essentially a friend of his father on everything except the direct political issue on which they broke.

Mr. HARRISON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. HARRISON. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope we may proceed as soon as possible to the consideration of pending legislation.

The Senator from Mississippi served for a long time in the House of Representatives, and he has served for a long time here. I never knew him on the floor to make a remark offensive to a fellow Senator unless it was provoked, as I think the remark that he made today was provoked, by the address of the Senator from Louisiana yesterday and today.

I did not hear all the address of the Senator from Louisiana, but I did hear enough to warrant the conclusion that he was impugning the motives and good faith of Senators who took a contrary view of the pending amendment from that which he asserted.

It is regrettable that we cannot always thrash out subjects on their merits here, recognizing the right which the rules of the Senate give us, but which we possess independently of the rules, to entertain and to express our views on public questions unrestrained and unintimidated by denunciatory expressions from others who differ with us.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; although I have not the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator point out the particular statement made in my speech yesterday to which he refers? I know it was not in my speech today, because I only read from the Scriptures.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the tenor of the whole speech yesterday and of the speech today, in my judgment, was to condemn and to criticize, to censure, and to question the good faith, if not the integrity, of those who did not take the position assumed by the Senator from Louisiana on the amendment under consideration.

I do not say this for the purpose of provoking controversy. I say it merely because I feel it my duty to say it. I believe that Senators here who know the Senator from Mississippi know that he is a gentleman at all times, and that if in the heat of debate he makes a statement that is provoked by statements from others, it is merely the result of that human nature which we all possess.

I hope we can get rid of the practice that has become too common here of casting suspicion upon each other's motives, of attempting to intimidate and coerce one another. If we are worthy to be Senators, if we are worthy of the confidence which we must have if we are to perform our duties to the satisfaction of the public, we must recognize that principle.

I thank the Senator from Mississippi for yielding to me.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States is a great body. In all my experience here I have known personally Senators on both sides of the aisle. It has been a great pleasure, it is a source of happiness to serve with men who are gentlemen, because we know, as they are gentlemen, that they understand the niceties of things; and our present practice in that regard ought not to be different from the practice in the past.

As to Louisiana, I think next to my own State I love her people more than those of any other State. I entered college in Louisiana. I know a great many people there. They are a fine lot of people. Louisiana has given some great statesmen and warriors to this country. I suppose in all the history of the country, with the exception of the present senior Senator from Louisiana, none have come here who have found fault with everybody else. I have never known others who have fought their own administration on practically every occasion, who see no good in their colleagues, and who question their motives.

So when the Senator says what he does about me, and tries to blacken my character, I suppose I must console myself with reflecting on what he has done in the case of others. I remember that on one occasion here, when he brought grave charges against General Ansell, who could not reply, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] rose and asked the Senator from Louisiana if he would claim senatorial immunity for making the statement. The Senator said he would not; and yet when General Ansell sued him in the courts he and his lawyer claimed senatorial immunity.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator will note that I stated that that would be my course if he sued me in the courts of Louisiana, either in the Federal court or in the State court.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not hear that statement, and I do not think the RECORD will show it.

Mr. LONG. That was in the statement.

Mr. HARRISON. All right.

Mr. LONG. Now I want to ask the Senator if he does not think I at least ought to have the right to be sued at my domicile if I am going to waive that privilege—if it is an unusual thing for me to ask him to sue me at my domicile. I am not able to go all over the United States and hire lawyers.

Mr. HARRISON. Well, I think if people should sue the Senator anywhere they would have a pretty hard time getting anything out of him, because they simply could not beat him. I say that by way of paying a tribute to the Senator. Anyone who has to suffer as the Finance Committee has suffered every morning now from 10 to 12, if he had a cause of action against the Senator, would never enter it, knowing what he would have to go through.

Mr. LONG. Well, that is not so bad. Go ahead.

Mr. HARRISON. Now, Mr. President, talking about turning on people's backs, a thing happened this morning to which I desire to refer. The Senator held himself up, portrayed his own virtues, and told how true he was.

The Senate heard a speech here the other day from the Senator from Louisiana, in which he held Mr. Bradley up to public scorn. I never saw Mr. Bradley in my life until he came before the committee. The Senator from Louisiana said everything mean about Mr. Bradley that it was possible for him to say, had him brought up here from Florida to testify, and, at the close of the testimony this morning, this man who is held up to public scorn by the Senator from Louisiana swore under oath that in 1928, while he was on a visit to New Orleans, Mr. John P. Sullivan, the other gentleman held up by the Senator from Louisiana before the Senate in speech after speech, came to him and said:

> We have elected a good governor here. I helped to do it. We have a deficit. I want you to donate something for it.

Mr. Bradley testified that he contributed $5,000 to Mr. Sullivan then to help pay off the deficit of Governor LONG, now Senator LONG, who had then been elected governor. Mr. Bradley said the first time he saw the then Governor LONG was in the lobby of the Hotel Roosevelt, in New Orleans, when Mr. Sullivan said, "I want you to meet our new governor." Then it was that Senator LONG came to him and said, "I want to express my appreciation for that donation you made to us."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has Mr. Bradley's word for that. Did he not claim immunity yesterday, under the Constitution, stating that he would incriminate himself if he answered my questions?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not want to go into that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Bradley did not claim immunity.

Mr. BARKLEY. The record will show that Colonel Bradley was brought here by the Senator from Louisiana, and was his witness, testifying in his behalf.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. The RECORD also ought to show that when the Senator from Louisiana propounded his inquiry at least 8 or 10 members of the Finance Committee objected on their own right, as members of the committee, before Colonel Bradley made any objection whatever.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I want to say just one word or two, and then I will be through.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me just a moment? I hope the Senate will understand that I want a moment or two to reply to this gentleman.

Mr. HARRISON. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair at this point wishes to admonish Senators as to the rule that when they yield twice, they yield the floor. No Senator shall speak more than twice on a question before the Senate. After he yields twice he cannot hold the floor.

Mr. BORAH. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BORAH. Who has the floor at the present time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. I understood the Senator from Iowa had yielded to me.

Mr. MURPHY. I did yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I shall not take much more time. We are not under a limitation of debate at this time.

A few days ago there was read from the desk, at the instance of the Senator from Louisiana, what was alleged by the Senator from Louisiana to be a resolution that passed the State Senate of the State of Mississippi, and perhaps the Legislature of the State of Mississippi, endorsing his position on the distribution of wealth.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I do not yield yet.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 21 of this year, on page 4992, I find the following:

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have here a resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi. I read in the newspapers that this resolution had passed the senate of that State. It was sent to me this morning, and I presume it has passed the House of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi. I am going to send it to the desk, and I ask that the clerk may read it, as I was requested to put it in the RECORD by the author of the resolution. I showed the resolution to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who took no exception to my offering it instead of he himself doing so. Therefore I will ask the clerk to read the resolution.

The Senator did hand me a piece of paper, and I read it, and told him that I supposed he had written it on his own typewriter.

I wrote to the State legislature to find out about it, because I had received no such information as the Senator possesses. I am in receipt of a certificate, signed by the secretary of the Senate of the State of Mississippi, saying:

This is to certify that no action has been taken by the senate on senate concurrent resolution no. 30 introduced by Senator Harper, of the forty-second district and styled as follows—

And so forth.

Then it gives the resolution. I am in receipt also of a letter from the chairman of the committee to which this resolution was referred, in which he said that such a resolution was introduced by State Senator Harper, who, I may say, is now a candidate for the United States Senate against my colleague, Senator STEPHENS, but that that is as far as it has gotten, and it never has passed either body of the legislature. I will put these communications into the RECORD. That is all I desire to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Mississippi to place in the RECORD the papers to which he has referred?

There being no objection, the papers were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MISSISSIPPI STATE SENATE,
Jackson, March 24, 1934.

Hon. PAT HARRISON,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: In looking through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 21 this morning, I note that Senator HUEY P. LONG had the clerk read into the RECORD a resolution purporting to have been passed by the Mississippi State Senate, being senate concurrent resolution no. 30.

Such a resolution was introduced on March 5 and referred to committee. No action has been taken on the resolution other than its reference to committee, and in view of this fact, I hasten to advise you of the exact status of the matter. To substantiate what I have stated, I enclose herewith a certificate from the secretary of the senate.

Permit me to take this opportunity to commend you for your splendid work in the Senate during these strenuous times.

With kindest personal regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

W. A. BLAIR.

MISSISSIPPI STATE SENATE,
Jackson, March 24, 1934.

This is to certify that no action has been taken by the senate on senate concurrent resolution no. 30, introduced by Senator Harper, of the forty-second district, and styled as follows:

"S.C.R. No. 30. A concurrent resolution memorializing Congress of the United States to put into effect the policy of Hon. Senator HUEY P. LONG pertaining to the distribution of the wealth of the United States."

The resolution was introduced and referred to the committee on rules.

R. L. BROWN,
Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, if yielding to the Senator from Louisiana will not involve loss of my right to the floor, I will yield to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present temporary occupant of the chair holds, and has always held, that no Senator may yield more than twice. If the Senator should yield this time and one other time, the Senator from Iowa would lose the floor. He can yield once more, as the Chair reads the rule.

Mr. COUZENS. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COUZENS. Did not the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], also to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] during the one time he occupied the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Technically, that is true, but we have been following the practice of allowing a Senator to yield many times, and the Chair at this time will not enforce the rule, but will admonish the Senator from Iowa that if he yields again he will lose the floor.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I ask for a ruling as to whether or not the number of times the Senator from Iowa may yield under the rule has not been exhausted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Technically, that is the view of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. COUZENS. I demand the enforcement of the rule.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I claim the floor in my own right, and I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri is recognized. Does he yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa may not yield in the time of another Senator. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Iowa and other Senators refrain from preventing me from having 3 or 4 minutes to reply to the Senator from Mississippi? I am sure the Senate does not want to exercise any parliamentary strategy to keep me from replying.

Mr. CLARK. So far as I am concerned, I have been listening for 3 or 4 days to the Senator from Louisiana in the Finance Committee and on the floor of the Senate, and the Senator from Iowa, by the objection of the Senator from Michigan, has been deprived of his right to the floor, and, so far as I can, I am going to preserve the right of the Senator from Iowa to state a bona fide proposition having to do with the pending bill, instead of permitting the washing of dirty linen.

Mr. LONG. There is no washing of dirty linen.

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. Not to exceed 4 minutes. I ask the Senator to yield for not to exceed 4 minutes.

Mr. MURPHY. I regret that I cannot yield. Yielding on previous occasions to the Senator from Louisiana and other Senators cost me the floor. I should like to proceed now with the subject I have to discuss. Consequently, I very regretfully decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. LONG. A point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Missouri has yielded. I make the point of order that he can yield only for a question.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator point out the provision in the Senate rules where that is laid down?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair overrules the point of order, and the Senator from Iowa may proceed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7835) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered to the pending bill concerns the tax on gains from the sale of capital assets. It covers section 117 of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The occupants of the gallery will maintain order. If they wish to pass out, let them do so in an orderly manner. It is their duty, under the courtesy they owe the Senate, to maintain order in the galleries, since they are visitors.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, the amendment I have offered to the pending bill concerns the tax on gains from the sale of capital assets, covered in section 117 of the bill. The subject is one which is difficult of understanding by a layman, but my effort will be to clarify it sufficiently for understanding.

A capital asset is defined as real or personal property—real estate, timber and oil lands, mines, and stocks and bonds—not constituting a part of the taxpayer's stock in trade, or inventory.

The amendment does not concern the income from ownership of an asset but the profit realized from the sale of the asset.

From the incidence of income taxes in 1913 to the effective date of the Revenue Act of 1921, passed when Mr. Harding had become President of the United States and Mr. Mellon Secretary of the Treasury, gains from the sale of capital assets were taxed like other profits and income. No distinction was made. All gains and income were viewed alike.

But with the advent of Mr. Harding and Mr. Mellon, preferential treatment was given gains from the sale of capital assets. The act of 1921 decreed a tax of only 12½ percent on the gain from the sale of a capital asset held 2 years or more.

This provision did not benefit a taxpayer whose total income and profit in a single year did not exceed $27,000.

Now, why was that done? Why were gains from sale of capital assets treated differently from other gains and income?

Let judgment of the intent be determined by the results.

It will be a nearly complete answer to the question to state the consequences of doing it. These consequences have never before been fully stated. I am stating them here and now for the first time. They are astounding.

Beginning with 1922, when the 12½-percent rate took effect, from 70 to 88 percent of all such gains have been in incomes of $100,000 or more.

In the 5 years from 1925 to 1929 there were 1,752 individual tax returns showing incomes of $1,000,000 or more. The total income disclosed in those returns was $3,838,000,000, and of this total, $2,137,000,000, or nearly 56 percent, was from capital gains and received the benefit of the 12½-percent rate. Of income amounting to $2,364,000,000 disclosed in returns showing individual incomes from $500,000 to $1,000,000, a total of $1,013,000,000, or close to 43 percent, was from capital gains. Of income amounting to $2,403,000,000 disclosed in returns showing individual incomes from $300,000 to $500,000 capital gains totaled $897,000,000, or over 37 percent, and of income amounting to $7,748,000,000 disclosed in returns showing individual incomes from $100,000 to $300,000, capital gains totaled $2,000,000,000, or nearly 26 percent.

In 1929, when the orgy of speculation reached its peak, the proportion of capital gains to total income among the very wealthy became even greater. Of $4,368,000,000 received in that year by persons reporting individual incomes of $100,000 or more, $2,060,000,000, or more than 47 percent, was from capital gains. Because of the relief provision, these taxpayers—14,816 of them—paid 12½ percent on their capital gains, whereas most of them would otherwise have paid 24 percent—20-percent surtax and 4-percent normal tax. They thus escaped nearly one half the tax they would otherwise have paid on nearly one half of their total incomes.

Of these persons, 513 reported individual incomes of $1,000,000 or more. Their total incomes amounted to $1,212,000,000, of which sum $760,000,000, or nearly 63 percent, was derived from capital gains. Thirty-eight persons reported individual incomes of $5,000,000 or more. Their total incomes amounted to $360,000,000, of which $268,000,000, or more than 74 percent, was capital gains. For these 38 persons the capital-gains relief provision almost halved the tax on nearly three fourths of their total incomes.

The total of capital gains reported by all taxpayers in the 5 years 1925 to 1929 was $7,137,000,000. Of this total, $6,048,000,000 was reported by taxpayers having individual incomes of $100,000 or more. According to the best estimate that can be made from the published figures, the capital-gain provision reduced the tax on that $6,048,000,000 of capital gain by more than $750,000,000. It is fair to assert that at least $600,000,000 of this reduction was not warranted by any just claim on the taxpayer's part.

For the 10 years from 1922 to 1931, inclusive, it is a safe estimate that the tax relief granted by means of the capital-gains provision was not less than $1,000,000,000, enough to pay the mortgage debt on every farm in Iowa, and more than enough to pay all war pensions for an entire year.

I have stated the consequences, and stating them have stated in largest part the reason for the 12½-percent capital-gains tax provision.

I shall state now—and return immediately to discussion of this phase of the subject—that the pending bill ends the 12½-percent tax. But, with repetition of the conditions obtaining from 1925 to 1929, this bill will make a present of $1,000,000,000 to taxpayers having incomes of $100,000 or more. To head that off and render it impossible is the purpose of the pending amendment.

There were specious and plausible arguments advanced in support of the 12½-percent provision. A plausible argument was that the gain which a taxpayer realized from the sale of a capital asset did not originate in any 1 year but was spread over the years of possession; and that to tax in 1 year the gain which accrued over several years was wrong and worked hardship. Therefore, it was argued, relief ought to be accorded taxpayers having gains from the sale of capital assets. That relief, as written into the 1921 act and carried forward to this day, took the form, as I have said previously, of forgiveness of one half to four fifths of the tax that otherwise would be paid by men of very large incomes. There was no rule by which the 12½-percent tax was arrived at; no mathematics that justified it. The highest tax imposed on other forms of income during 1925–29 was 25 percent, so that 12½-percent tax on capital gains was an adroit means of circumventing surtaxes. The relief, as I have shown, was substantial. Into the tin cups of the taxpayers with incomes exceeding $100,000—poor fellows whose circumstances excited pity and who bled and suffered from the hardships imposed by the revenue laws of the Democratic administration—into the tin cups of those citizens Congress, the genius of Andrew Mellon guiding it, poured $750,000,000 in 5 years.

It occurs to me that the term "capital gains" obscures understanding by the common man of what is involved. I have given the definition contained in the law. Let us analyze the character of such gains. Generally speaking, they are nothing more or less than the profits of stock-market speculation and speculation in land and the treasures of the earth, but most largely from stock-market speculation. Being that, they add nothing directly to the national wealth and are therefore less worthy of encouragement than productive business activity. Because of their special and occasional character they are not ordinarily depended on by the taxpayer to meet his customary expenses. Consequently they increase his ability to contribute to the support of government more, perhaps, than any other kind of income.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment until I propound to him a question?

Mr. MURPHY. I will yield only for a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa yields for a question only.

Mr. LONG. I wonder if the Senator would not let me call for a quorum, and then allow me to have just about 4 minutes, because after that time I will gladly yield the floor back to the Senator? There are not a great many Senators present, and I want more of them to come here.

Mr. MURPHY. To hear the Senator's 4-minute speech?

Mr. LONG. No; but I believe the Senator from Iowa can hold them here.

Mr. MURPHY. I think the Chair has ruled that I have not the right to yield.

Mr. LONG. I inquire if the Chair has so ruled?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate fortunately has a definite way of deciding a matter for itself.

If the Chair be wrong, the Senate may overrule the Chair. The present occupant of the chair is, and ever has been, of the opinion that if a Senator, more than twice, upon any one question, yields for more than a mere question propounded to him, and some other Senator then makes the point the Senator loses the floor; but, of course, if the point is not made the Chair is not going to invoke the rule, and the Senator may yield without losing the floor.

With that understanding, does the Senator from Iowa wish to yield to enable the Senator from Louisiana to call for a quorum or for any other purpose?

Mr. MURPHY. I am in the course of a speech, and I should very much prefer to finish it, if the Senator please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa declines to yield at this juncture.

Mr. LONG. Very well.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, because capital gains add nothing to the national wealth they deserve no special consideration. The tax on such gains is a tax on unearned income, and unearned income is not entitled to special consideration. A method of taxation that in 5 years gave $750,000,000 to persons filing 61,057 tax returns—possibly the same persons in each of the 5 years, or 20,000 persons at most—is undeniably a method that accords special privilege to the few.

Although this concession to wealthy taxpayers was expressly granted with respect to speculative profits only, it was actually extended, by manipulation, to much of the income that should have been taxed as dividends. This form of manipulation is unquestionably responsible for a large part of the flood of stock dividends that were issued during the boom period of the last decade. Stock dividends are not taxable when received, and if the stock is held by the taxpayer for 2 years and then sold, he gets the benefit of the 12½-percent rate, instead of paying the regular surtax rates that cash dividends would have borne. No man can say how much tax was avoided in this fashion, but the amount was undoubtedly very large. In 1922, the first year of the capital-gains tax, the amount of stock dividends was extraordinarily large, totaling more than $3,000,000,000. Two years later, in 1924, when profits on the sale of stocks received as dividends would first get the benefit of the 12½-percent rate, the amount of capital gains increased very sharply. Many of the reorganizations that were so common in those years were also engineered so that the participants would get the benefit of the 12½-percent rate on income that would otherwise have borne higher taxes.

Mr. President, we come now to the pending bill.

Decision must now be made whether the Mellon principle of the last few years shall be followed or we shall return to the Democratic plan of the preceding 8 years, making such modifications in the latter as experience with it suggests.

To clear up any misunderstanding in the minds of Senators, the act under which that scandal arose—for it was a scandalous thing to add, at the public expense, so many hundreds of millions to fortunes already vast—that act, I say, is changed radically in the pending bill. The bill discards the flat 12½-percent tax on capital gains, and that is a great step forward. It retains the principle of relief but extends the relief to all taxpayers. It provides as to every taxpayer that if he has held the asset yielding the gain for more than 1 year but not more than 2 years, 20 percent of the gain shall be forgiven him—he will pay no tax on that part of the gain. If the asset has been held for more than 2 years but not more than 5 years, 40 percent of the gain shall be forgiven him. If the asset has been held more than 5 years but not more than 10 years, 60 percent of the gain shall be forgiven him. If the asset has been held more than 10 years, under an amendment added by the Finance Committee, 70 percent of the gain shall be forgiven him. If the asset has been held only 1 year, there is no relief. In all cases, so much of the gain as is subject to tax is taxed like other income. The reduction in tax is in no case less, in terms of percent, than the reduction in income subject to tax. In some cases it is substantially greater, owing to the fact that the tax rates rise as the income increases.

I freely concede that the capital-gains provision in the pending bill is an improvement over the existing law. As compared with that law, it would reduce by nearly one half the total amount of relief granted. It would distribute the remainder more equitably as between large incomes and small, and as between assets held a number of years before sale and assets held barely 2 years. In my judgment, however, the new provision is still much too liberal, especially to taxpayers having very large incomes. My criticism is that the bill carries the relief too far; that it extends relief in many cases where no relief is justified and that it grants too much relief in substantially all cases. Like the earlier capital-gains provisions, it benefits chiefly persons of very large incomes who have no just claim to any relief. Like the earlier provisions, it extends a full measure of relief to the taxpayer who realizes capital gains year after year, in a steady stream.

I have expressed my belief that it is a safe estimate that if we should experience another stock-market boom like that of 1925 to 1929 the unjustified relief granted by this bill on gains from the sale of capital assets would reach a total as high as $1,000,000,000. Conceding that that day is far off, if we should experience a boom of half its volume the unjustified tax relief would be something like half of $1,000,000,000.

This bill is supposed to provide large additional revenues for emergency need. But in section 117 it defeats the very end sought by guaranteeing taxpayers lower taxes if they will hold off sale of capital assets. If the taxpayer shall not sell for more than 10 years, in consideration of that his tax on the gain will be reduced by 70 to 89 percent; if he holds off 5 years, his tax on the gain will be reduced by 60 to 81 percent; if he holds off selling for 2 years up to 5, the reduction of tax will be 20 to 33 percent. This bill cries out encouragement to him not to sell now and rewards him for holding off sale. The longer he holds off up to 10 years the longer will the Treasury be denied taxes, and the less the Treasury will get when sale is finally made. That, to my mind, marks section 117 as ridiculous in a bill to provide emergency revenue.

At a time when the effort is to discourage speculation, the bill puts a premium on speculation for the long pull. It offers a subsidy to such speculation. That, I submit, is not the way to prosperity. If tax favors are to be granted, let them be granted to the producers and not the speculators. In order to remedy the defects of section 117 of the bill it is not necessary to return, completely and unqualifiedly, to the plan in effect before 1922. That plan imposed a heavy burden on the occasional persons of moderate incomes who realized, perhaps once in a lifetime, a capital gain of large amount. The policy of giving adequate relief to such taxpayers can be adhered to without bestowing gratuities of hundreds of millions on the undeserving. The House subcommittee on tax revision, in presenting the plan embodied in this bill, stated admirably the principle on which relief might properly be based. It said:

> The tax on a capital gain should approximate the tax which would have been paid if the gain had been realized in equal annual amounts over the period for which the asset was held.

The Secretary of the Treasury has endorsed that principle. It seems fair and reasonable. Why should we not carry it out in this bill? Section 117, as now drawn, will not do so. The pending amendment will.

The amendment accepts the principle that in some cases relief from taxes arising from capital net gains is justified.

A man may own a capital asset, say a growing tract of timber, which has increased in value every year. When he sells that asset and realizes a gain, the tax on the gain arises in the year of sale, so that he is taxed all in 1 year on gains arising over several years, the number of years he has held the property.

I concede the contention that to do that, to tax him that way, to tax in 1 year gains arising over several years, is inequitable, and my amendment avoids doing that.

The purpose to avoid injustice is the sole justification for any relief provision with respect to capital gains, and the relief afforded should not extend beyond the point where that purpose is accomplished.

One objection to the pending bill is that it extends special relief to all capital gains whether or not they are unusual in amount or occurrence. It does not inquire whether relief is fairly due. It assumes that it is due.

The amendment does justice, following out the committee principle, to the taxpayer having an exceptional capital gain—something that happens to him once in 5 years, and happening then maybe the first time it ever happened.

What about the taxpayer who has, not 1 such capital gain in 5 years but 2, or 3, or 5 such gains? Not 2, or 3, or 5 in 5 years, but 2 or 3 or 5 every year? What about him? What about the taxpayer a large part of whose income every year represents gain from the sale of capital assets? What just claim for relief has he?

The pending bill says he is entitled to a measure of relief equal to that afforded the taxpayer who had only one such gain in several years.

My amendment denies that. My amendment says that the relief shall depend on the frequency of such gains and their amount considered in relation to the taxpayer's other income.

My amendment asks, Is this an extraordinary gain? If it is, relief properly should be accorded; if it is not, there is no just basis for relief.

So my amendment looks at the capital gains for the current year—the taxable year. Then it looks at the capital gains for the preceding 4 years to determine their frequency and if they are unusual in amount. It strikes an average of the capital gains for each of 4 years, and with this as the measure ascertains if the gain for the current year is greater than the average. If it is greater, then relief is extended to the excess and no further. That is as far as relief should go.

My amendment first inquires how long the asset sold has been owned, and, having ascertained that, proceeds with this method of computation:

First. There is computed the tax on the income from usual and ordinary sources—salaries, fees, rents, interest, dividends, and so forth. That done, if the property sold has been owned 2 years, one half the profit is added to the other income and another computation of the tax is made. The difference between the two computations is the increased tax arising from one half the capital gain. This difference is multiplied by 2 and the product is the total tax arising from the capital gain. Added to the other tax, that on usual and ordinary income, the total tax is known.

Now, if the asset sold has been held 3 years, one third the profit is added to other income and the difference multiplied by 3; if 4 years, one fourth and the multiple of 4 is used; if 5 years or longer, by one fifth and the multiple of 5 is used.

It will help to understanding of this to use a simple illustration. Suppose a married man with no dependents and no other income realized a gain of $100,000 on the sale of property he has held 5 years. If we took the position that he was not entitled to any relief, he would have to pay a tax of $30,358 at the rates prescribed in this bill. Under the provisions of this bill he would be forgiven 60 percent of this profit, and consequently would be taxed on only 40 percent of his gain, or $40,000, and his tax would be $5,743.

The tax computed under my amendment would follow this method: One fifth of the income is $20,000. The tax on that is $1,498. The property having been held 5 years, the amount is multiplied by five, making this tax $7,490. If he held it only 2 years, the tax would be under this bill $12,003, and under my amendment $17,266.

I am not going to burden the Senate with a discussion of the detail of computation. It would be impossible to follow an oral statement of it. I therefore ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD, at this point in my address, a statement and computations expressing the effect of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Ordinary income of $100,000. Tax on this under the bill, $30,358. Capital gain of $250,000 on asset held over 5 years. If no relief provision whatsoever, tax would be $174,233. Under the bill, 60 percent of the profit would be forgiven, so that the tax would be on $100,000 plus ordinary income of $100,000. Total, $200,000. Tax, $86,783.
> Under the amendment there is first the ordinary income of $100,000, the tax on which is $30,358. To this income of $100,000 must be added one fifth of $250,000, or $50,000. Total, $150,000. Tax, $58,308. Additional tax on one fifth of capital gain, $27,950. On five fifths it is five times $27,950, or $139,750. Adding the tax on the ordinary income of $100,000, amounting to $30,358, gives a total tax of $170,108.
> Note that $27,950 is exactly equal to 55.9 percent of one fifth of the profit ($50,000), and the total tax of $139,750 is the same percentage of the total capital gain.

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. DUFFY. Can the Senator enlighten me as to the question I am about to ask? I understand that the House committee which investigated the tax situation had a table compiled which showed that in the high-tax years, with possibly one exception, there was a great preponderance of taking of losses; in other words, the tendency was all that way; while in the low-tax years the direct opposite was the case, with the possible exception of 1 or 2 years. I wonder how that table bears out the argument the Senator is making in favor of his amendment.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator asked that question, and I thank him for the observation.

The statistics that are offered in support of the argument that high taxes check profit taking and low taxes encourage it are as weak and unconvincing as the argument itself. The figures have been both distorted and misinterpreted.

In the first place, the classification of the years is faulty. If we consider the rates at which taxes were actually collected on large incomes, in which most capital gains are found, 1924, which is classed as a low-tax year, had higher rates than 1923, which is classed as a high-tax year. On the other hand, if we ignore retroactive changes and consider the rates prescribed by the law which was actually on the statute books during each year, we find that both 1924 and 1925, which are classed as low-tax years, had a higher average rate on large incomes than 1918, which is classed as a high-tax year. Moreover, 1922 and 1923, classed as high-tax years, were actually low-tax years for capital gains on property held 2 years or more. The 12½-percent rate was in effect during both years; but, nevertheless, both years had an excess of capital losses over capital gains, and the gains were lower, in proportion to losses, than they had been in 1919 and 1920, when income-tax rates went up to 73 percent, and there was no relief for capital gains.

Correcting these inaccuracies in classification destroys in large part the correlation the committee claims between tax rates and capital gains. The committee's main error, however, consists in the misinterpretation of such correlation as is found. The committee makes the unsupported assumption that the changes in tax rates caused the fluctuations in capital gains. In fact, it seems more likely that for the greater part of the period under consideration the changes in capital gains and other income caused the changes in tax rates. During the entire decade from 1920 to 1930 the Treasury Department and the Congress were continuously subjected to intense pressure aimed at the reduction of income-tax rates. The United States Chamber of Commerce, backed by substantially all the business interests of the country, conducted year after year a systematic campaign for lower taxes. It became difficult for the Treasury and the Congress to resist that pressure sufficiently to insure adequate revenues to meet the needs of the Government.

During that period revenue requirements were not substantially increasing. Every increase in the total amount of taxable income therefore afforded an opportunity to reduce tax rates and still provide the money needed for the support of the Government. Under the circumstances it was inevitable that the opportunity should be promptly seized.

Two of the three substantial tax reductions of this period were made retroactively, after the income on which they were based had been earned. After the close of 1923 a reduction of 25 percent was made in the taxes for that year, and the Revenue Act of 1924 merely continued approximately the same reduction for the following year. After the close of 1925 the tax rates for that year were again lowered by about 25 percent, and the revenue acts of 1926 to 1928 merely continued that reduction. Again, after the close of 1929, a reduction was made in the tax rates for that year, but it was not continued, owing to the rapid shrinking of the national income in 1930. Only once during the decade were tax rates reduced in advance. That was the reduction that took effect on January 1, 1922, when the 12½-percent rate was established for capital gains.

It must be clear to everyone who reviews the income-tax history of that decade that the amount of income realized actually controlled the tax rates. The increase in capital gains from a net loss of one billion three hundred and seventy million in 1921 to a net gain of four billion five hundred and ninety-five million in 1928 helped greatly to make the tax reductions possible. An increase in other kinds of income, arising from the same causes, did the rest.

I shall try to make it equally clear that during the same period the tax rate had no perceptible effect on the realization of capital gains. So far as the statistics show, the amount of gains and losses realized depended entirely on the fluctuations in the prices of the property sold, and on nothing else. To make that plain, I have had a chart prepared showing the amount of capital gains reported in income returns from 1917 to 1931. The chart also shows the changes in the Standard Statistics Co.'s index of stock prices for those years. The solid black line shows the changes in capital gains—whether held more or less than 2 years—in billions of dollars. The solid red line shows the fluctuations in the annual average price of 404 listed stocks—rails, industrials, and utilities—the 1926 average being taken as 100, and the averages for the other years being stated in percentages of the 1926 average. So far as I can ascertain, this is the best of the published stock-price indexes. For capital gains, 4 inches in height represents a billion dollars. For stock prices, 3 inches in height represents 10 percent of the 1926 average.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is there any relation between those 404 listed stocks and the unlisted stocks with respect to their prices and the fluctuations in their values in the market?

Mr. MURPHY. I may say to the Senator that I am advised that the Standard Statistics Co.'s index did not take into account any unlisted stocks.

The remarkable agreement between these two movements is apparent at a glance. When stock prices went up, capital gains went up. When stock prices went down, capital gains went down. When the change in stock prices was large, the change in capital gains was also large.

It is worth while also to look at the separate figures for gains on the sale of property held 2 years or more and for gains on the sale of property held less than 2 years. Unfortunately, no figures as to the net gains of those classes are available for any year prior to 1924, but beginning with that year the long-term gains are shown by the broken black line with the long dashes, and the short-term gains are shown by the broken black line with the short dashes. The two lines start about together in 1924, but from that time until 1928, short-term gains increased faster than long-term gains, although the average tax rate paid on short-term gains by persons having incomes of $100,000 or more was from 40 to 125 percent higher than the tax rate on long-term gains. In this case, at least, the effect claimed by the House subcommittee seems to have been completely reversed.

To complete the picture, the tax rates for the various years have also been plotted on the chart. To do this it was necessary to determine average rates, for the entire rate schedule could not be plotted. Since 70 to 88 percent of the capital gains on assets held 2 years or more were concentrated in incomes of $100,000 or more, the average effective rate on such incomes was adopted as the most significant figure. This rate is shown by the solid violet line on the chart. Since the transactions in any year are not affected by laws enacted after the close of the year, all retroactive changes in rates have been ignored, and each change has been shown as of the date when the law making it was enacted.

Beginning with 1922, the effective rate on profits from the sale of property held 2 years or more has been shown by a broken violet line with long dashes, and the effective rate for profits from the sale of property held less than 2 years, when included in incomes of $100,000 or more, has been shown by a broken violet line with short dashes.

The chart shows that the earlier part of the period 1917 to 1921 was marked, in general, by high tax rates and low capital gains and that the later part of the period was marked by low taxes and high capital gains. It gives no support, however, to the inference of the House subcommittee that the changes in tax rates were the cause of the changes in gains and losses. There is no such close agreement between the two as we find between stock prices and capital gains. I have already pointed out that the figures with respect to long-term and short-term gains seem to contradict the subcommittee's inference flatly. It is also notable that during the continuance of the level 12½-percent rate, the total amount of capital gains rose from a net loss of one billion three hundred and seventy million to a net gain of four billion five hundred and ninety-five million and fell again to a net loss of seven hundred and eighty-four million. The greater part of this tremendous change took place, moreover, under a constant tax rate for short-term gains also.

In the years 1917 to 1920 the situation was somewhat different from the situation in 1921 to 1929. The high tax rates in the earlier years were not due primarily to a reduced national income but rather to the extraordinary revenue requirements incident to the war. Conditions growing out of the war were also responsible for the decline in security values during those years, and so, indirectly, for the reduction in capital gains. The work of the War Industries Board and the War Labor Board in holding prices down and keeping wages up; the very heavy profits taxes, reducing the amount of corporate earnings available for dividends, the competition of the Government, through the Liberty Loan drives, for all available investment funds, the resulting high interest rates—all these things tended to keep security prices down, despite the fact that those years were times of considerable prosperity for the great mass of the population.

The Standard Statistics Co.'s index of stock prices does not go back of 1918. For earlier years the best stock-price index is probably the Dow-Jones index for industrial stocks. It shows that such stocks reached a high point in 1916; declined in 1917 and again in 1918, recovered in 1919, passing the 1916 mark, and declined again in 1920 and 1921. They did not substantially pass the 1916 level until 1924. These movements correspond closely with the movements of realized capital gains and losses, as shown in black on the chart. However, a better index for our purposes is furnished by Dr. Willford I. King's estimate—in his study of the national income—of the total value of all outstanding common stocks, preferred stocks, and bonds of certain industries at the end of each year from 1916 to 1922. This estimate covers substantially all stocks and bonds of industrial, railroad, and public-utility companies. It has been adjusted to eliminate the effect of new issues and retirements. It is shown by the triple red line at the bottom of the chart. As will be seen, it rises less sharply in 1919 and 1922 than the Standard stock-price index, doubtless because of the inclusion of bonds and preferred stocks, which were continuously depressed during this period by the high interest rates that resulted from the war.

It will be seen that this line agrees very closely with the black line showing the net capital gains and losses realized from 1917 to 1922. Gains went down when security values went down; gains went up when security values went up. During the whole period security values were depressed. Therefore during the whole period losses exceeded gains.

STOCK DIVIDENDS

It is worthy of note that capital gains showed an exceptionally sharp upward movement, as compared with stock prices, in 1924–25. This sharp advance took place 2 years after a great distribution of more than $3,000,000,000 of stock dividends in 1922, following the adoption of the 12½-percent rate. It suggests the magnitude of the tax evasion accomplished in this way.

This chart makes it unmistakably plain that tax rates have not had any appreciable effect on the realization of capital gains. There have doubtless been isolated cases in which sales have been deferred because of high taxes, but these cases have not seriously affected the general trend. In the face of this showing, it is nothing less than absurd to contend that the reduced tax rates provided by this bill would double the amount of profits taken. Yet they would have to do that in order to offset the reduction in rates and prevent loss of revenue. They would have to do more in order to increase the revenues.

The belief that the Government cannot collect taxes on capital gains as on other income is wholly unjustified by experience. It is due partly to inadequate, superficial study of the evidence. But I am constrained to believe that it is due much more to the deliberate effort of taxpayers of great wealth to escape high taxation on the larger part of their incomes—on the part that in most cases has formed the foundation of their fortunes.

As one Senator sitting on this side of the Chamber, where was drawn the first of the income-tax laws, and where was written into law the principle that gains from sale of capital assets shall be taxed like other income, I do not purpose to sit here mute and idle while that principle is rejected and there is written into law the undemocratic principle of special privilege to a particular class of taxpayers, and that class least of all entitled to preferential treatment.

There have been times when those in places of power in this Republic have delighted to heap favors on the very wealthy at the expense of the great mass of the people. Sometimes it has seemed that their leading aim has been the further concentration of wealth and power in the hands of a favored few. But those have not been times when the Democratic Party was in power. With the election of a Democratic President and a Democratic Congress we left those times and broke away from that philosophy. We have entered on a new era and started a new deal. We have announced a policy of building up the incomes of the farmers and the laboring men. We have come to see that the Nation's prosperity depends on the purchasing power of those masses rather than on the investing power of the very wealthy few. What, then, can justify us in adopting a measure like the one now under consideration, which halves the tax, and so doubles the profits, of the wealthy speculators at the expense of the farmers, the laboring men, the merchants, the manufacturers, and the conservative investors of the country?

Mr. President, I feel that my honored colleagues on the Finance Committee have been misled in their acceptance of section 117 of this bill. The many other weighty matters demanding their attention have prevented them from delving into the details of this intricate question. In no other way can I explain their approval of a provision that continues so many of the bad features of the vicious tax policy of the last three administrations. I hope that after a full consideration of the facts they will join in rejecting that policy decisively and finally. I ask their approval, and that of the Senate as a whole, to the substitute I have offered to section 117.

I thank the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] are necessarily detained from the Senate.

I desire to announce also that the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is absent from the Senate because of a severe cold.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope I may have the attention of the Senate for just a few minutes. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has not been interrupted in the course of his remarks, under the rule of the Senate which forbids any reflection upon a Senator, and in the course of his reflections upon me I am glad to say there has been no effort to apply strictly subdivision 2 of rule XIX, as was done when I had the floor.

However, when the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] had the floor he gave as his authority and accepted as his authority one E. R. Bradley's unsupported statement. I am going to show what kind of support it is for the charge which the Senator made against me on the floor of the Senate that $5,000 had been paid to a man by the name of Sullivan to help clear up a deficit in the campaign in which I was interested when I ran for Governor in the year 1928. I want to show what was within the knowledge of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] at the time he made that charge. I want to show what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] knew when he made that statement on the floor of the Senate. I want to show who the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has for his spiritual support for the charge he has made here on the floor of the Senate and heralded to the world. He said that Bradley did not claim immunity, I believe, and as I understood him to say here on the floor of the Senate. Let us see. Here is the question:

Senator LONG. What is your business?

Mr. BRADLEY. I am a speculator. I breed horses and race horses, and gamble.

Senator LONG. Do you run a gambling house in Florida? I will put it that way.

Mr. BRADLEY. I told you that I gamble. When you specify a place, I stand on my constitutional rights.

Mr. LAMBERT.—

That was his lawyer.

We object to that.

The CHAIRMAN.—

Being the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in question. Said the said Senator from Mississippi, presiding:

Of course, I do not know how the committee feels about it, but I do not feel that any witness is compelled to incriminate himself on any proposition.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I do not yield to the Senator from Missouri. I hold the floor this time.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is well advised. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. I have had experience before. The Senator from Missouri was one of the gentlemen who had some part in preventing me taking the floor a little while ago. I feel about him like the man felt who was about to be hanged. The sheriff took him out to the platform and said, "You have 15 minutes to speak to the crowd and you can say anything to them you want to." The condemned man said, "I do not believe I want to say anything." About that time a gentleman back in the crowd said, "Mr. Sheriff, if he does not wish to consume his 15 minutes, I am a candidate for the United States Senate, and I should like to know if he would yield his time to me." The condemned man said, "I have no objection, Mr. Sheriff, to yielding my time to him, but if it is just the same to you I should like you to hang me first, because I have seen that bird before." [Laughter.]

I have had some experience this afternoon with my friend from Missouri and I came out second best, so I do not care to get into a colloquy with him again in connection with this matter.

Mr. President, that was not the only thing to be said to the credit of my friend the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and his good motives, that he brought here, as his cornerstone and sole support for this charge that he has hurled, a witness for whom he interposed a sustaining ruling that he could not be made to incriminate himself. This man who, in the words of the chairman of the committee [Mr. HARRISON], would have been a criminal had he opened his mouth, is the authority of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] for hurling an otherwise unsupported charge against a United States Senator, a former Governor of a State, and his friend.

Mr. President, just one more thing. Have I said anything that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has disputed as being true? Not a word that I said on the floor of the Senate is disputed as to its truth by the Senator from Mississippi. Not a word that I said here is disputed. He deplores the fact that I mentioned that a Mr. Meyer Eiseman, through transactions between the two of them, owed the Union Indemnity Co. $15,000 when it went broke; and yet they published my picture and my photograph in magazines and newspapers throughout the country as being a culprit contributing to the destruction of that company, and not one word was uttered on the floor of the Senate in defense of me by my friend from Mississippi, although he was the one against whom they might have made the charge of having contributed to the insolvency of that institution by reason of being a creditor of the concern against whom they could not get judgment.

Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator [Mr. HARRISON] says he thinks anybody who would sue me would have a hard time getting any money out of me. He ought not to make that charge. The pot ought not to call the kettle black, if I am black.

Mr. President, if one man in the Senate ought not to make that charge, certainly, with our banks holding notes of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], he ought not to say that they could not get anything out of me, because, even though they lose every dime they ever loaned to me; and would not consider that a bad thing, even though I did owe them something that I could not pay them; but I want this to be known: I do not owe anybody—thank God!—a copper cent that I cannot pay, except men who are willing tonight to write it off the books; because, Mr. President and gentlemen of the Senate, it is publicly known that every dollar I have had to go in the hole for was spent to fight for free schools and paved roads and for the insane of the State of Louisiana. And the men who contributed to me and loaned me money, when my money ran out and I had no more, are good citizens, and they have seen the results, even though they lose every dime they ever loaned me; and there is not a single one who ever loaned anything to me that I owe anything to who is insolvent or owes anything to a bank, although it would not be against them if they did, because the best of our people are insolvent today.

Now, one thing further about a man whom the Senator from Mississippi has used as a witness:

He used as his witness this Colonel Bradley, Mr. President, who testified under oath that he gave that money, not to me, but he gave it for a campaign of mine after I had been elected, and he says he had never seen me, had never met me, and did not know me, and did not know me from Adam; and yet he gave $5,000, he says, 6 years ago, for a man he had never met, for a man he did not know, and without any request from me, but on the request of his business "pal" in the gambling business.

Strange, was it? Oh, no; that is good evidence, according to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], from a man who had to plead his constitutional rights against incriminating himself; a man who said he had never even met me, and did not know me up until that time; and then there is something else which the Senator from Mississippi did not mention which I think the Senator from Mississippi could have mentioned.

According to this man, he saw me only one time after that, and only by chance, as I passed him when I was going through the lobby of a hotel, and he says that I was introduced to him, and that I merely said to him, "Thank you for the contribution", and passed on, without stating the amount of the contribution, or anything of the kind.

Strange things further, such acts of ingratitude, that I simply passed the man when I never had seen him, and he had contributed to me without ever having seen me or known me, contributing to Sullivan? Strange things, are they, that for 5 years, according to this man's own testimony, I have denounced him in every term he was capable of being called? And you have to go pretty strong to do it. According to him, for 5 years he and his partners have said everything against me they could say, and I have said everything against them I could say, and for 5 years this man says he has never made a charge of that kind, nor has he seen or heard of where Mr. Sullivan has made that charge.

There is something else the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] said, after giving as his witness and as his authority a man who had to invoke the rule that he would incriminate himself if he answered, the man who had to say that for 5 years he had been my enemy, and had said everything he could think of about me, a man who made the statement that he made a contribution to a man he had never seen in his life, whom he did not even know. They gave him as a man to make the charge and then to say, "There is our testimony", a man who had admitted everything on earth that I charged on the floor of the Senate in order to make out this claim.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] said we ought not to bring up personal affairs on the floor. I did not bring up the personal affairs on this floor. I was attacked here by the Senator [Mr. HARRISON] in language and in charges that should not have been used against any Senator on this floor.

They say it was justified because of the speech I made only yesterday. I want Senators who were here on yesterday, and those who were not here, to read the speech I made, and determine for themselves what there was I said here yesterday on this floor that could give any personal offense. I simply went along stating the absolute truth, what I had said many times before, to which no one had taken any exception. I simply said that on this side and on the other side we had stood for a program that had come out of Mr. Hoover's own personal good will, and that the leaders on this side and the leaders on the other side had stood that way and voted down the liberal and progressive element, as we styled ourselves.

Everybody knows that is true. There is nobody who is going to say that is not a fact. I am not condemning the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FESS]. He asked me a few questions in regard to the matter. He was one of the Senators on the other side of the Chamber who was a Republican standpatter, who stood with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] here last year.

The thing I said, and I mean what I say in absolutely the best of faith, is that it is disgusting now for the Republican Senator from Ohio or the Democratic Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] to have a fight over the line as to who is responsible for the conditions that have come about as the result of their activity in Congress, when the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Mississippi went arm in arm, toe to toe, cheek to cheek, knee to knee, heel to heel all through the whole congressional performances and they have no grievance or right to complain at each other.

That is not any criticism that is in any sense reflecting upon the Senators. That is my view. That is my opinion about the matter. They may be right in the stand they have taken. I do not think they are half right. I do not think they are any more right than they think I am right, and I am satisfied they do not think I am right at all. But that did not justify the statement coming this morning from the Senator from Mississippi, who rose here on the floor of the Senate and out of a clear sky took a pot shot at me and said that he wanted to say that the Senator from Louisiana had less influence in the United States Senate than any man who sat in this body.

The Senator from Mississippi has been pretty good at that kind of remarks. I am not one of the wits. I am not schooled in nor do I classify as an expert in the art of repartee. I have not had the opportunity to practice it so very much. When my good old State university was pouring out its funds, as my good friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] tells, and something of which we are very proud, and giving him the chance of a college education, I did not have that kind of a chance to get a college education. I did not have a chance to get a high-school education, Mr. President, and I am not skilled nor schooled up to the point where I am capable of making witty remarks or indulging in repartee or keeping to all the niceties of grammar with one like the Senator [Mr. HARRISON], who has had the opportunity of education in which our State university has been so fortunate as to share and for which we claim great credit and of which we are very proud.

But the Senator has to start out on somebody, and then when that somebody goes back at him like he goes at the other, then the Senator rises up and immediately draws the holy mantle of innocence about himself and says that there has been a terrible breach of etiquette committed on the floor of the Senate because that somebody said something about him.

Never touch a porcupine unless you expect to get some quills in you. That has been a good rule to follow.

Lay off of the man whom you want to lay off of you. That is a pretty safe rule to follow if you want to keep from being attacked.

Another safe rule to follow is to just let the other man alone and he is not going to bother you. But when you get up here and jump on somebody and stomp him in the ground, and then when he jumps up after having been flattened out and makes some slight protestation and defense of himself with statements that are absolute facts, which statements the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] does not even stop to correct to the extent of one jot or one tittle, and then he draws about himself the holy mantle of innocence and protests that that is not etiquette, I do not think that is in point.

Do not play the baby act after you roared like a lion.

I made that mistake in early life. I jumped on one or two men myself way down yonder. I jumped on a little man, who was about 5 feet 1 inch high, in a court room. He came off the witness stand and shook his finger in my face, and he was a little stripling kind of a fellow and it looked like a pretty easy job, and he had given me plenty of offense, so I just took a pass at him. And that is the last pass I took that day, or for several days. [Laughter in the galleries.]

My friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] does me an injustice which I will not do him. I will never misstate his record here. I know he does not intend to misstate my record here, but he says that I fought the administration all up and down the line and that I always went to fight my administration. Well, now, I will compare my record with that of the Senator from Mississippi on that, and see who is right and who is wrong on that question.

We can start right with the time when we met in Chicago for the Democratic convention. The Roosevelt forces had decided they were going to elect Thomas J. Walsh for permanent chairman. I will tell the Senate that I went down the line and worked day and night to elect Tom Walsh permanent chairman, and I will leave it to the Senator from Mississippi to tell the Senate who he worked for for permanent chairman; and I will say that I went in and called the members of the Mississippi delegation into conference with me and worked with them, and fought what I understood to be the attitude of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] just as hard as I knew how, in order to get that Democratic vote to stand with the Roosevelt ticket from Mississippi to elect Tom Walsh permanent chairman; and I want to tell you that we did not have any too many votes to spare.

If we had not elected Tom Walsh as permanent chairman, Franklin D. Roosevelt would not have been nominated as candidate for President of the United States, and everyone who was at that convention knows that I am telling the Senate the truth. If we had not had the chairman we could not have nominated Roosevelt there, and Goodbye, My Honey, I Am Gone would have been sung early in the day.

I went in to the Mississippi delegation, and they took a vote as to whether they stood one way or the other, and I understood—I may be in error about this, and if I am in error, I want to be corrected—that the Senator from Mississippi stood against the Roosevelt chairman, and that the side that I helped there, including a Governor that I had done some good for, stood the other way. If I am in error, I ask to be corrected.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator is just as much in error about that as he is in error concerning everything else. The record shows that I voted for Senator Walsh for permanent chairman.

Mr. LONG. You did? Then I am glad to stand corrected. You did? How many votes did we have? Did we need yours in that delegation?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not want to be catechized in that way by the Senator. That does not have anything to do with the question now under consideration.

Mr. LONG. I may be wrong. I may have misunderstood. I will say in defense of myself that I understood you were not.

I will come to another point. Then we decided that we would try to revoke the two-thirds rule so we could nominate by a majority. That was a move that we were trying to make from the Roosevelt side of the fence, and we thought we were twice within hailing distance of getting there. But in dropped the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and said that was all wrong. That may be a mistake, but I have a picture from a Chicago newspaper with his words right underneath his picture saying that what we were trying to do there at that time was all wrong; and we finally gave up that effort, although I want to say that I had the pledge from more than the majority of the delegation from the State of Mississippi that they would vote that a majority could nominate if it came to a vote. I may be wrong about that. If I am wrong, I am willing to be corrected, and I will acknowledge my error.

Then I will go one more step. I will go one step farther. When it came to the question as to seating the Louisiana delegation, the test vote, the first vote put up by that convention, the Roosevelt and the anti-Roosevelt delegations from the State of Louisiana were in contest. A vote was taken in regard to that contest. That was the first vote that hung up its sign. When the Louisiana contest came up that was the test, Mr. President, on whether we were going to be able to elect a permanent chairman or do anything else there or not. That was the vote that was going to tell the tale.

Now, I may be in error about this, but I met my friend from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and I asked him how he had voted in his delegation, and he told me that he had voted for the other delegation.

That may be a mistake again. If it is, I beg the pardon of the Senator from Mississippi and I will acknowledge my error.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Louisiana will yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator came and thanked me for the delegation voting for his delegation being seated, and I told him that I deserved no thanks; that I, as one member of the delegation, had voted against seating his delegation.

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir. Well, the Senator is certain that I thanked him for voting for me. If I did, I want the Senator to know that I knew he voted against me the night before.

So, Mr. President, had the vote gone the way the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] voted to start with, the test vote might not have been so favorable for Roosevelt. I do not think that they got more votes for Walsh than they did for the Louisiana delegation. No. We got more votes than we could poll for Walsh. Why? Because there had been a statement given out down here from some of the Roosevelt fellows that they had no objection to Mr. Jouett Shouse being the permanent chairman of that convention, and if it had not been for the revolutionary element that went in there and told them that if they let Mr. Shouse be chairman of the convention we could not nominate Roosevelt, it is probable they would have slipped right in and made Mr. Jouett Shouse the permanent chairman of that convention.

Now let us take up the record since the convention as to how we stood by this administration. Mr. Roosevelt needed money. He had to get money. We went out in Louisiana to raise it. I designated as my spokesman for that event the brother-in-law of the brilliant Senator from Missouri, a Mr. Thomson, who published a number of articles and wrote a number of articles, and under him I organized my forces throughout the State to get the money for the campaign.

How much did we raise? I think we raised first and last for the Roosevelt cause around $69,000, with a quota of only $30,000. When I was up in New York City I was called in and asked to raise a little more money at one time, and I did. When I went up through the State of North Dakota I paid all the expenses we had in that State, and gave some money that we left behind. When I went through the State of South Dakota we paid all the expenses there and left some more money behind. When I went through the State of Kansas we paid the expenses there and left some more money behind that came out of the State of Louisiana that we had raised.

We got a great deal of thanks for it. The internal-revenue collector indicted one of the men the other day down there that was one of those contributors, without ever calling on him to pay a single dime and without saying he had underpaid, after one of his inspectors had reported that he could not find anything on him with which to charge him. They put him out of the internal-revenue offices and in the home-loan bank because he could not. That is the same treatment we got.

I was called on in New York City at one time and told by a gentleman there—I have forgotten his name, but he was a little bit of a low-ceiling fellow that wore glasses. He said, "Here is a list of all the jobs you will get. We want some more money." He said, "Go to these men that you are going to give these jobs, and get them to kick in. You are going to have all these jobs to give out. You are national committeeman and you are Senator and you have elected your friend and you are in with the Governor. The national committeewoman is with you, so you are going to be the man that will wear the big hat." He gave me the number of them, but I forget how many there were. They had the thing down scientifically. We ran a very scientific campaign. They had them all numbered as to how much money we could get.

I looked up the law, and I did not know whether it might be exactly right for me to do it or not, so I kind of hinted to the boys that there would be some jobs coming. [Laughter.] I just let them know there was a Christmas tree back there somewhere in the backyard, and they kicked in their coin once or twice.

The next thing I knew when I went back home they had appointed all the other men to the jobs and my men who had not got in egged me. I was egged by the men who kicked in the money and who I understood were going to get the jobs. The next thing I knew they egged me and indicted the poor devils who had kicked in the money and were all dressed up with no place to go. You can sit up and smile to the fellows with the full stomachs when you get that patronage and do not do anything to get it, but it is sure hard when the fellows kick in with their money and then have to sit on the side and watch someone else who did not kick in a thin dime get all the jobs. It troubles you a little. It does not make you feel as good as you might.

Of course, a man ought not to get mad about a thing of that kind. If he did get mad about it, he ought to keep his mouth shut and not say a thing; but some of us have not learned the spelling book as well as we ought to, and so we do not keep our mouths shut. But do not take our votes and our delegations and our money and then get mad at us. Do not get mad at us because I had a row with my friend in the State of Mississippi who is now Governor down there, when I sat back on the second and third ballots with the man who is my friend and said things he got very mad about, but he forgave me and went ahead with another vote. Do not get mad for the work we did in Arkansas. I think from that time up until election time I have had just about as good an administration record as the Senator from Mississippi.

Now we come along. The Senator from Mississippi is a better-schooled legislator than I am. He has a lot more of influence than I have, he says. He is a man of greater influence than I am. He has influence and I have a vote. "Give me the votes and you can have the influence" has always been my system of politics.

I did not stand for the banking act. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] voted with the President when the President was in error. I voted with the President when he was right. When the President came in with the banking act I supported an amendment to save the State banks, and, lo and behold, after we fought for several days, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the President pro tempore of this body, rose and said that it had been agreed at the White House to take care of the State banks and he did not understand how it had ever been taken out of the bill. After we fought them behind the guns and had to be classed as unfriendly to the administration, then the administration yielded, folded up, and took in the State banks. Then that became an administration policy, and yet we are called "Bolsheviks" because we worked and fought to make the administration take care of the State banks. So all the credit goes to the great Senator from Mississippi, because he was with the administration all down the line. That is easily done.

I voted against the economy bill. I guess that is a charge the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] can justly make against me. I voted against it. I was not in Congress when war was declared, but the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] was. I was not here to vote to send the young men to war, but the Senator from Mississippi was here and voted to send them to war. The Senator from Mississippi not only voted to send them to war, but he voted for the draft act which the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] described on the floor of the Senate the other day as leaving the men of this country the alternative of being shot here or being shot at over yonder.

Now coming down to the economy bill, from which I was distracted by the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has a right to say I did not vote for the economy bill; and I say again—I have been disrupted in my line of thought—that I was not here to vote to send the young men to war, but the Senator from Mississippi was, and he voted to send them to war. I was not here to vote to pass the Draft Act to make them go to war whether they wanted to go or not, but the Senator from Mississipi [Mr. HARRISON] was here, and he did vote to send them to war, whether they wanted to go or not. But, Mr. President, I was here in the month of March 1933 when the issue came up as to whether or not we would take the disabled veterans of the wars out of the hospitals and throw them into the alleys and the byways; whether we would take the widows of those who did not come back, and those enfeebled persons who did come back, those people who had gone through the carnage of hell that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] had voted to send 3,000 miles away, and throw them out on the streets. I was not here to vote to send them to the war in 1917, but when the time came up to throw them out of the hospitals and take them off the rolls and leave them in destitution, I was here to vote against the economy bill that did it; and I am worthy of all the condemnation that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] can heap upon me now for having been one, I think, of the three or four on this side of the Chamber who voted against the economy bill.

So I am to be castigated for that; but evidently we were not so far wrong. Only a few days ago, when we undertook to undo some 75 or 80 percent of that injustice, what happened in this body and in the House of Representatives? More than two thirds of the Membership of both bodies, and three fourths of the Membership of the other House, I think, voted to override a Presidential veto in order to undo 75 or 80 percent of that harm. Yet I am to be condemned, according to the words of the Senator from Mississippi, for the stand that I took; and yet the Senator from Mississippi can extol himself for the stand that he took.

Now, the Senator may be right. I want it understood that I am not impugning motives. He may be right. Let us say he was right in voting to send these boys to war, and that I was wrong. That is all right. That is a difference of opinion, and we two will not be the only persons to differ. Let us say, further, that after he voted to send them to war he was right in voting to take them out of the hospitals when they did not have a loaf of bread to eat. Let us say that he was right in voting to take them off the pay rolls when they were there, with their wives and their little children begging for bread. Let us say that he was right, and that I was wrong. We are not the only two men who have differed on that question. But why condemn me? There are plenty of other people who are in my position. Two thirds of both Houses have voted that we did wrong in the first place. Two thirds of both Houses have voted to rescind over 75 percent of those injustices; and so I stand on that and say that I am not to be condemned.

Well, those are two things. What is the next thing you are going to condemn me for?

True, I criticized the farm program and then voted for it. True, I have criticized it. Mr. President, I led the world off in the "ha! ha!" against the program of Herbert Hoover to plow up every fourth acre, and yet I was here when we did what Hoover said, and a little bit more, in ploughing up every third acre; and yet I voted for it, trying, Mr. President, to yield everything I could, or thought I could, to be in harmony with the Democratic administration.

My friend the Senator from Mississippi does not give me credit, however, for some things I have voted for.

I voted for most of the bills, including the P.W.A. bill, although I voted to strike out the part that created the N.R.A.; but after that was retained I voted for the bill in order to get the other two titles of the bill, especially the Public Works title.

I voted for the farm relief bill, and for the inflation measure.

I voted for the reduced gold-dollar bill, and everything else that I could vote for. I have supported nearly all of them, Mr. President. Every one that was down the alley of our platform I have supported. There is not a thing that was in line with the platform we adopted that I have not supported, every one of them; and I challenge any man, now or at any future time, to show me any one single thing that I have voted against that was a part of the Democratic platform at the Chicago convention.

I will say further that while the President declared that he was in favor of something like the St. Lawrence Waterway that I voted against, on the other hand he declared for several other things that were not in the platform that the regular Democratic organization of the United States Senate did not support, either; so we are pretty well 50-50 on that kind of a basis.

I am not going to take up the time of the Senate further except to make one further personal answer to what the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has said.

Mr. President, I received an envelop containing a resolution that was supposed to have been passed by the senate and House of Mississippi, and there was not anything in it but a resolution. I had read in a paper somewhere of a resolution, and I thought I had read that it had passed; but I had received a telegram, which telegram I now have and shall be glad to file with the Senate, informing me that this resolution had been passed in Mississippi; and when I got the resolution it said, "Copy of this is sent to HUEY P. LONG with the request that he put it in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD." So I showed it to the Senator from Mississippi, and we had a few jovial words about it. I took it that it was all good humored. But the Senator now speaks as though he was very serious about what he was doing, but I thought he was in just good humor about it.

I thought the resolution had been passed and that I would have a little fun with him, knowing that he was not in line at all with my ideas on the matter. I saw him passing through the aisle, and accosted him and said, "Here is a little resolution that I got from Mississippi, and since it is from your State, I know you are going to be mighty proud to have the pleasure of offering it for the RECORD." He read it and smiled—I thought he smiled—and said to me, "I bet you wrote it on your typewriter and would not even trust a stenographer to write it."

I went down to the lunch table and had this document in my pocket, and showed it to some other Senators, telling them that the senior Senator from Mississippi had been instructed by the legislature of that State to do what we told him to do about this plan I was advocating, and I was satisfied he was going to get in line. We had quite a little jovial talk about it, and many of us had smiled, and I thought enjoyed the little incident. I brought the resolution up here, thinking it had been passed in Mississippi, and sent it up to the desk and had it put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I stated that I did not know for certain that it had been passed, but had read in a newspaper that it had, and that I had been asked to put it into the RECORD.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator stated it had passed the senate. The RECORD shows that.

Mr. LONG. Let me see the RECORD. The Senator has it there.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator can read it out loud, if he wishes.

Mr. LONG. I said:

I have here a resolution adopted by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi. It was sent to me—

I had a newspaper reporting that.

It was sent to me this morning.

I construed it to mean that it had passed. It could be that, the way it read, it was only being introduced. There appeared on it "S. 30."

And I presume it has passed the House of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi. I am going to send it to the desk, and I ask that the clerk may read it, as I was requested to put it in the RECORD by the author of the resolution.

It will be found on the resolution that I was asked to put it in the RECORD. This came to me in a State envelop—it might have been from the executive department, or it might have been the legislative, or the secretary of state. I believe it might have been either one of them.

I showed the resolution to the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who took no exception to my offering it instead of he, himself, doing so. Therefore, I will ask the clerk to read the resolution.

And the clerk read it. I said after it was read:

Mr. President, as I have said, I just received that document, and I have only outside information of its adoption.

I am reading my words now:

I have only outside information of its adoption. I presume, however, it has gone through th senate and House of the Legislature of the State of Mississippi.

It is rather unusual that I took the precaution to say that I had only outside information, and that I merely presumed it had been passed, but some second thought came to me that I had better be careful, that perhaps it had not been passed. Now the Senator rises and makes a lot of "hurrally" about that as though it were a great thing reflecting upon my personal integrity, that I had imposed upon the Senate by putting in the RECORD a resolution which had not been passed.

The Senator says that Mr. Harper is running against his colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] in Mississippi. I hope the Senator is not trying to make an issue out of that matter. I am a pretty good friend of his colleague. I do not know that his colleague has ever said anything about me. His colleague did make a speech for Senator Ransdell when I was running for the United States Senate; but I did not take any offense at that. Old man Ransdell had been here in Congress for 32 years, and many of the people loved him very much. While he had never done me any political favor in his life, I had supported him myself, and, none the less, I did not take any offense when Mr. HUBERT STEPHENS, I think, either made a speech or wrote some letters for Ransdell. I have laughed with him about it, and never took any offense at it, even though it was a Mississippi Senator taking a hand in a Louisiana campaign. But for the Senator to make an issue of that matter I think is outside of the record.

Mr. President, there is only one more thing, and then I will be through. I refer to the attack made on me by General Ansell. The attack I made on General Ansell was that which was contained in a report of a committee of the House of Representatives. What I said about Mr. Ansell was read from, and merely commented upon, a report that came out of the committee of the House of Representatives. What I said about him had been printed in the Literary Digest, it had been printed by the Associated Press, and it had been printed in every paper in the country. What I read here about Mr. Ansell was contained in the papers of this country, and in a report of the House committee which investigated the Bergdoll escape, and that came to me in the document itself.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I should like to submit a request for unanimous consent, that on the pending amendment, or any other amendment which may be offered to the capital gain and loss section, we will vote at not later than 12:30 o'clock tomorrow. I may say that I have conferred with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], who offered the amendment, and this meets with his approval.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator does not intend to have his unanimous agreement apply also to the committee amendment to this section, does he?

Mr. HARRISON. I will apply it only to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MCNARY. Is that agreeable to the author of the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. It is agreeable to the author of the amendment.

Mr. MCNARY. Assuming that on tomorrow the Senator from Missouri shall get the floor at 12 o'clock, there will be no opportunity to discuss the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Oregon that I will not detain the Senate for longer than 10 minutes.

RECESS

Mr. HARRISON. I think I will withdraw my request as to the pending amendment.

I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and at 6 o'clock and 42 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, April 6, 1934, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1934

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou who dost pervade and control the ministries of the universe, help us ever to believe that prayer can set in motion those ministries which will loosen sin, shield weakness, and bring us into healthy freedom. Heavenly Father, deliver us from any mental confusion and crown us with the faculty of calm discretion. O lift us to those spiritual heights where loftiness of thought and feeling shall be our sweet assurance and our best defense. Stir our remembrance of the little things of daily life; it will make larger room for God, and by them we get clearer glimpses of a forgotten and a neglected world. O Light of Life, convey that spiritual energy to our souls that shall enable us to follow the gleam. Live in us, speak through us, and govern our words, and secure us against the failures of yesterday and the fears of tomorrow. In the holy name of Jesus. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

OUR OKLAHOMA

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested by my colleague, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MARLAND], to ask permission for him to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including therein a radio address which he delivered on April 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARLAND. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

Through the generosity of a group of my friends, who made the arrangements with radio stations WKY, KVOO, and KASA, I am privileged tonight to address this radio audience.

When you turned the little dial of the instrument before you—I, in a manner, became a guest in your home, with the duties and obligations of a guest. One duty, I believe, is to be entertaining and one obligation, I am sure, is not to be impolite, criticise or abuse your other guests, friends, or acquaintances.

To you whose homes my voice has entered I shall say now that the subject of my talk this evening will be Our Oklahoma.

I shall speak of Oklahoma of yesterday, Oklahoma of today, and Oklahoma of tomorrow.

Oklahoma as it was, Oklahoma as it is, and Oklahoma as I hope it will be.

Regarding Oklahoma of yesterday, I shall be brief. Many good histories of our State are available to all who care to read them.

The midcontinent area, embracing Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, was originally intended, under various treaties between the Indian tribes and our Federal Government, to be the permanent home of the red man as long as grass grows and water runs.

It was a land of plenty, sufficient for his needs.

Millions of fat buffalo grazed on its plains.

Prairie chickens in clouds rose from its grasses.

In every draw along its streams nested coveys of quail.

The timbered ridges of its mountains sheltered countless deer and wild turkeys.

A veritable paradise for the Indian hunter, and the fertile soil rewarded abundantly in crops of corn the scant labors of his squaw.

The climate was temperate; life was easy.

The members in the tribes increased.

One tribe, reduced by constant warfare to an enumerated 700 at the time it was brought into the Territory, multiplied 400 percent in 20 years in its new reservation.

Uncle Sam kept peace between the tribes.

Then came the white buffalo hunter and his awful carnage, followed by the rancher who grazed his herds of cattle on land leased from the tribes.

Their day, too, drew early to a close.

The open range could not continue.

Land-hungry hordes of white men and women were gathered along the borders of the Territory.

Uncle Sam was making the purchase of vast tracts of land from the Indians, and would soon open them to homestead settlement.

The happy hunting ground of the Indian became the promised land of the pioneer.

Across the lines of the territory in Kansas on the north and in Texas on the south, men groomed their horses preparatory for the race for a 160 acres of land the instant that Uncle Sam's signal guns of the Regular Army should announce the opening.

Wives and children with all their earthly possessions would follow in their covered wagons.

The greatest horse races in history occurred in 1889 and 1893.

When Oklahoma was opened to white settlement, there came from the North descendants of the old Puritan stock of New England, and from the South great-grandsons of the gentlemen of Virginia.

The boldest blood in America.

No weaklings, these, with stamina from generations of pioneering.

Suckled at the breasts of pioneer mothers—whose mothers' mothers never knew aught of ease, comfort, or security, but were fully familiar with the hardships, hunger, and dangers of pioneering.

They were not afraid of new lands, new conditions—not these people.

Overnight they settled a new country.

Formed governments, established law and order, founded cities, erected buildings, opened offices for lawyers and doctors, and even issued newspapers.

On every quarter section of land slept that night the new owner, waiting only the coming of his wagon to start his work of farming.

In 1907 Oklahoma was admitted to Statehood—its citizenship nearer 100 percent pure American stock than that of any other State in the Union.

Its constitution, its organic law, reflected the advance thought of its people.

Democracy was its keynote.

Protection of the rights of person and property its sacred theme.

Industry and labor were to have their reward.

Corporate ownership of land was curtailed.

The usurer was restricted and threatened with punishment.

Back of it all was the thought of protecting the industrious farmer from possible loss of his farm and his team and tools for farming.

In a few years Oklahoma became one of the Nation's leading States in the production of wheat, corn, cattle, hogs, cotton, zinc, coal, oil, and gas.

Its virgin soil produced in greatest abundance everything necessary to sustain life.

In truth this was a land flowing with milk and honey.

So much for Oklahoma of yesterday.

Now, let us look at our Oklahoma of today.

With a population of less than two and one-half million people we produce food enough for 20,000,000 people and cotton enough to clothe 50,000,000 people.

With tillable acreage hardly less than that of some of the first-class nations of Europe, Oklahoma feeds and clothes 10 times her population.

The value of Oklahoma's crops produced and sold since statehood more than equals the value of all the gold in the world today.

Tangible wealth greater than that of the famed mines of Golconda, plus the fabulous hoards of the Incas, has been produced from Oklahoma soil by the labor of her people in the past 30 years.

The money received from the sale of those crops passed through our hands; it did not remain with us.

As a result, what shape are we in, financially, today?

The answer is well known to all of you, but this one fact I want to call to your attention. It is so significant.

In 1900 only 8 percent of the farms of Oklahoma were mortgaged. In 1934 over 50 percent are heavily encumbered.

Many a brave pioneer who made the run, who came in here without a debt, who worked his farm industriously, who produced abundant crops, has already been foreclosed—sold out—and has thumbed his way, hitch-hiked out of the State, going God knows where.

Many more still have that heartbreaking tragedy before them, and others will be saved from it only through the successful operation of our planned national economy.

How did this come about? What happened. What caused this terrible debacle?

It was not failure on the part of the Promised Land.

No fault could be found with the industry of our people, unless it could be that they were overindustrious and produced too much.

Millions of dollars passed through their hands in payment for the fruits of their labor.

But it passed out of their hands—paid out for the manufactured goods they had to buy from other States; paid out for railroad freight rates, for fire and life insurance, public services; for exorbitant interest charges bordering upon the line of usury; for taxes, State, county, school district, municipal, often extravagantly and unwisely levied.

Most of the interest money went to the money lenders of other States—people who sow not, neither do they reap—the things we sow and reap.

They sow and reap dollars. They sow dollars and reap interest.

And the fruits of all the earth and all labor accumulate in their hands.

In spite of the enormous income to the people of Oklahoma, amounting to billions of dollars, their debt has piled up to undreamed-of proportions; State, county, school district, municipal, and personal debt, because their governmental and personal expenditures have been still greater than that income.

There has been no balancing of the Budget—governmental or personal.

Bankruptcy, therefore, stares us in the face today.

The wolf of hunger is at many an Oklahoma door.

Oklahoma hens lay 4,000,000 eggs a day; Oklahoma cows give 8,000,000 pints of milk a day; Oklahoma wheat produces 10,000,000 loaves of bread a day.

Yet nearly three quarters of a million of our population have this past winter been fed by the Federal Relief Administration. Some months 27 percent of the families of Oklahoma were on Federal aid.

This is the picture of Oklahoma of today.

OKLAHOMA OF TOMORROW

Oklahoma of tomorrow, my friends, is just what you choose to make it.

Its future is in your hands, if you plan for it intelligently.

Planned economy is the order of the day.

The Roosevelt administration has set the pace nationally.

It is yours to follow, if you will, and plan the orderly economic development of your State.

There is no excuse for so much poverty in this Commonwealth.

It is because of lack of planning for orderly production and orderly marketing that agriculture and industry, particularly the petroleum industry, have been unprofitable in this State. The hot-oil legislation introduced by me in Congress last year has, since its passage, made oil producing profitable.

It is because of lack of planning that thousands of our men, women, and children are underfed and without sufficient clothes and shelter in this land of plenty.

It is because of lack of planning that gaunt, undernourished children gaze with hungry eyes upon our mortgaged abundance.

It is sheer madness to go on as we are without taking thought of tomorrow, without planning.

The Federal Government plans to eliminate destructive competitive overproduction in all lines of industry and agriculture affecting the Nation.

It plans to shorten hours of labor and to increase wages.

It plans to put more dollars in the consumers' hands.

It plans that all labor shall hereafter have a better share of the fruits of its toil.

It plans to reduce poverty to a minimum in the United States and will attempt to bring those plans to fruition.

There is less excuse for poverty in Oklahoma than in any other State in the Union. But don't forget that last winter we had a greater percentage of our people on Federal charity than any other State.

Will you, fellow Oklahomans, follow our great national leader, President Roosevelt, and plan to banish poverty from the State of Oklahoma?

Will you plan to balance your governmental budget by keeping its expenditures within its income?

Will you plan to reduce your governmental debt and the interest burden incident thereto?

Will you plan to reduce your production, whether it be agricultural or mineral, to the demand of your natural markets?

Will you plan to develop manufacturing industries in your State so that the receipts from the production of your soil may not all go out of the State to pay for your machinery, tools, clothes, and shoes?

Other States producing but a fraction of the cotton we produce manufacture all the cotton cloth needed by their people.

Oklahoma produces more cotton than North Carolina, six times as much wheat, six times as much oats, and our oil is worth three times as much as its tobacco, yet industry in North Carolina employs over 200,000 people while industry in Oklahoma employs less than half that number.

Rhode Island employs in her factories 128,000 persons. Rhode Island raises no cotton but has 2,290,000 spindles making cotton cloth.

North Carolina, which raises less cotton than we do, has 6,000,000 spindles.

Massachusetts, 450 miles north of the Cotton Belt, has 7,000,000 spindles, while Oklahoma, one of the largest cotton-producing States, has so few spindles that the United States census for 1930 does not carry the number.

Rhode Island is the smallest State in the Union, with a smaller land area than Caddo County, Okla., smaller than McCurtain County, and less than half the size of Osage County, yet the average person in Rhode Island is worth twice as much money as the average person in Oklahoma, due to her industries.

We are large producers of cotton and raw-food materials. We possess rich cement and timber resources and are well supplied with fuel, gas, oil, and coal. Our natural resources have scarcely been scratched.

Our unemployed people would welcome the opportunity to go to work making cotton cloth and clothing, making finished foods, building materials, and furniture—and if they made no more than could be used in Oklahoma, unemployment could be replaced by a profitable opportunity to work by everyone willing and able to do so in the State.

Manufacturers in other States purchase our hides, manufacture them into shoes, purchase our cotton and manufacture overalls, and send them back to us.

The freight both ways is reflected in the price we pay for shoes and overalls.

We need cotton mills in southern Oklahoma. We need furniture factories and meat-packing plants. We need more flour mills. We need machine shops to produce our tools and farming machinery.

Will you, my friends, help to plan for these and other industries to make our State more self-contained?

One of the great movements of our time—and this is part of the Roosevelt program—is the movement back to the land; the movement of families onto small subsistence homesteads.

This movement must be accompanied in our State by the development of small manufacturing industries, manufacturing things needed in the home and on the farm—small plants which will furnish part-time work for the men on the subsistence homesteads.

No other State in the United States is blessed with a more abundant or cheaper fuel than we have in our natural gas and coal, and with timber, cement, and minerals waiting only for the erection of plants to convert them into household goods and agricultural implements of common use.

Oklahomans, the future is what you make it.

Plan wisely, intelligently.

Pursue the plan aggressively, and we can build a great industrial State.

Unemployment will be a thing of the past.

This, my friends, will require a new type of leadership in government.

The day of the economist and unselfish industrial leader, farmers' unions, and labor unions has arrived in the Nation.

The new deal is in their hands.

Our national life is dependent upon the wisdom of their economic planning and the soundness of their agricultural and industrial leadership.

I have offered myself as a candidate for the office of Governor our our State because I see the great job that has to be done to bring our State back to a condition of prosperity.

It is a job for a business man.

It requires a student of economics and an experienced organizer of industry and an executive who can handle an organization.

I have had over 30 years of just such type of training and experience.

It is this that I am offering to the service of my State.

It is this type of leadership that we must have if we are to follow our President in his national program of planned economics and bring our Oklahoma up into the front rank among the States of this Nation.

It is customary for a candidate for the office of Governor at the outset of his campaign to announce his program—his platform.

Following this custom, I declare that, if I am elected Governor of Oklahoma, I will use all the power and influence of the office:

To aid in the economic recovery of the State and Nation.

To support the Democratic platform as enunciated at the Chicago convention and to assist the national administration in fulfilling its pledges in connection therewith.

To support the Constitution and laws of the United States and the constitution and laws of the State of Oklahoma.

To guard against encroachment upon the authority of one branch of government by another branch.

To balance the State's budget of income and expense.

To lighten and distribute equitably the burden of taxation.

To develop our natural resources in the interest of this and future generations, with the prime objective of making Oklahoma as nearly economically independent as possible, at the same time keeping the attitude of a good neighbor to our sister States.

To help in every way to raise the value of farm products, so that the farmer may have a fair return upon his investment and labor and be enabled to pay his debts in a dollar of the same value as the one he borrowed.

To raise the scale of wages for industrial workers so that they may earn a decent living for their wives and families.

To promote unemployment insurance.

To provide old-age pensions.

To take our schools out of politics and adopt the educational program of the State's educators.

To provide for the prompt payment of adequate salaries to our teachers.

To provide exemption of small homesteads from ad valorem taxation.

To reduce the legal rate of interest on money borrowed on real-estate mortgages.

To provide equal education opportunities for all children of all races.

To provide proper superintendence for our penal institutions.

To provide an efficient board of pardons and paroles, required to report and make recommendations in all clemency cases.

To provide that all State employees shall be chosen entirely upon merit, and that their tenure of office shall not depend upon their political work or financial contribution.

To provide political equality for women in regard to holding public office.

To aid the Federal Government in the development of flood control and irrigation projects on our rivers and their tributaries.

To aid in the development of both National and State subsistence homestead projects, with the object of providing small subsistence homesteads for thousands of our people, on which they can live in comfort and gain part of their livelihood.

To protect the capital investments of the small investor who invested his savings in this State on the faith and credit of our laws.

And last, but not least, I will use the full power of the office of Governor to effect a plan for the economic development of Oklahoma, and cooperate to the fullest possible extent with President Roosevelt in his announced recovery program.

In conclusion, may I say I am giving up a job as Congressman to take another job at less pay.

Because I see a job that needs to be done, and there will be honor and credit in doing it properly.

If I had decided to run for Congress again I would not have had to make a hard campaign.

I would probably have had no opposition for the nomination by my party.

As it is, I am committing myself to 6 months of hard campaigning for the office of Governor and, if I am elected, to 4 years of still harder work—to make our Oklahoma a better place in which to live.

I have filed as a candidate for Governor on the Democratic ticket. I shall be back among you as soon as my congressional duties will permit—about May 1.

Meanwhile I leave my campaign in the hands of my friends, and the future of our Oklahoma in yours.

God bless you.

EMERGENCY HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION MOST SATISFACTORY OF ALL FEDERAL PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Federal aid to highway construction and to include therein a schedule of the allotments under the $400,000,000 appropriation in the Public Works Act of 1933.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks, I shall discuss Federal grants for highway construction to relieve unemployment.

During the depression in all appropriations for public works there has been a definite allocation for the building of highways. In the Emergency Act of December 20, 1930, $80,000,000 was appropriated; in the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932, $120,000,000 was appropriated; and in the Public Works Act of 1933, to relieve unemployment, $3,300,000,000 was appropriated, to be allocated by the Administrator of Public Works with the approval of the President, with one material exception—Congress definitely provided that not less than $400,000,000 should be granted for highway construction.

Congress has conferred unprecedented authority on departments in public building and in public works during the past 4 years, but in every emergency appropriation thus far, Congress has insisted that there be a definite amount allocated to the building of highways. I believe that this policy should be continued.

PUBLIC WORKS

In his Budget message of January 3, 1934, the President suggested a Public Works appropriation of not exceeding $2,000,000,000 in 1935. I quote from his Budget message as follows:

> Additional relief funds will be necessary. Further needs of the country prohibit the abrupt termination of the recovery program. No person can on this date definitely predict the total amount that will be needed, nor the itemizing of such an amount. It is my best judgment at this time that a total appropriation of not to exceed $2,000,000,000 will, with the expenditures still to be made next year out of existing appropriations, be sufficient.

In the Public Works Act of 1933, the percentage allocated to public highways was approximately one eighth. At least, the same percentage should obtain for the next fiscal year, and if it does Congress should make a definite appropriation of not less than $250,000,000 for grants to highways. Personally, I believe that if there is to be an appropriation for public works, the percentage to Federal highways should be increased. I maintain that highway construction is the most general and the most satisfactory of all public works. Provision is made for employment in the cities and in the country, in all of the States, and in at least three fourths of all of the counties in the United States. All use the highways; the works are permanent; the benefits are general; and the employment is wide-spread.

DEFINITE ALLOTMENT

It has been suggested that there be no definite allotment either for highways or for any other specific purpose. It is urged that the projects be left to the Administrator of Public Works, with the approval of the President. I have every confidence in the President. I have consistently supported the administration. However, Congress has a responsibility. The appropriations for public works can only be retired by public taxes. Upon Congress devolves the responsibility of providing revenues.

The representatives of the people who must tax the people for public works are responsible in the last analysis for the expenditure of public funds. They should have a voice in the expenditures. Congress is just as capable of determining the character of public works that will bring the most wide-spread and general employment as any administrator. Personally I believe that there would have been less wasted effort and certainly much more economy if Congress, for the most part, had definitely approved all expenditures for public works.

If Congress is convinced that highway construction in municipalities and in the States is the most beneficial type of public construction, I insist that Congress should make a definite appropriation in any public-works act during the present session for public highways.

QUICK EMPLOYMENT

Those who oppose definite grants say that highways do not provide quick employment and thus do not immediately relieve unemployment. It is urged that for this reason the Civil Works Administration was established. It is now said that the Civil Works Administration will be succeeded by the Works Administration. Quick employment is desirable in some cases, but I assert that definite results with permanent values are really more important than expenditures. It is easy to disburse. Donations are all too frequent. Quick, ill-considered projects are wasteful and extravagant. Desirable public works involve long-time planning. The United States has been engaged in highway construction in every State in the Union and under all conditions for almost 20 years.

But, the fact is highway construction has kept pace with construction in other public works. I admit that if the supreme aim is merely to distribute money, other methods will provide far more expeditious disbursement of public funds. If we follow the reasoning to its conclusion, however, the best method would be to eliminate all works and merely distribute money among citizens who are unemployed. Billions have been spent to provide recovery. The excuse for quick, easy expenditures no longer obtains. There must be value received for public expenditures in the future. Of course, provisions must continue to be made, where imperative, to relieve hunger and distress.

The Federal Administration of Public Works has furnished me with a statement of the allotments and expenditures for Federal and non-Federal projects. The Bureau of Public Roads has also furnished me with a similar statement respecting highway construction.

The Public Works allotment as of March 1, 1934, was as follows:

Federal projects	$1,388,835,790
Non-Federal projects	817,429,801
Total	2,198,265,591

The expenditures through December 31, 1933, for Federal projects were $107,721,794 and for non-Federal projects, $49,827,359. The percentage of actual expenditures with respect to allocations for all Federal projects was thus 14 percent of the allotments.

As of March 10, 1934, the approved projects for highways amounted to $300,000,000. There was expended up to December 31, 1933, $32,000,000 and there was due to the States $14,000,000 for work already done, or a total of $46,000,000. It will thus be seen that the percentage of expenditures with respect to the total allocations for highways is thus at least equal to the average of all Federal expenditures.

If further definite allocations are to be denied Federal-aid highways because quick expenditures are not thus provided, it must follow that no public works that are of permanent or lasting benefit can be considered. In other words, public works to aid unemployment must be eliminated.

I believe that the policy of Public Works in aid of unemployment is wise, and I further believe that Congress should definitely insist that the public works that do provide widespread employment shall have first consideration. I have consistently advocated that Congress itself should not only make a definite allocation for highway construction but that Congress should make definite specific appropriations for needed public buildings, for flood control, and for rivers and harbors. Whenever the need for public construction ceases, then the need for appropriations for public works no longer exists.

ALLOCATIONS

Formerly allocations of Federal aid for highways were made to the States upon the basis of population, area, and mileage, one third being allocated for each. The method was changed in the Public Works Act of 1933 and more consideration was given to the populous States. The formula is now ten twenty-fourths population, seven twenty-fourths area, and seven twenty-fourths mileage. Moreover, under the provisions of the Public Works Act of 1933, Federal grants were made not only in aid of the Federal highway system but to provide for extensions through municipalities and for secondary or feeder roads. Fifty percent of the amount generally was allocated for Federal-aid highways, 25 percent for extensions through municipalities, and 25 percent for secondary roads.

Under the consent given, I include herein the following schedule showing the approved assignment of the apportionment of Public Works highway funds as of January 31, 1934, under the appropriation of $400,000,000 in the Public Works Act of 1933 furnished by the Chief, Bureau of Public Roads, as follows:

It is observed that the total of the allocation is $394,000,000. The difference between this amount and the $400,000,000 is largely the administrative expense in connection with the appropriation.

LABOR

Eighty-five to ninety percent of every road dollar ultimately goes into labor or into employment of some type. The Committee on Roads, of which I am a member, has held hearings on a bill to authorize an appropriation of $400,000,000 for highway construction, to be expended and allocated as was provided in section 204 of the Public Works Act of 1933. These hearings have been published. It appeared from these hearings that the entire $400,000,000 would be absorbed and that contracts would be awarded for the entire $400,000,000 by the 1st of May 1934. The maximum employment would probably be during the month of June, when 280,000 men will be continuously employed. At the time of the hearings, about the 1st of March 1934, there were 130,000 continuous jobs, while 195,000 jobs were being provided in the production of material, in transportation, and in other lines that contribute to the construction of highways. The total job employment, therefore, in the winter was approximately 325,000, and it will reach during the summer approximately 525,000, inasmuch as for every continuous job there are 1½ indirect jobs. Unemployment is relieved and work is promoted by highway construction.

I quote from the report of the Bureau of Public Roads, dated September 1, 1933:

Last year a study was made by the Bureau of Public Roads of the extent to which labor profits from the construction of high-type pavements in which mechanical equipment plays an important part. In this study the money paid out by States or communities for the construction of a concrete pavement was traced through its various exchanges, showing how these expenditures extend to sand and gravel pits, stone quarries, cement and steel mills, to the manufacturers of equipment, repair parts, explosives, gasoline, lubricating oils and supplies, as well as to railroad and transportation companies, and to those who furnish them their supplies, equipment, and repairs which extend from coal and ore mines to mills and factories. When thus traced it was found not only that about 90 percent of the taxpayer's dollar was eventually paid to workers as wages and salaries but also that a very large part of the industry of the country took an active part in the work and received a definite financial stimulus.

Concrete is not generally used in secondary roads, and there is more labor employed in this type of construction. If 90 percent of the money eventually goes into labor in the construction of concrete roads, surely a larger percentage goes to labor in secondary roads. The statement may appear unusual, but on reflection all elements must be taken into consideration. As sand and gravel exist they may be bought for a few hundred dollars an acre, but the labor, the equipment, and the transportation that go into the production of these materials determine their price for road work. It takes oil, gas, coal, as well as clay and limestone, to manufacture cement. In thus determining employment, we have to trace the road dollar back to the production of materials from the beginning. As stated by Thomas H. McDonald, Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads:

When this is done, it does give this picture, and this Public Works program of 2,500,000 man-months of direct employment affords one and one half times that amount of employment in industrial and supplementary jobs.

AUTHORIZATION REPORTED

The Committee on Roads has unanimously reported a bill authorizing at least $400,000,000 for grants to highway construction under the same provisions that obtained in the Public Works Act of 1933.

There is unemployment in the land. The program of recovery is not complete, and the need for highway construction obtains in all of the States.

The $400,000,000 program of 1933 will be substantially completed in the fall of 1934. A future program is imperative. The Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads states that to hold employment without a precipitous drop during the latter months of 1934 and through 1935, merging into employment in the year 1936 comparable with that existing in more normal times through the operations of regular Federal aid, plus State finance and maintenance, would require an additional grant of around $375,000,000 and an appropriation of $125,000,000 under regular Federal aid for the year 1936. Unless provision is made for Federal-aid construction, there will be a sudden reduction of employment; those who have been engaged in highway construction for the last 4 years will be without employment.

Not only will unemployment be relieved by highway construction, but additional highway appropriations are imperative to relieve further unemployment.

Again, for the first time in 17 years, the fiscal year 1933 ended without a definite provision for the continuance of the program of Federal road construction. The situation was brought about by the fact that emergency appropriations had been made for road construction. It is important that Congress make provision for the continuance of Federal-aid highway construction.

GRANTS

There is wide-spread need for highway construction. Traffic is increasing and continuous highway construction is essential. The need is really more apparent in the larger and more populous States. The wealthier and most populous States, according to the hearings before the Committee on Roads, were the first to absorb their allotments under the $400,000,000 appropriation of 1933.

I have heretofore showed that the expenditures, as well as the allotments were made at least as quickly as other Federal expenditures and Federal projects. Seventy-four percent of the entire authorization of $400,000,000, as stated by the Director of the Bureau of Public Roads, was under construction on February 23, 1934. The entire amount will have been expended before the winter of 1934.

As a result of the depression, the States are unable to match Federal aid. The Public Works program for loans to the States was in many cases a failure. The Civil Works Administration was thus established. An allocation of approximately $400,000,000 was made in 1933 for civil works. Congress has already appropriated during the present session $400,000,000 for grants for works in 1935. No local contribution is required. If temporary, quick, and, in some cases, ill-considered works are justified without local contribution, surely the demand for grants for the continuation of Federal aid for highways is much more justified.

CARTWRIGHT OR COMMITTEE BILL

On February 19, 1934, I introduced H.R. 8096, to authorize an appropriation of $400,000,000 for grants for highway construction, on which bill hearings were conducted. I announced that I introduced it as a basis for hearings and that I would favor the reporting of a committee bill, which, according to the usual custom would be introduced by and reported in the name of the chairman of the committee. The provisions of the bill introduced by me were incorporated as paragraph I of H.R. 8781, known as the "Cartwright bill."

Representative WARREN introduced H.R. 8305 to authorize an appropriation of $10,000,000 as an emergency highway fund for the repair of Federal-aid highways and bridges destroyed by floods. This bill was substantially incorporated in the Cartwright bill as section 3.

Sections 4 and 5 of the Cartwright bill are explanatory and perfecting.

Section 2 is a reenactment of a similar section inserted in the Public Works bill of 1933 as section 205, for highways in national parks and forests.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT, the courteous Chairman of the Committee on Roads, has cooperated in every way in fostering the pending bill and in crystallizing sentiment for a definite allocation for Federal aid for highway construction.

SELF-LIQUIDATING

Moreover, highway construction is self-liquidating. For the calendar year 1933 the manufacturers' sales tax on motor vehicles aggregated $257,217,557. The Congress of the United States in definitely allocating not less than $400,000,000 for grants to highways in the Public Works Act of 1933 was not merely guessing. The amount will be returned from highway sources to the Federal Treasury within the period that the funds are actually disbursed.

Unless Congress makes a definite allocation for public highways, I am very doubtful about highways being properly provided for. The question involves no experiment. Congress has been appropriating for highway construction for 20 years. More experience has thus been acquired by Congress than could be acquired by any administrator in 1 or 2 years.

As a result of his successful leadership in the passage of the Economy Act, the President became the outstanding statesman, not only of the United States but of the world. There has been improvement and recovery. The depression was worse than war. Expenditures in times of war are often injudiciously made. Such is the case to relieve distress in a depression that is not only Nation-wide but world-wide. However, we are definitely on the road to recovery. Temporary and unsatisfactory works must be eliminated. Congress will be taking the first step by making definite allocations in future Public Works for highway construction and other internal improvements.

The people are interested in highways as they are interested in no other improvements. They demand that their Representatives and Senators safeguard public expenditures and secure permanent benefits in provisions for public works. I urge the Senators and Representatives from every State in the Union to insist that there be a definite allocation for grants for highways in the new Public Works Act. The provisions for allocations and expenditures in the act of 1933 are satisfactory. Congress should make a definite allocation of at least the same percentage for highway construction in the Public Works Act of 1934 as was made in the Public Works Act of 1933.

I, therefore, urge that H.R. 8781, unanimously and favorably reported by the House Committee on Roads, be incorporated in the Public Works Act of 1934. It is a reenactment of the appropriation of not less than $400,000,000 for grants to highways in the Public Works Act of 1933, to be allocated and expended according to the provisions of said act.

SUFFERERS BY FIRE IN THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is the vote on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLACK] to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 770) for the relief of certain claimants who suffered loss by fire in the State of Minnesota during 1918.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CHRISTIANSON) there were—ayes 99, noes 123.

So (two thirds not having voted in favor thereof), the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill was rejected.

On motion of Mr. BLANTON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected was laid on the table.

Mr. HOIDALE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Did the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] vote for the bill? [Laughter.]

CROP PRODUCTION LOAN OFFICE

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I have risen at this time to invite the attention of the Membership of the House to some of the things that are being done by the Director of the Crop Production Loan Office.

The Congress passed the crop production loan bill and appropriated $40,000,000 to make it possible for tenants and sharecroppers in this country to make crops this year. Down in the Crop Production Loan Office the officials have promulgated some rules and regulations that have abrogated the intent of the Congress in the enactment of this bill. For instance, they have a regulation to the effect that the tenants of any one landlord in any one county cannot borrow more than $750. They go further and hold that the big life-insurance companies and the loan companies that have taken over a large number of the farms in the various counties are landlords. In one little county in my district the John Hancock Life Insurance Co. has taken over 74 farms, and the Prudential Life Insurance Co. has taken over 23 farms. The officials of the Crop Production Loan Office contend that these 74 farmers, in one instance, and 23 in the other, are tenants of one landlord.

I contend that neither the John Hancock Life Insurance Co. nor the Prudential Life Insurance Co. are landlords, and certainly they are not farmers. I contend that these poverty-stricken people who have lost their farms and their homes and who are trying to make a living on places that they formerly owned are each and every one of them independent farmers, and I contend further that they should be permitted to participate in the $40,000,000 appropriation.

It was the intention of the Congress that each one of these farmers be allowed to borrow a small amount of money from the Crop Production Loan Office in order that they might make their crops.

I am hopeful that the Members of the House are interested in this situation. I know everybody in the South is interested in it, and I hope you will become so interested that you will call up Mr. Garwood, the Director of the Crop Production Loan Office, and tell him that this regulation must be liberalized. If you do not do it, about 10 percent of these farmers who need help worse than anybody else in the country are going to be helped and the other 90 percent of them are not going to get any help from any source whatsoever.

The whole truth of the business is that the people in charge of the Crop Production Loan Office are not friendly inclined toward this bill. What they want to do is to drive these farmers to the production credit associations. The production credit associations are all right, but farmers of this particular class are not able to comply with the requirements of the production credit associations.

I think of all the people in the United States these poor devils who have lost their homes and their farms are the people that the Crop Production Loan Office ought to help first, and I hope you will get in touch with this office and insist that they liberalize the objectionable regulation. It certainly should not apply in the case of a farmer who has no real landlord.

Mr. FORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PARKER. I yield.

Mr. FORD. I believe that such insistence will do little good. Is there any legislative method the gentleman can suggest whereby this matter can be remedied?

Mr. PARKER. I know of none at this time. In the law the Congress limited the amount that could be loaned to any one individual to $250, but it is not a law that I am complaining about; it is a regulation.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. PARKER. I yield.

Mr. MAY. The sum and substance of such administration by the Department is to make the insurance companies landlords and to give them the benefit of the loans instead of the former owners of the farms.

Mr. PARKER. No; the result of it is that many independent farmers who need help badly are not permitted to file applications for loans due to the fact that they are classed as tenants or share croppers of a landlord who exists only in name. The law is not being sympathetically administered. The intent of the Congress is being ignored by the agency that Congress itself has created.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to incorporate in my remarks two telegrams I have received, one from the loan committee in one of the counties of my district and the other from the tax receiver of another county, and my replies to these telegrams.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

ALAMO, GA., March 24, 1934.

Congressman H. C. PARKER:

Emergency crop loan ruling limiting loans to tenants of any one landlord in any one county to $500 working a hardship. Many farmers will be unable to farm this year. Please use your influence to get ruling changed. Suggest no limit in some instances as with loan company. Confer with other Members and Senators.

WHEELER COUNTY LOAN COMMITTEE,
By J. H. WALKER, Chairman.

MARCH 24, 1934.

Mr. J. H. WALKER,
Chairman Wheeler County Loan Committee,
Alamo, Ga.

MY DEAR MR. WALKER: I have your telegram of this date referring to the limitation of loans to tenants of any one landlord to $500.

I discussed this matter with officials of the Committee on Agriculture as well as the Farm Credit Administration. The Director of the Crop Production Loan Organization tells me that this regulation was imposed because of the belief that the $500 would take care of 10 tenants, and if there were any additional tenants the landlord could secure financing from the Production Credit Association.

I explained your position to the officials and urged them to do something to relieve the situation. However, they insisted that the Production Credit Association was adequate to take care of any tenants above the 10 that might be cared for with the loan of $500.

For your information I am enclosing a copy of the Crop Production Loan Act.

I regret to be unable to advise you more favorably.

Sincerely yours,

HOMER C. PARKER.

WASHINGTON, D.C., April 4, 1934.

Mr. QUITMAN WILKES,
Lyons, Ga.:

Have contacted Director Crop Production Loan office today. He has increased the loan on cotton to farmers in Georgia and South Carolina from $5 to $6.50 per acre. He has increased the amount that may be loaned to the tenants of one landlord from $500 to seven hundred and fifty. I have told him it is necessary to make an exception in cases of insurance companies. Have told him insurance companies are not landlords in strictest sense of the word, but that they rent to farmers who, while they are tenants in name, are actually landlords themselves in every sense of the word. I am wondering if I have misrepresented the facts to Mr. Garwood. Do the insurance companies have share croppers in your county? I believe all those who rent for a stipulated sum and are not actual share croppers will be permitted to borrow from Crop Production Loan Office. Mr. Garwood is to give me a ruling later this afternoon after he has discussed the matter with Secretary of Agriculture. Will let you hear from me again when I hear from Mr. Garwood. In the meantime please advise me as to whether our farmers are tenants or actual share croppers.

HOMER C. PARKER, M.C.

LYONS, GA., April 4, 1934.

Hon. HOMER C. PARKER,
Member of Congress:

Thanks for your immediate reply. None of insurance companies have share croppers. They all rent for stipulated amounts. You have not misrepresented anything. John Hancock Life Insurance Co. owns 74 separate tracts of land in this county; Prudential 23, and other companies lesser numbers. The average loan is $70 to each tenant, and on the basis that we are operating this will only accommodate 10 percent of John Hancock renters or 40 percent of Prudential renters. You can see that the renters from insurance companies are being discriminated against under the present ruling. I am informing the renters that you are on the job and doing everything possible to get this matter straight.

R. Q. WILKES,
Tax Receiver, Toombs County.

APRIL 4, 1934.

Mr. J. H. WALKER,
Chairman Wheeler County Loan Committee,
Alamo, Ga.

MY DEAR MR. WALKER: Referring again to your telegram of March 24, and my reply of the same date regarding the limitation of loans to tenants of any one landlord to $500, I am enclosing herewith for your information copy of a telegram I have today sent to Mr. Quitman Wilkes, of Lyons. This message is self-explanatory, and as soon as I have additional information from Mr. Garwood I shall be pleased to convey it to you, also.

Assuring you of my kind regards and best wishes, I am,

Yours sincerely,

HOMER C. PARKER.

BURLEIGH F. SPALDING

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, we met early this morning for a specific purpose, and I think we ought to proceed with it. I do not object to this request, but I will object if there are any more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SINCLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce the passing of a prominent citizen of my State and a former Member of this House, the Honorable Burleigh F. Spalding. He was a resident of Fargo, N.Dak., from March 1880 until his death on March 17, 1934, and took a leading part in the significant events in the history of the State. He was a member of the capitol commission, which brought the Territorial capitol from Yankton to Bismarck, and was active in securing the division of Dakota Territory into the two States of North and South Dakota, afterwards serving in the Constitutional Convention of North Dakota. In 1898 he was elected to the Fifty-sixth Congress, and was again elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress, serving both terms with distinction. Because of the early development of boss-controlled politics within the State he was denied renomination and became one of the first insurgent Progressives in the Republican Party. In 1907 Governor John Burke appointed him to the State supreme court, to which position he was elected in the following year, serving until 1915, and as chief justice during the last 4 years of his term. Upon leaving the supreme court bench Judge Spalding resumed the practice of law in Fargo and continued in his chosen profession until he was stricken. He was generally recognized as one of the most able jurists of North Dakota and the Northwest. As a young man he came to the West from Vermont, bringing with him the thrift, energy, and ambition of sturdy New England character. Perhaps no man has had a greater influence in the formation and development of the institutions of the new State of his adoption. Certainly none has had a wider experience or participation in its official affairs or a better knowledge of its history. In the passing of Judge Spalding North Dakota suffers a distinct loss.

BONDS OF THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 2999) to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes. And pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended to 2 hours and 30 minutes, one half to be controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts and one half by myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. LUCE. Reserving the right to object, in order to explain the situation briefly, this comes up under a motion where there will be no chance for amendment. My desire to expedite the business of the House leads me to approve of the program contemplated in the request of the gentleman from Alabama, even though it precludes an opportunity to move an amendment.

The sins of the bill are in the omissions and not the commissions, and we may call attention to that fact before the afternoon is over. Later on there may be further opportunity to consider the features of the bill to which I have referred. Therefore, I shall not object to the request.

Mr. LAMNECK. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman if the Senate bill provides for new building construction?

Mr. STEAGALL. It does not.

Mr. LAMNECK. Does it provide for equipment, heating appliances, and so forth?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will say that the bill provides for the rebuilding, modernization, and improvement of homes and sets out a fund of $200,000,000 which may be loaned to carry out those purposes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Reserving the right to object, I regret that the parliamentary situation is such that we will not have an opportunity to present amendments to this important bill.

Mr. HEALEY. Reserving the right to object, is not it a fact that the $200,000,000 set aside is for the improvement of property under mortgage?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes. The bill does not contemplate such loans on new projects.

Mr. HEALEY. It only provides for modernization of those homes under mortgage.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

S. 2999

An act to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, to amend the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 4 (c) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"(c) The Corporation is authorized to issue bonds in an aggregate amount not to exceed $2,000,000,000, which may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for carrying out the purposes of this section, or exchanged as hereinafter provided. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods of not more than 18 years from the date of their issue, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 4 percent per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, and shall be issued in such manner and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation shall be unable to pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds of the Corporation issued under this subsection which are guaranteed as to interest and principal, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this subsection. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. The bonds issued by the Corporation under this subsection shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except surtaxes, estate, inheritance, and gift taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States or any District, Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its loans and income, shall likewise be exempt from such taxation; except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to taxation to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed. No such bonds shall be issued in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of such bonds, but a failure to comply with this provision shall not invalidate the bonds or the guaranty of the same. The Corporation shall have power to purchase in the open market at any time at any price not to exceed par any of the bonds issued by it. Any such bonds so purchased may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, be sold or resold at any time and at any price. For a period of 12 months after the date this subsection, as amended, takes effect, the Corporation is authorized to refund any of its bonds issued prior to such date or any bonds issued after such date in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on such date, upon application of the holders thereof, by exchanging therefor bonds of an equal face amount issued by the Corporation under this subsection as amended, and bearing interest at such rate as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; but such rate shall not be less than that first fixed after this subsection, as amended, takes effect on bonds exchanged by the Corporation for home mortgages. For the purpose of such refunding the Corporation is further authorized to increase its total bond issue in an amount equal to the amount of the bonds so refunded. Nothing in this subsection, as amended, shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from issuing bonds in compliance with commitments of the Corporation on the date this subsection, as amended, takes effect."

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section (except with respect to refunding) shall not apply to any bonds heretofore issued by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under such section 4 (c), or to any bonds hereafter issued in compliance with commitments of the Corporation outstanding on the date of the enactment of this act.

SEC. 2. Section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(l) No home mortgage or other obligation or lien shall be acquired by the Corporation under subsection (d), and no cash advance shall be made under subsection (f), unless the applicant was in involuntary default on June 13, 1933, with respect to the indebtedness on his real estate and is unable to carry or refund his present mortgage indebtedness: Provided, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply in any case in which it is specifically shown to the satisfaction of the Corporation that a default after such date was due to unemployment or to economic conditions or misfortune beyond the control of the applicant, or in any case in which the home mortgage or other obligation or lien is held by an institution which is in liquidation.

"(m) In all cases where the Corporation is authorized to advance cash to provide for necessary maintenance and to make necessary repairs it is also authorized to advance cash or exchange bonds for the rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed; and in all cases where the Corporation has acquired a home mortgage or other obligation or lien it is authorized to advance cash or exchange bonds to provide for the maintenance, repair, rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed and to take an additional lien, mortgage, or conveyance to secure such additional advance or to take a new home mortgage for the whole indebtedness; but the total amount advanced shall in no case exceed the respective amounts or percentages of value of the real estate as elsewhere provided in this section. Not to exceed $200,000,000 of the proceeds derived from the sale of bonds of the Corporation shall be used in making cash advances to provide for necessary maintenance and necessary repairs and for the rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of real estate securing the home mortgages and other obligations and liens acquired by the Corporation under this section.

SEC. 3. The sixth sentence of section 4 (d) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows: "The Corporation may at any time grant an extension of time to any home owner for the payment of any installment of principal or interest owed by him to the Corporation if, in the judgment of the Corporation, the circumstances of the home owner and the condition of the security justify such extension."

SEC. 4. Subsection (g) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(g) The Corporation is further authorized to exchange bonds and to advance cash to redeem or recover homes lost by the owners by foreclosure or forced sale by a trustee under a deed of trust or under power of attorney, or by voluntary surrender to the mortgagee subsequent to January 1, 1930, subject to the limitations provided in subsection (d) of this section."

SEC. 5. Section 5 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(j) In addition to the authority to subscribe for preferred shares in Federal savings and loan associations, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized on behalf of the United States to subscribe for any amount of full paid income shares in such associations, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to subscribe for such full paid income shares upon the request of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board. Payment on such shares may be called from time to time by the association, subject to the approval of said Board and the Secretary of the Treasury, and such payments shall be made from the funds appropriated pursuant to subsection (g) of this section; but the amount paid in by the Secretary of the Treasury for shares under this subsection and such subsection (g), together shall at no time exceed 75 percent of the total investment in the shares of such association by the Secretary of the Treasury and other shareholders. Each such association shall issue receipts for such payments by the Secretary of the Treasury in such form as may be approved by said Board and such receipts shall be evidence of the interest of the United States in such full paid income shares to the extent of the amount so paid. No request for the repurchase of the full paid income shares purchased by the Secretary of the Treasury shall be made for a period of 5 years from the date of such purchase, and thereafter requests by the Secretary of the Treasury for the repurchase of such shares by such associations shall be made at the discretion of the Board; but no such association shall be requested to repurchase any such shares in any 1 year in an amount in excess of 10 percent of the total amount invested in such shares by the Secretary of the Treasury. Such repurchases shall be made in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Board for such associations.

"(k) When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, any Federal savings and loan association or member of any Federal home-loan bank may be employed as fiscal agent of the Government under such regulations as may be prescribed by said Secretary and shall perform all such reasonable duties as fiscal agent of the Government as may be required of it. Any Federal savings and loan association or member of any Federal home-loan bank may act as agent for any other instrumentality of the United States when designated for that purpose by such instrumentality of the United States."

SEC. 6. Section 5 (i) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended to read as follows:

"(i) Any member of a Federal home-loan bank may convert itself into a Federal savings and loan association under this act upon a vote of 51 percent or more of the votes cast at a legal meeting called to consider such action; but such conversion shall be subject to such rules and regulations as the Board may prescribe, and thereafter the converted association shall be entitled to all the benefits of this section and shall be subject to examination and regulation to the same extent as other associations incorporated pursuant to this act."

SEC. 7. (a) The first sentence of the eighth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting before the semicolon, after the words "Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act", a comma and the following: "or by the deposit or pledge of bonds issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended or by the deposit or pledge of Federal home-loan bank bonds or notes issued under the provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act."

(b) Paragraph (b) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting after the words "bonds of the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months", a comma and the following: "bonds issued under the provisions of subsection (c) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended, and having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months, bonds or notes issued under the provisions of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, and having maturities from date of purchase of not exceeding 6 months."

SEC. 8. The Federal Reserve banks are authorized, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to act as depositaries, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

SEC. 9. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is authorized to buy bonds or debentures of Federal home-loan banks upon such terms as may be agreed upon or to loan money to Federal home-loan banks upon such terms as may be agreed upon but not to exceed $50,000,000 shall be invested or advanced under this section.

SEC. 10. Section 10 (b) of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, as amended, is amended by inserting a period after $20,000, and striking out the following: ", or (3) is past due more than 6 months when presented."

SEC. 11. Section 6 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentences: "For the purposes of this section the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to allocate and make immediately available to the Board, out of the funds appropriated pursuant to section 5 (g), the sum of $500,000. Such sum shall be in addition to the funds appropriated pursuant to this section, and shall be subject to the call of the Board and shall remain available until expended."

SEC. 12. Subsection (e) of section 8 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(e) No person, partnership, association, or corporation shall, directly or indirectly, solicit, contract for, charge or receive, or attempt to solicit, contract for, charge or receive any fee, charge, or other consideration from any person applying to the Corporation for a loan, whether bond or cash, except ordinary fees authorized and required by the Corporation for services actually rendered for examination and perfection of title, appraisal, and like necessary services. Any person, partnership, association, or corporation violating the provisions of this subsection shall, upon conviction thereof, be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years or both."

SEC. 13. Subsection (k) of section 4 of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is hereby amended by inserting a new sentence after the second sentence of such subsection, as follows: "all payments upon principal of loans made by the Corporation shall under regulations made by the Corporation be applied to the retirement of the bonds of the Corporation."

SEC. 14. The eighth sentence of section 4 (a) of the act entitled "An act to provide for the establishment of a Corporation to aid in the refinancing of farm debts, and for other purposes", approved January 31, 1934, is amended to read as follows: "No such bonds shall be issued in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of such bonds, but a failure to comply with this provision shall not invalidate the bonds or the guaranty of the same."

SEC. 15. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LUCE. I demand a second.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCLINTIC] to make an announcement.

Mr. MCCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask the attention of the House for just a minute. It is generally understood that the House hopes to conclude its work today so as to make it possible to recess over until Monday. Many Members are interested in the inspection trip to Government agencies that is to take place tomorrow. The time the train will leave is 2 o'clock, at the Union Station, instead of 1 o'clock, and I ask all to take notice, likewise those who might not now be in the Chamber.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the bill before the House amends the Home Loan Corporation Act so as to provide for a Government guarantee of both principal and of interest of the bonds the Corporation is authorized to issue. The bonds which the Corporation is authorized to issue amount to $2,000,000,000, the interest of which under the original act is guaranteed by the Government. The prime purpose of this legislation is to provide for the guarantee of the bonds of the Corporation, and it is estimated by the Home Loan Bank Board that the funds provided in this bill will be amply sufficient to take care of the demands for loans during the coming 12 months, or approximately that period. Applications have been received in the amount of about $3,000,000,000, and something like $350,000,000 has been loaned already. These are the figures supplied at the time the committee held hearings on the bill. The amount is larger now. There will be a considerable percentage of applications that will not show eligibility under the provisions of the act, and the Board feels that the sum of $2,000,000,000 established by the bill will do the work of emergency so sorely needed during the coming year.

In order that the securities of the Corporation, the property covered by mortgages, may be conserved and its value safeguarded and for the protection of borrowers, and incidentally for unemployment relief to be gained, the bill authorizes loans to be made for maintenance, repairs, modernization, and enlargement of homes, and allocates $200,000,000 for that purpose.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I cannot yield at present. The interest on loans in cases where relief is granted by the exchange of bonds for mortgages is not to exceed 5 percent a year. In the case of cash loans the rate is 6 percent. The interest rate will be rearranged from time to time to grant as large a measure of consideration to borrowers and mortgagors as the Corporation may be able to grant without involving the Government in serious loss. The bonds of the Corporation are to be issued and handled by the Treasury as other Government operations, and the Corporation will have the benefit of any advantages in interest rates that may come through a better financing arrangement by the Treasury. The bill provides that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation may buy bonds of the Home Loan Bank, but may not expend or employ for that purpose more than $50,000,000.

The measure also provides for going back to the 1st of January 1930 as the date to which its operations may extend to relieve mortgagors. It was thought the bill should be liberalized in that regard so as to cover the period during which the distress of borrowers in the real-estate field had been accentuated.

The bill also provides for the subscription to stock in Federal loan and savings banks. It is not a subscription to preferred stock, as heretofore, but a subscription to income-deriving stock, to be repurchased by the Federal home loan and savings banks over a period of years, not less than 5 or more than 10, the thought being that a great service may be accomplished by the enlargement of these associations throughout the country, in many sections of which no such organizations are now in existence. The purpose being to encourage home ownership and to afford suitable credit facilities for people desiring to become home owners.

This, Mr. Speaker, is a brief outline of the bill and its purposes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Does the gentleman realize that as of March 30 of this year the Home Owners' Loan Corporation received applications totaling $3,613,000,000, and that this bill provides for only $2,000,000,000, and does the gentleman further realize that in the period of the last 3 weeks additional applications totaled $410,000,000?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think I stated that the applications today total, so I have been advised, something in the neighborhood of $3,000,000,000, but loans had been made to the amount of $350,000,000 at the time our committee held hearings and the amount is substantially larger now. It has been found by experience that a large number of applications for loans are not eligible within the requirements of the law. The Board believes that the amount provided in this bill will be sufficient to carry on the work of the emergency relief throughout the year.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The figures I have given are figures that I received this morning from the Home Owners' Loan bank itself, and gives the loan applications as of March 30.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. GLOVER. Is there anything in the present bill that liberalizes the manner in which loans can be made to cover this situation? I received a letter from one of the attorneys for the Home Loan Corporation stating they were handicapped in his city in granting loans where the home had been built with one or two apartments.

Mr. STEAGALL. The law in that respect has not been changed by the present bill. It does not contemplate relief for mortgagors owning apartments.

Mr. GLOVER. Does the gentleman not believe it ought to be liberalized so that that character of homes could be taken care of?

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, there are many cases which the gentleman and I both would like to relieve, but it has not been thought that relief could be afforded in every instance. The purpose is to supply, as far as may be done, relief for bona fide home owners.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I know the gentleman is thoroughly familiar with this legislation, and I want his opinion about a certain point. I make reference to two telegrams received from important cities in my district, one from Kenosha and one from Racine, and I want to insert them in the RECORD.

They show the delinquent tax percentage running very high on homesteads. What, in the gentleman's opinion, does the law provide, and the administration of the law provide, for the handling of delinquent taxes on homesteads?

Mr. STEAGALL. The original law takes care of the situation pointed out by the gentleman. It contained a provision authorizing cash loans for the specific purpose to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Is the gentleman able to say how many home owners have actually been given relief under this bill up to date?

Mr. STEAGALL. I regret that for the moment I cannot give the gentleman those figures. The figures are above 100,000. I shall be glad to supply them later in the day.

Mr. TRUAX. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. TRUAX. I would like to assist the chairman of the committee to answer the question asked by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY]. I am informed that in my State $72,000,000 of loans have already been granted, and that heads the list of all States. I think they have done a mighty fine job of it in the State of Ohio.

Mr. STEAGALL. I am glad to have the gentleman's statement. I am advised, and I think the figures are correct, that the number of borrowers relieved down to the time of the hearings held by the committee amounts to about 114,000. That was up to March 9. I am sure those figures are substantially correct. Of course, many loans have been closed since that time. Loans now run to about $35,000,000 a week.

Mr. REILLY. If the gentleman will yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REILLY. I have been advised by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation that that figure has been increased recently to 150,000 and the amount of loans to $450,000,000.

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes a statement which is valuable in this connection, that the number of mortgagors relieved amounts to 150,000 and the amount loaned is $450,000,000.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. What provision is made where bonds have already been issued and accepted by mortgagees under this bill? Can they exchange them for the new bonds?

Mr. STEAGALL. I should have stated that. It was an oversight on my part that I did not state it. The bill provides not only for the Government guaranty of the new bonds to be issued, but it provides, indirectly, for the guaranty of all outstanding bonds, the method being that any holder of outstanding bonds may, within the next year after the passage of this act, exchange his bonds for the new bonds, the new bonds to be accepted at whatever rate of interest they bear; and if there is any difference, of course, the mortgagee or holder of the bonds would take his chances in that connection.

I thank the gentleman for calling that to my attention.

Mr. GRAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. GRAY. There are many of these mortgages where the mortgage exceeds the valuation of the property. What provision is there to meet that emergency?

Mr. STEAGALL. The law contemplates an adjustment of those matters between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. It is contemplated, of course, that the mortgagee will scale down his mortgage and accept bonds to the amount of 80 percent of the appraised value of the property mortgaged.

Mr. GRAY. What is the percentage of the loan upon the appraised value of the property?

Mr. STEAGALL. Eighty percent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. As I understand it, these loans are not confined to mortgaged property, but loans may be granted for the purpose of repairing and enlarging homes?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is limited, however, to homes on which mortgages are carried by the Corporation.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. But it does not provide for new construction?

Mr. STEAGALL. It does not.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I had hoped that it would.

Mr. STEAGALL. Of course, there is demand for that, along with many other things which the Government is being asked to do at this time, but the bill does not provide for loans of the kind my friend has suggested.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER].

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, we are taking up today an administration bill introduced in both the House and Senate in very much the same substance but in somewhat different form, and given earnest consideration by the Banking and Currency Committees of both bodies. This measure was evolved for the purpose of perfecting the operation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and is well designed to accomplish that purpose, so far as it goes. The importance of the bill before us, however, lies not so much in what it contains as in the lack of what it should contain.

The Senate began the consideration of this bill several weeks ago. Little real controversy developed, though a few amendments were added, until on the 15th day of March last, when Senator NORRIS arose and offered the following amendment, which will be found on page 4602 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

In the appointment of agents and the selection of employees for said Corporation, and in the promotion of agents or employees, no partisan political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all agents and employees shall be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency. Any member of the Board who is found guilty of a violation of this provision by the President of the United States shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, and any agent or employee of the Corporation who is found guilty of a violation of this section by the Board shall be removed from office by said Board.

A long discussion of this amendment then ensued in the body at the north end of the hall, chiefly as to whether this amendment or one placing the employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under the Civil Service rules was preferable, but no conclusion was reached. The bill was taken up again on the 19th of March, when Senator NORRIS reported (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 4809) that the Board of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation itself was in favor of this amendment. The discussion ended with a record vote. The amendment was adopted by a vote of 40 to 33, the 33 opposing it being all Democrats.

The Banking and Currency Committee of this House had a number of hearings on H.R. 8403, the companion bill, as originally introduced. When these were completed, and before the reading of the bill began, by the unanimous consent of the committee there was substituted the Senate bill, not as it passed the Senate, but as it had been originally reported to it. The Banking and Currency Committee then proceeded to add certain amendments of its own and the minor amendments made in the Senate. When the Norris amendment was offered, however, it was voted down, and the bill comes before the House today minus that amendment. Unfortunately, under the rules, it is impossible to offer this amendment today, and I am in hopes that in conference it will be retained.

The Home Owners' Loan Act is one of the most constructive of the administration measures passed at the special session of last spring. The great majority of those who did not and do not see eye to eye with the President on much of his so-called "emergency" legislation—and I am, I must confess, among that number—nevertheless supported this bill. It provided a method by which, without large present cost to the Government, and perhaps with no ultimate cost to it, the financially distressed owner of a small home on the eve of foreclosure and eviction, and even within a reasonable time after eviction, might refinance his mortgage, secure easier terms, and a short moratorium on payments until the times would improve and he could better meet his obligations. There is nothing of which the average American is prouder than of his home, be it ever so humble, and the blackest page in the history of the depression is the long list of those who have been compelled to sacrifice the homes for which they have slaved and saved.

Though the bill was passed, the expected relief did not come. The machinery of administration was necessarily complicated and it took time to set it up. Mortgage holders in many cases were suspicious of the bonds offered them in exchange, since they carried the Government guaranty only as to interest and not as to principal, but, worst of all, in many parts of the country the spoils system in the making of appointments reared its ugly head. In stating this fact, well known to all of you, I am criticizing no one. The members of the board of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had the almost impossible task of trying, in a short time, to set up an organization to function in all parts of the country. In every community of any size there must be an office to file, sift, and pass on an avalanche of applications, with appraisers, attorneys, clerks, field men, auditors, and a host of others to be appointed to do the work.

Is it surprising that many State chairmen were appointed on political recommendations and that these State chairmen in turn secured the appointment of many of their henchmen and that these same henchmen favored members of their own party in the granting of relief? Anyone knowing the history of the operation of the spoils system in this country would have been surprised if the situation had been different.

Mr. Speaker, I represent the district which sent to the House of Representatives for 4 terms and to the Senate for 1 term a great American and a great Democrat, George H. Pendleton. He is famous, among other things, for his nomination as Vice President, with General McClellan, on the Democratic ticket that opposed Lincoln in 1864, but he is chiefly famous for his introduction and support of the first civil-service reform bill that passed Congress.

From the early days of our Republic the question of appointment to public office has plagued our Presidents, for the right of appointment is vested by the Constitution in the President except where Congress by law provides other means. History records many instances when the Chief Executive, driven almost frantic by the importunities of place seekers, spoke his mind freely on the subject. And yet the pressure was almost impossible to resist. Every change of administration would see an almost complete turning out of Government employees and the substitution of a new set whose politics agreed with the President. Since the President, in the nature of things, could not know anything about the great majority of the applicants, he must perforce take the recommendations of the Senators and Members of the House on the fitness of individuals for the various positions. But I am carrying coals to Newcastle to elaborate on this aspect of the question before such an audience as this.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I am wondering if the gentleman has considered the fact that this personnel has been set up now for several months and that the passage of the so-called "Norris amendment" would be practically an invitation to change that personnel, which, as far as I know, has been working very adequately. It certainly has in my section. I do not know whether the gentleman had considered that phase of the question or not.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I should point out to the gentleman from Maryland that I do not think there is a desire on the part of anyone to eject any person from a position when the person is handling the position properly. I understand that a great many of the abuses have been rectified. I should point out to the gentleman that the board itself has favored the passage of this Norris amendment, and the President of the United States has stated publicly a similar desire.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman means that the gentleman, as a member of the minority party, wants representation on these patronage jobs.

Mr. HOLLISTER. They should not be handled by patronage; that is what I am advocating.

Mr. FULLER. The gentleman's party is receiving it now in the gentleman's State, when men of the gentleman's political faith were appointed to these positions in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the gentleman's State.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I do not know anything about it; I have not advocated it.

Mr. FULLER. Is not the gentleman aware of the fact that an ex-Member of Congress holds one of the most important positions on this Board here in Washington, and that he took with him his secretary and his chauffeur, and that all of them are on the pay roll down here?

Mr. HOLLISTER. If the gentleman wishes to go into this at greater length in his own time, I would be glad to have him do so. I know nothing about the facts of which the gentleman speaks.

As the Government increased in size after the Civil War, the problem became more and more acute, and agitation was begun for reforming the Civil Service to provide for proper examination of applicants and tenure of office for the faithful and efficient employee. Hardly a session of Congress passed without considerable discussion of this question. Under Grant a bill was passed to give the President the power to establish rules to govern admission to the Civil Service, though nothing was done with respect to insuring tenure. The President named a board and a number of employees were appointed in accordance with the rules it laid down, but the failure of Congress to continue appropriations for the board brought its labors to an end in a couple of years. From then on, however, the party platform of all the parties carried planks supporting Civil Service reform; and when Garfield was elected in 1880 the friends of this movement were jubilant, for he was well known to favor it strongly. His death at the hand of a disappointed office seeker in the summer of 1881 brought public sentiment very strongly into line, and at the session of Congress beginning in December 1882 Senator Pendleton, the Chairman of the Committee on Civil Service Reform, introduced a bill which was destined to become the foundation of our present Civil Service laws. This bill passed both Houses easily and became a law in January 1883. At first only a small part of the Federal employees were classified, but the number steadily grew and, while there have been temporary set-backs, until recently there has been steady progress. At the end of the fiscal year 1933, 456,000 Federal employees were in the classified Civil Service, out of a total number of Federal civil employees of 565,000.

Mr. Speaker, one of the most distressing evidences of a recent retrogression in the ideals of our Government is the familiar phrase that we find in so many of the measures which have been presented to us and which we have passed during the past year. A typical example of this phrase reads as follows:

> The Administrator may appoint and fix the compensation of such experts, and their appointment may be made and compensation fixed without regard to the civil-service laws, or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and the Administrator may, in the same manner, appoint and fix the compensation of such other officers and employees as are necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

To one who has studied the history of the spoils system in popular government that phrase tolls the knell of efficiency and often even of honesty. It puts us on notice that the welfare of the Union is to be traded in payment for political services rendered or expected.

Inquiry at the office of the United States Civil Service Commission elicits the startling information that, outside of the administration of the securities bill, which was turned over to the Federal Trade Commission, none of the employees of the many new governmental agencies which have been set up since the 4th of March 1933 have been placed under the civil-service laws. It is impossible to give in exact figures the number of employees in these new agencies, as it is difficult to get the figures from the different offices, and when received they are not up to date. It is well known, however, that the number runs up to tens of thousands.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Speaker, I have wandered far afield from the present bill, but I have done so with a purpose, and I now return. I have here a clipping from the Washington Evening Star of March 21 last, 2 days after the bill before us passed the Senate, from which clipping I should like to quote:

> President Roosevelt today served notice on Congress that he favored the Norris amendment to the home-loan guarantee bill to bar politics from appointments to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation * * *.
>
> After reading the amendment of Senator NORRIS, Republican, of Nebraska, President Roosevelt personally communicated his desire to Chairman STEAGALL, of the House Banking Committee.
>
> He made it known through Stephen T. Early, a secretary, that he considered politics also should be banned in considering appointments to other Federal relief agencies such as the N.R.A., the Civil Works Administration, and the Farm Credit Administration * * *.
> The House committee deleted the political-ban provision of the bill in approving the general purpose of the measure to guarantee the principal as well as the interest of the $2,000,000,000 of Government bonds to aid home owners.

One can only conjecture why the majority members of my committee took the action they did in refusing the Norris amendment. If they represent their party, however, the only reason there can be is that the Democratic Party, as represented by this committee majority, prefers to disregard the merit system, to disregard the request of the President, to disregard the desires of the board which must make the appointments in question, and prefers to raise the piratical skull-and-bones pennant to the masthead of its political ship, shouting the old war cry, "To the victor belongs the spoils!"

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOLLISTER. I yield to my colleague from Ohio.

Mr. YOUNG. Is not the gentleman from Ohio proud of the record of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in our State? Does he not know that the record in Ohio is so far ahead of every other State in the Union as to be outstanding; that nearly $79,000,000 has been disbursed to date in the State of Ohio under the administration of Henry G. Bruener to distressed home owners; that 26,000 have received relief; and that the average cost to the Government of every loan made by this Corporation in Ohio as of this date is $14.80 per loan?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Is the gentleman almost to the end of his question?

Mr. YOUNG. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I will be glad to answer a question.

Mr. YOUNG. In some other States the cost exceeds that by many, many times.

Mr. HOLLISTER. May I answer the gentleman?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER] 1 additional minute.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I understood the gentleman to say in the early part of his speech that favoritism had been shown to applications of members of the Democratic Party. Was there any evidence whatsoever as to that fact produced in the committee?

Mr. HOLLISTER. None at all.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Then the gentleman's statement is based on hearsay?

Mr. HOLLISTER. Based entirely on reports.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Based on hearsay.

Mr. HOLLISTER. My desire is to have the general principle adopted that appointments shall be made without political consideration. I am not criticizing a particular State or a particular set-up.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Does not the organization in Ohio at the present time have some managers and some attorneys who are members of the Republican Party?

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, this discussion which we have just heard, while it was very courteous, appears to constitute a reflection upon the present administration of the Home Loan Organization.

Our information is that throughout the country the attorneys, appraisers, State managers, and district managers are conducting an extremely difficult situation with great ability and infinite energy. The committee, in considering the so-called "Norris amendment", did not have in mind any partisan consideration. The committee felt that, in view of the fact that the organization had been finally set up in every county and in every city throughout the United States and, as far as we knew, was handling its very difficult work adequately, it would be a mistake to pass legislation which would constitute a reflection upon the personnel and which would indicate an invitation to change the personnel.

This organization, Mr. Speaker, was required and is required to act with great rapidity. Property is advertised for sale on mortgage foreclosure, and this organization is appealed to for relief.

There have been up to this time 150,000 American homes actually saved by the operation of this organization. It has been conducted in an absolutely nonpartisan way. No one asking for a loan has ever been questioned as to whether he was a Democrat or Republican, a white man or a colored man. The majority members of this committee and some members, probably, of the minority felt that there was no necessity for changing the personnel of this organization; that there was no necessity for changing the manner in which these appointments had been made and would be made, and that to cause a change at this time would create confusion, would interfere with the management of the organization, and would be demoralizing. For this reason, and for this reason alone, the Norris amendment was not favorably acted upon by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, insofar as the State of Illinois is concerned, I gladly accept the challenge of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], because I do want to reflect upon the personnel of the Home Owner's Loan Corporation in my State, and I want to go a little further and characterize it as one of the foulest blots that has ever been placed upon the escutcheon of the State of Illinois. They have placed human misery upon the altar of political spoliation.

I unequivocally endorse the principle of guaranteeing both the principal and interest on these bonds, as recited in this bill. I am glad that $200,000,000 was set aside for repairs. I wish the measure might be amended to set aside an equal amount of money for new construction, but under suspension of the rules amendments are not in order.

However, I shall hold my nose as I vote for the bill, because of the utter inefficiency of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in my State, and if I but make a most natural exposition of the history of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Illinois, it is more eloquent than anything else I can say as to how rotten it has been, and how it has left our home owners in complete despair.

I remember a politician running for office who, while making a speech, asked this rhetorical question of his audience, "What are the fruits of victory?" One of his very humble constituents in the rear of the hall stood up and said, "I suppose they are plums, melons, and applesauce." He was absolutely right so far as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Illinois is concerned, because there have been melons in fees for intermediaries, there have been plums for the spoilsman, and there has been a lot of hooey and applesauce for the distressed home owners of Illinois. [Laughter.]

Let me begin this presentation by reading a quotation from a Chicago paper dated December 8:

> The administration of the Illinois Home Owners' Loan Corporation has become a violation of the forgotten man and a cesspool of spoils politics. Astounding instances of mismanagement and political wire pulling in and on the fringes of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation here, which is supposed to be a financial refuge of the distressed and overburdened home owners caught in the maelstrom of depression, have been revealed.

The article also refers to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation as "jigsaw, political chicanery."

Along in August of 1933 they appointed Mr. William G. Donne manager of the Illinois division. He was the president of the eighth ward Democratic organization in Chicago. He was the State manager of the Home Loan, and Russell O'Brien, the secretary of the eighth ward Democratic organization in Chicago, was made the secretary.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Let me finish this statement first, please. They opened an office in La Salle Street about the 1st of August 1933. For the general counsel they selected Mr. Samuel K. Markham, law partner of one Thomas Donovan, who is the nephew of Tom Donovan, the Lieutenant Governor of Illinois, and for assistant counsel one Thomas L. Grant, an eighth ward precinct captain, who was once censured by the Illinois Supreme Court for dereliction of professional duty after the court had heard disbarment proceedings against 55 lawyers in the smelly and odorous sanitary district case.

They were all ready to start business. They had to have an appraiser or a number of appraisers, so there was set up, mind you, in the same building, the Central States Appraisal Co. of Chicago, consisting of three incorporators; and who were they? One of them was Mr. Arthur Dritsch, a brother-in-law of Mr. Donne, the State manager of the Illinois division and also a member of the eighth ward Democratic organization in Chicago; Mr. James J. Sullivan, former chief clerk of the sanitary district and committeeman from the eighth ward; and one Mr. James P. Walsh.

They needed an intermediary in order to carry on their infamous business, so there came into the picture a man by the name of Fred J. Walsh, the Democratic leader of Joliet and a member of the State patronage committee, and here is the way they went about doing business. Mr. Walsh started sending forth solicitors into Will County, into Kane County, and into Cook County. He let his solicitors permit the impression to go out that he had a special influence with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation of Illinois and if they cared to pay 5 percent for him to exert his influence they could expedite loans in a rather substantial amount. Let me read the language of the contract that Mr. Walsh used:

> We, the undersigned, being owners of certain first-mortgage notes secured by premises and improvements located at (a certain place) do hereby employ Fred Walsh for the purpose of exerting his efforts in having join with us, the maker of said notes and the holders of said notes of the same issue in applying for and procuring from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation an exchange for the notes we now hold for Government bonds to be issued by that organization and being desirous of having the benefit of the skill, training, knowledge, and experience of said Fred Walsh in appraising and dealing with resident property, we hereby authorize the said Fred J. Walsh to make application in our names or otherwise, and to conduct all negotiations directed toward such exchange of securities and in the event the same is accomplished, we promise to pay to the said Fred J. Walsh 5 percent of the face value of all such securities delivered to us in exchange for such notes.

This is the kind of document they used in place of and along with the mortgagee's consent to take bonds, and he, Mr. Walsh, is one of the leading spoilsmen and patronage dispensers of the State of Illinois.

Then he branched out—he branched out into Aurora, into Joliet, and elsewhere.

Mr. BLANTON. Was not Joliet where he belonged? [Laughter.]

Mr. DIRKSEN. Possibly so.

Let me read some quotations of some statements that were made by one Mr. Schlitz, who was identified with the George W. Alschuler & Co. mortgage company in Aurora, Ill., and who was doing business with this intermediary, Mr. Fred J. Walsh, who had such a political drag with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. Schlitz said:

> We knew it was political graft down at the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, but what could we do? It seemed to be an out for our customers.

Again I quote:

> We honestly felt that this was a political deal.

I quote again:

> We first heard that Walsh was dickering with the Home Owners' Loan Corporation from friends in Joliet. Then Mr. A. P. Moecher came in and told us Walsh was reopening his Aurora office for the purpose of obtaining customers who wanted Federal loans. He told us Walsh had opened an office just above the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

And mark you, in the same building in La Salle Street, in Chicago.

I quote again. Schlitz says:

> Let me repeat. We knew it was political pull.

Now then, referring to the volume of business that was done, Schlitz had this to say:

> It must be a large volume, because the word has gone out to everybody in town that Fred J. Walsh could help them if they saw Moecher.

Let me say something about appraisals. Here is a brother-in-law of the manager of the Illinois Division, together with two other members of the eighth ward organization in Chicago, setting up an appraisal company in the same building which houses the office of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. They got 40 percent of the appraisals and charged $15, while other reputable abstract companies offered to do it for $4.50 per appraisal.

Let me also say something about the insurance feature. I understand that 75 percent of the business went to two concerns, one of them only recently established, about the time that the Home Owners' Loan office was first established in Chicago.

Let me say something about the results under this regime. I was interested in the report just made on Ohio because that is the banner State and will serve splendidly for purposes of comparison.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I regret that I cannot yield now.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Inasmuch as the gentleman has challenged me, I think he ought to yield to me for a question.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman withhold for a moment? They sent an investigator out there, and finally removed the manager of the Illinois division. They appointed a new manager. There were threats of indictments, and the Department of Justice had men out there investigating this whole set-up, this mess of rottenness built upon the agony and despair of home owners threatened with foreclosure. They had some 40,000 applications for loans at that time, and up to the 1st of December they made and closed 452 loans out of those 40,000 applications. Let me show you what the record is as of the 23d of March, which was certified to me by the local office. We had in Illinois 63,877 applications, and only 1,048 loans closed, involving a total of only $4,444,000. I shall carry this one step further and show you just what has been done right in my own district. A branch office is located in my district. They had 2,147 applications on the 23d of March, which is only 2 weeks ago. Of that number only 16 loans had been closed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Sixteen loans out of 2,147 applications, involving $45,945, and the distressing thing is this: The expense of that one office at Peoria thus far has been $37,000, and the total of loans issued in that office has amounted to only $45,945—almost as much expense for fees as the total amount of the loans closed. If anybody here wants the record, I have it here, as it came in the mail this morning from the H.O.L.C. office in Washington. I am glad to see that Ohio, which has 1,000,000 less population than Illinois, got $71,000,000, and that Indiana, that has less than half the population of Illinois, got $16,000,000, whereas in Illinois we got only $4,000,000. This frightful disparity is due to political rottenness, which can only be changed when they put this thing on a merit and efficiency business and take these spoilsmen out who are supposed to be working in the interest of the despairing home owners of my State.

It is positively nauseating to think that in Ohio, Indiana, and elsewhere they are making loans at a cost of from $13 to $15 per loan, while in Illinois the report shows that in February the cost was $456 per loan. That should be as a stench in the nostrils of the citizens and taxpayers.

In the branch office at Peoria they had 15 employees on the last day of February and 20 on the last day of March of this year; and only 16 loans actually closed. Where is the fault? What is the trouble?

In the face of such a record of inefficiency and such a sacrifice of the interests of the humble home owners of Illinois this thing merits an immediate and sweeping investigation.

The Norris amendment, for which we are contending today, seeks only to eliminate such a rotten condition as this by requiring merit and efficiency in the personnel who are to administer an act that has been hailed as a boon to distressed home owners.

I am not contending for the appointment of Republicans or Democrats but merely for the appointment of efficient persons who will render honest and sympathetic service and bright succor and relief to those who are in distress.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that my distinguished friend from Illinois, Mr. DIRKSEN, declined to yield, it was necessary for me to get this time in order to say that while there is some merit in his statement, he is discussing last year's birdsnests, because that situation in Chicago was cleaned up over 30 days ago. In the city of Chicago now they are making about 100 loans today.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me there in order that I may answer that?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I decline to yield.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CAVICCHIA].

Mr. CAVICCHIA. Mr. Speaker, lest I be accused of trying to make political capital, I shall not criticize the work of the H.O.L.C. Even our Democratic colleagues admit it needed reformation. I hope for improvements.

I am in favor of the bill that is before us. Financial institutions and individuals have refused to accept the bonds of the Home Owners' Corporation heretofore because of the uncertainty of the Corporation being able to redeem them at maturity. The committee feels that with the passing of this bill home owners will get the needed help and many of them will be able to save their homes.

Some days ago President Roosevelt stated to the press of the country that all appointments were to be made on the basis of ability and efficiency. Senator NORRIS in the Senate bill, section N, provided that all appointments, promotions, and so forth, be on strictly nonpartisan basis. This committee has stricken out this provision.

It is rumored that over 10,000 civil-service employees have lost their places in the past 12 months due to the economy program. Yet over 40,000 new employees have been given employment under the many new recovery measures passed by Congress during the same period.

This is political spoils system at its worst and should and must be discouraged. It may be argued that the Republicans have played the same game in the past. If so, I do not excuse my own party.

The spoils system must be destroyed, and I hope that the conferees of the House will insist that the Norris provision be included in this bill.

The new deal will get the help of the Republicans in the House if we are satisfied that all will get a square deal in passing laws that alleviate or regulate but must not strangulate.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself to the criticisms made by my colleagues on the Republican side as to the action of our committee in striking out the Norris amendment. I wish particularly to direct my remarks to the attention of my Democratic colleagues. There is no man on the Committee on Banking and Currency for whom I have greater respect than the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER]. I think he is one of the most valuable members on the committee, but when he talks about the application of the merit system and the spoils system he becomes affected, unfortunately, with that disease peculiar to the members of his political faith, which prevents him from first casting the beam out of his own eye before he attempts to pull the mote out of our eyes.

We intrusted Republican organizations in the State of New York with the administration of the C.W.A.; and what did they do with it? In every instance they did exactly what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] charges a few Democrats with doing—they played politics with human misery.

When the Roosevelt administration came in on the 4th of March we found that by a strange coincidence these gentlemen who are so much holier than thou that they did not look at a man's political faith before appointing him, had placed as attorneys of the Federal farm-loan banks, as appraisers for the Federal Farm Loan banks—and I am talking only of my own district and of the upper part of New York—no one but Republicans. Democrats in office were as plentiful as hen's teeth. That is the way the Republicans applied the merit system. But, of course, they admit they are better business men than we Democrats, and I will admit they run the business of politics better than we do. They have had more experience. I could not find a single exception. Many of the Republicans in the farm-loan bank system, of course, are able men. Many of them, I presume, will be left in office. The present Republican attorney in my own county for the farm-loan bank is handling the job very well, and I cannot complain of him, although I could suggest several Democrats who could fill his place. But I resent criticism of this sort.

The very able gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] and myself last year had a little difference of opinion as to the application of the Jefferson political philosophy of appointment to office by the merit system. He misquoted Jefferson. Frankly, so did I. So I want to insert in the RECORD for all time just what Jefferson did say in a letter written by him to Elias Shipman and others, a committee of merchants of New Haven, under date of July 12, 1801. The circumstances were these: The gentleman from Massachusetts last year said that we Democrats had deserted the teachings of Jefferson and had followed the teachings of Andrew Jackson—"to the victors belong the spoils." He said that Jefferson said that the only questions that should be asked of a prospective political appointee are, Is he honest; is he capable; is he loyal to the Constitution?

Jefferson had removed from office a Federalist collector of New Haven and had appointed a Democrat, and this committee of merchants wrote him a letter of remonstrance. Jefferson, in reply, said in substance that, while he believed that the merit system should be employed, yet when on coming into office he found that his predecessor, John Adams, had during the midnight hours preceding his political demise filled all of the offices with adherents of one political party, and therefore he believed that it was proper that the majority party should at least have a fair proportion of the adherents of their party in office who would be in sympathy with administration policies. At the close of his letter Jefferson said, in substance, that when time and accident had removed some of these Federalists—and, of course, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], who is even more familiar than I am with the writings of Jefferson, because he was lately converted, as he says, to the political philosophy of Jefferson, will remember that Jefferson also said, referring to Republican officeholders, "Few die and none resign"—and he had succeeded in filling some of these offices with adherents of the majority party so that the majority party had at least their fair proportion—and we have not that now—then he hoped we might return to that ideal state of things when the only questions concerning a candidate shall be, Is he honest; is he capable; is he faithful to the Constitution?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is this a speech on the bill before the House or is it a political speech?

Mr. SISSON. It is for the benefit of the conferees, in the hope that they will not yield to the Senate and restore the Norris amendment. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested in the remarks of my colleague from New York. I do not yet know the difference between a mote and a beam; but perhaps my knowledge of the Bible is not as extensive as his.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. If the gentleman can explain to me the difference between a mote and a beam, I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. SISSON. I cannot do that. It would be impossible for me to explain to any member of the gentleman's party the difference between a mote and a beam, because he could not see it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I have the highest regard for my colleague from New York. He is a valuable member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I agree that there is a great deal to be said on both sides of the question that has been discussed. Of course, the bill has not been discussed to any extent worthy of the name; the merit system has been the only issue that has been debated on the floor today, and, fundamentally, there is a great deal to be said upon the side of the spoils system. In fact, as a general proposition, I believe in the spoils system. [Applause.] I believe that as a general proposition the political spoils belong to the party in power. This system was largely introduced by Andrew Jackson, and it has been carried on as an American principle since that time.

Responsibility, as a general proposition, should rest upon the party in power; and the party in power should appoint members of their own party to the key positions of responsibility. I have spoken before and have denounced the appointment of Socialists and near-Socialists to high office under the Democratic administration, not because those men are not able or that they are not competent, but because the people back home did not elect a Socialist administration. Socialism was not elected to power. Had the people wanted socialism in America they had the opportunity to elect Norman Thomas, but they did not do it; he received less than a million votes. But you have placed in power, in high and important positions in the Government, several hundred men who are near-Socialists and Socialists at heart, who, to my mind, are disbelievers in our political and economic system, and actual believers in the Marxian Socialist theory, and who by no stretch of the imagination are real Democrats, or Jeffersonian Democrats who believe in the Constitution and in our free institutions and in our form of government. In experimenting with socialism we jeopardize all that we have gained, for we must start the experiments by repudiating the fundamental principles on which our constitutional, representative form of government has been erected. I wish I had more time to talk on this particular issue now, but I have not because there are some other things I should like to discuss, but I may get back to it later in the session. It is my firm conviction that human liberties, the rights of individuals, and constitutional rights and liberties are being smothered by paternalism, bureaucracy, and State socialism.

There is a different issue raised in this bill by the insertion of the Norris amendment providing that appointments should be made on the basis of merit and not politics, because it is a purely business proposition, and I can see some real justification for it, although there can very well be two distinct sides on such a question. If it is actually a pure, unadulterated business proposition, then it is perhaps just as well that we drop the spoils-system feature of the original bill and adopt the merit system. But I do not say that there are not just as many competent Democrats in this country as Republicans, or just as many loyal Democrats as Republicans, but if there are Republicans who know this kind of work as it is purely a practical business proposition, then I believe this amendment is meritorious and ought to be adopted. Furthermore, I am not not in favor of playing politics with human misery, and I believe it would expedite the saving of homes if the best and most experienced men were appointed irrespective of partisan politics.

I may say this, however, if it is not adopted, it is not going to break my heart, because I have always believed in the fundamental proposition that the party in power should be responsible for the operations of the organizations that they establish and control. The Democrats heaped an avalanche of criticism on the Hoover administration for not affording more effective relief to our home owners, and said, "just wait until we get in on March 4." It is now over 1 year since the Democrats came into power and the slowness and red tape in the operations of the Home Loan Board has been a blot on the American Government. Thousands of home owners have lost their homes and life savings through Government inefficiency.

Now, I am going to say something that my Democratic friends will not like. Perhaps I had better stay over here on the Republican side when I say it, because I am apt to say a good many things they do not like. It is my honest belief—but I do not believe it is the opinion of the people back home, because they are not close enough to the Government—that this administration has been the most bitterly partisan administration since the Civil War. The people back home probably do not believe this statement, because they see in the Cabinet Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, a former Republican, and likewise Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, another former Republican; but I say that this administration, as far as I can find out, has for the first time violated the actual mandate of the Congress in the appointment of high officials in the Government service where the Congress has deliberately stated that these commissions should be nonpartisan.

The dismissal of William E. Humphrey as a member of the Federal Trade Commission on account of his politics was a grossly partisan act, and, in my opinion, inexcusable and indefensible. It is a repetition of the old story that "might makes right." To add insult to injury, Prof. James M. Landis, a member of the American Civil Liberties Union and one of the radical leaders of the "brain trust", was appointed to the vacancy on the Federal Trade Commission.

President Roosevelt has repeatedly ignored and violated the unwritten law that the minority party should have adequate representation on commissions or delegations sent to international conferences. The injection of such a partisan attitude is unfortunate and only amounts to sheer stupidity, as it actually promotes partisan retaliation on foreign affairs, where there should be as much cooperation as possible.

I refer particularly to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a striking example of the failure of President Roosevelt to comply with the mandate of Congress to appoint representatives of the minority party. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is by far the most important of the Government organizations under the new set-up, under the new deal, or of the so-called "relief organizations." It has spent $5,000,000,000, possibly more, and, of course, in this respect it is more important than any two or three of the other organizations put together. Whom did President Roosevelt appoint as Republican member? The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was created by an act of January 22, 1932, and was amended by the act of July 1, 1932, which stated that it shall be composed of 7 members, not more than 4 of whom shall be members of any one political party.

Whom did President Roosevelt appoint as a Republican member? John J. Blaine, of Wisconsin. Mr. Blaine, who was a former Republican Senator, has the right to freedom of speech and of political action. He came out in 1928 and openly announced his support for Al Smith. In 1932 he announced his support of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I do not question his right in either case, nor do I blame the Democrats at all for loving him. I am simply saying—and I know you will agree with me—that he does not represent the opposition party, for he in no respect represents or can represent the Republican Party, having openly opposed its Presidential candidate in the last two elections. He has been appointed in violation of the spirit and, I believe, the letter of the law and the mandate of Congress as a Republican on this highly important Board.

As the other Republican member, the President has recently appointed Frederick H. Taber, of Massachusetts; I believe, a classmate of the President at Harvard. That, of course, is not against him but should be in his favor. He ought to know something and should make a fine director. Undoubtedly he is an honest man and an able man, at least, as one Harvard man to another, I am willing to take that for granted.

Mr. HENNEY. Does that put him in the "brain trust"?

Mr. FISH. He is a Roosevelt Republican. He supported Roosevelt in the last campaign. The law requires the appointment of members of the opposition party, of course, to represent the opposition party. We on the minority side do not count for very much anyway, but who are we going to see on the R.F.C. Board? If they allow us, we have a chance to go to the Democratic members or to Republicans who deserted the party, and I say, as a Republican, I would prefer to take my chances with the 100-percent Democrats. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Speaker, I have for many months favored the guaranty by the Federal Government of the principal of the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, and I am, therefore, in hearty sympathy with this idea. I have introduced several bills on the subject that include this provision. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that as far as this bill goes it is an excellent bill, and we should pass it, but the bill does not go far enough. For instance, the bill only empowers the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to issue bonds to a total amount of $2,000,000,000.

What are the facts? How much is required in order to relieve the distressed home owners in this country? There are in the United States 10,503,000 people who own their own homes. If they have mortgages against their homes that are in default they are eligible, under the terms of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. Most of the mortgages that were given were short-time mortgages for a period of from 1 to 3 years. Since 1931 practically no mortgage money has been available, therefore, we can say that practically all of these mortgages are due today. It is a correct estimate, and perhaps a low estimate, to say that 75 percent of the mortgages are in default and that between one third and one half of the mortgages are in distress. About $12,000,000,000 of home mortgages are in default in the United States and from six to eight billion dollars in distress.

As of March 30 the Home Owners' Loan Corporation have received 1,146,933 applications, totaling $3,613,521,730. So you see that they have already received applications totaling nearly $4,000,000,000. Now, why empower the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to issue only $2,000,000,000, as this bill does?

Another provision that should be inserted is one providing for the construction of new homes. The building industry has a rate of unemployment larger than any other industry. Twenty-four Government agencies in Washington have made studies and have come to the conclusion that between 500,000 and 800,000 new homes could be built in this country during the next few years. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation is the appropriate agency to do this, because they have an office in every county of every State. I believe between one billion and one and one half billion dollars should be appropriated in addition to what is in this bill for the construction of new homes.

Mr. Speaker, the time granted me is too short to outline in detail the amendments and changes which should be inserted in this bill before it is passed. I refer you to the speech regarding this subject which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 20, 1934, on page 4954.

Due to the fact that this bill was taken up under suspension of rules, no amendments can be offered, which I deeply regret.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the bill is good as far as it goes, and therefore I shall vote for it. I only regret that we do not have the opportunity to offer amendments so as to improve it in those particulars in which I believe it is defective.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, in Ohio there are nearly a million home owners living in their own homes. Fully 250,000 of these are in distress. They owe taxes. They owe interest on mortgages. Their homes need repairs. In thousands of instances, mortgagees are insisting upon repayment of all or part of the mortgage. One hundred and twenty-five thousand have already made application to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation for relief. Twenty-six thousand have received relief. Nearly $79,000,000 has been disbursed in my State as of this date to distressed home owners. This is more relief than has been afforded by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in any State in the Union. The cost to the Government is less than in any State in the Union except in Kansas and Indiana, being only slightly above the average cost in those States.

In Illinois as of March 16, 1934, notwithstanding that there are more home owners in distress in that State, only 1,017 mortgages had been disbursed in the sum of $4,354,000. As a matter of fact, the operation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in the State of Illinois is a scandal and a disgrace. There should be a congressional investigation in that State and from the State administrator down there should be a wholesale shake-up. In Illinois the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has proved to be the joker in the new deal. The operating expenses are highest there. The average cost to the Corporation per closed loan for the months of October, November, December 1933, and January and February 1934 are as follows:

Illinois: October 1933, $504.10; November 1933, $135.39; December 1933, $199.57; January 1934, $238.72.

It seems inexplicable that the average cost per closed loan should rise the longer the Corporation is in operation in that State. The only plausible theory would seem that so many politicians out there are being added to the Home Owners' Loan Corporation pay roll, traffic police should be employed to keep them from bumping into each other, or that salaries are increased, or both. And in February 1934 in Illinois the cost per closed loan had risen to the astonishing figure of $456—$456.19 of taxpayers' money expended for every loan to a distressed home owner in Illinois. During that same month in Ohio the average cost to the Corporation per closed loan was only $14.80. In October 1933 in Ohio, the average cost for each loan to a distressed home owner in my State was $95. Naturally, as the Home Owners' Loan Corporation began functioning in a speedier and more efficient manner that cost was reduced. The following month it was $32 and in January 1934, $14.89.

In Illinois up to March 23, 1934, 62,420 distressed home owners had made applications for loans. A pitiful few, about 1.4 percent, had received their loans. People of that State, filled with hope—perchance having listened to radio talks of Secretary Louis McHenry Howe—having read of the high purposes that motivated us to pass this beneficent measure, have applied for loans totaling $226,335,976, and have received $4,353,823. About 1.6 percent of the amount asked has been disbursed. This more than 10 months after the Home Owners' Loan Corporation came into existence.

Instead of a congressional investigation of a high-school superintendent who is a publicity hound—I refer to Dr. Wirt and his silly statements—Congress might well investigate the administration in Illinois of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

In Illinois in February 1934 there were 442 salaried field employees who closed a total of 181 loans. It took nearly three field employees in Illinois the entire month to close one loan. If this is not stealing taxpayers' money, then what is it? In Ohio during the same month 520 salaried field employees of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation closed 7,098 loans. Forty loans were closed in my State for each three field employees during that same month.

In New York in February 1934, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation had 760 field employees; 1,286 loans were closed during that month, each employee managing to close 1.69 of a loan all in 1 month. The average cost to the Corporation per closed loan in New York for February was $122.84. In November 1933 the average cost per closed loan was $440.14, and in December 1933 it had gone up to the tremendous total of $525.81. There can be no reasonable explanation for such a staggering expenditure. Instead of something "rotten in Denmark" we could well say there was "something rotten in New York."

Henry G. Brunner is the State manager of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation of Ohio. He has made and is making a magnificent record. He is, on his record, the greatest State manager in the entire country; and the fine men and women of my State who are employed in the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in Ohio are rendering real public service, fully concomitant with the high hopes we entertained in creating this great humanitarian corporation.

I am proud of the record of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in my State. The record is so far ahead of that attained in any other State as to be outstanding.

In Ohio, as of March 16, 1934, the number of applications received: 124,439. Amount of applications: $144,780,799. Number of loans disbursed: 21,715. Amount of loans disbursed: $66,741,631.

In New York State during the same period only 68,172 applications were received, this being approximately half the number of applications that were made in Ohio. The Corporation was not functioning properly in New York, and distressed home owners, clamoring for relief, were not able in some instances to even have their applications properly filed. The amount of loans requested in the applications, however, was more than twice the amount asked in Ohio, being $345,857,638. During this period only 3,118 loans were disbursed in the sum of $15,152,655. Such relief is pitifully inadequate. The main office of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in New York City is in the most magnificent office building in the world, the Empire State Building.

Ornate offices in magnificent buildings such as are in vogue in New York and Illinois should be eliminated. Democratic politicians with feet cocked on mahogany desks and reclining on luxurious davenports should be fired. Taxpayers should be considered. Distressed home owners should receive the relief we in Congress intended.

As Congressman at large from Ohio, I have carefully investigated and studied the operation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation not alone in Ohio but throughout the country. The latest figures in Ohio to March 31, 1934, show that 25,295 loans for $77,893,083 have been disbursed to home owners. Four million dollars has been paid into county treasuries for taxes. In Pennsylvania to March 16, 1934, only 5,504 loans for $15,949,490 have been disbursed. In New York 3,118 loans for $15,152,655 were disbursed. To March 31, 1934, in the entire country 140,000 loans were closed for a total of $400,000,000. In addition the danger of losing their homes was removed or lessened for 540,000 home owners, whose requests for refinancing were being considered. The average amount of a loan to a home owner is $2,839. The average cost throughout the country to the mortgagor for his loan is $25; the cost varies slightly in some localities, being more in Illinois than in Ohio.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation which we created by Act effective June 13, 1933, will, in its operation, do a greater business than any corporation in the United States. To many of our fellow citizens this organization and the hope it holds forth for the oppressed home owners burdened with taxes, is the most important feature of the new deal. Furthermore, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation in its functions comes right down into the homes of our citizens. When people meet with disappointments and rebuffs in connection with this they are bound to become skeptical of the achievements of our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who first recommended to the Congress the enactment of this law.

The Home Owners' Loan Corporation of the entire country, taking the average of its work into consideration, is not functioning as it should. At its present rate of doing business it will take 4 years to relieve the distress of our country's two and one half million home owners who are in need of aid. As a matter of fact, about 1,200,000 applications have already been made for approximately $4,000,000,000. It is clear that the Congress in its session next January must increase the amount in the authorization for bonds from $2,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000. In fact, this should be done now. Otherwise, if it is definitely established that no expansion of this Corporation's activities will be permitted, that no more than the $2,000,000,000 already authorized as a bond issue will be forthcoming, then fairness to the taxpayers and home owners of our country should induce officials of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to either eliminate thousands of applications already on file or stop receiving further applications. The pending measure should, in my judgment, be amended to provide an increase in the bond authorization from $2,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000. In this connection let me say that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act and the authorization of a bond issue of $2,000,000,000 or $5,000,000,000 does not affect nor relate to the balancing of the budget. Guarantee of the principal and interest of the bonds outstanding and to be issued, of course, involves a liability on the Government. These bonds are backed by the security of American homes, and if the corporation is properly managed there will be no loss to the Government. Of course, if the Illinois policy should prevail, then there might be grave danger to the Government.

A fine constructive feature of new legislation proposed is the provision relative to funds for extensive repairs to homes upon which the Home Owners' Loan Corporation makes loans. The building industry is in deplorable condition. A measure should be passed to provide employment to many of the four or five million men in the building trades, most of whom are unemployed.

Before the depression the yearly average for new home construction was 20 times the present rate of construction. Proper administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation will go a long way toward maintaining and raising a standard of living in this country. In our cities we must do away with tenements and establish for all time a proper American standard of living in decency and comfort.

We are now eliminating a fundamental defect of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act by providing a guarantee by our Government of the principal of the bonds. We recognize a moral obligation and make it legal. The market value and marketability of Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds will be enhanced. I consider this a most constructive measure and am happy to support it.

With bonds unconditionally guaranteed by the Government and backed by the full faith and credit of the United States, and, in addition, supported by the assets and property upon which loans are made, it will be seen that the additional factors of safety are likely to cause investors to switch from Liberty bonds and other Government obligations to H.O.L.C. bonds.

I note with pleasure that the interest rate will be reduced. The interest rate should be reduced to 3 percent. This would be in line with most securities issued by the Government. Profits accruing to the H.O.L.C. would be materially increased. Home owners should profit by reason of this differential. Instead of paying interest on their loans at the rate of 5 percent, the interest charge could be reduced to 4 or 4½ percent. There would still be a differential of 1 or 1½ percent to provide for the operating expenses of the Corporation and for the creation of a reserve fund to take care of any losses which might be sustained upon some of the loans.

All bonds of the H.O.L.C. heretofore issued at 4 percent without Government guarantee as to payment of the principal will immediately be recalled and new bonds bearing lower interest will be substituted therefor.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board has adopted an unbelievably stupid policy in dealing with home owners who have secured home loans through the H.O.L.C. All mortgagors must remit interest payments and, later, payments on the principal as well to the treasurer of the Board, Patrick J. Maloney, at Washington. Few of these mortgagors have checking accounts. A great many do not understand the mechanics of making remittances by mail, and are compelled to consult with attorneys at an expense. In any event, they are compelled to go to the expense of purchasing postal or express money orders. Red tape of this sort should be cut. Certainly the Federal Bank Board should establish collection agencies in each State. Payments of interest and on principal will be facilitated as soon as a sensible policy is adopted and mortgagors are enabled to make payments in the cities and States where the loans are made, instead of sending on money to Washington. Success of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation is jeopardized even now by the red tape and restrictions imposed here in Washington.

In concluding I desire to pay tribute to Chairman John H. Fahey, of the Federal Home Loan Board. He is doing a big job. We ought to help him in every way possible. [Applause.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of the gentleman who just preceded me, and it seems to me he has presented the finest argument I have yet heard for the incorporation in this bill of the Norris amendment.

I have never met Mr. Fahey, the head of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. So far as I know, I have never seen him. What the history of his political affiliations has been I do not know and I do not care, but from what I hear of the man I believe he is trying to do a mighty important job in the best possible way. I know he is charged with the responsibility of caring for a situation in this country that means peace, security, and better health and home surroundings to hundreds of thousands of our poorer people. I believe he is fully capable of doing this to the satisfaction of everyone if he is left free to select his assistants without interference from those with political debts to pay. I know he is charged with the responsibility of saving for these people their homes. I know he is charged with the responsibility of making it possible for these more modest homes to have some of the latest sanitary improvements, and when he has this responsibility, I may say to you that he has the responsibility to some extent at least of preserving the health of the people living in these more modest homes.

I do not know that we Republicans are in a position to criticize the Democrats if, in the ordinary activities of the Government, wherever it is possible without interfering with or reducing the efficiency of the Government service, they put into office members of their political faith. We are not entirely guiltless of that procedure ourselves, but I think it is pertinent to this question to remind the Members of this body that every President this country has had since President Arthur has contributed most substantially, through Executive orders, to efficient Government service and to making the welfare, the livelihood, and the permanent employment of the employees of this great Government secure by transferring them to the class covered by the civil-service laws and thus move further and further away from the spoils system. Every such act by these Presidents has constituted a condemnation of the spoils system now being again set up in the transaction of the Government business under the direction of Mr. Farley.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I shall put in the RECORD as a part of my remarks some data I have today received from the Civil Service Commission. If the Members are interested in this matter and will consult this data, they will learn that of all the Presidents we have had who have contributed to this splendid development President Wilson, that great Democrat and war President, contributed more than any other. Of course, he had the opportunity to contribute more, because the number of those employed during the war was vastly increased. While he was President, by Executive order, he brought 169,812 Government employees under civil service. President Theodore Roosevelt was next with 128,- 735, and President Cleveland followed with 49,179. The following table will be interesting, Mr. Speaker:

I have looked with no little alarm, I may say, Mr. Speaker, upon some things that have transpired since the present administration has been in office. The first thing that was done in the name of economy was to discharge many thousands of Government employees, practically all under the civil service.

If the services of these employees were not needed, to discharge them was, of course, the proper thing to do. However, the administration had a very definite expansive program in mind which Congress proceeded to put into effect with great promptitude. Various alphabetical organizations were almost immediately established. According to the best information we have, more than 46,000 Government employees were added to the pay rolls since the 4th of March 1933, while thousands of experienced, capable civil-service employees were walking the streets of Washington and other cities in the United States looking for work that was not to be had. But few of these have been given employment in the new activities, and it is common knowledge here that those who were employed found it necessary to secure powerful political endorsements.

It seems to me that if there was any regard for efficiency of Government employees under the leadership of Mr. Farley, the Postmaster General, the man who is charged by one newspaper correspondent as being the "Jobmaster General", places would have been found for thousands more of these worthy discharged civil-service employees, many of whom have reached an age where finding employment elsewhere presents a most serious problem, notwithstanding their ability to satisfactorily and efficiently do the work required in the various Government activities. So far as I can recall, there has never before been such a determined effort to wreck the entire merit system in Government service and set up in its place a spoils system, which only a disciple of Tammany Hall could conceive.

From what we see and hear, it is apparent to us that an attempt is being made by Mr. Farley to tammanyize the entire United States. If there had been any doubt about this, the thought would have been dispelled by the action of the House Committee on Banking and Currency in striking from this most important and far-reaching bill the Norris amendment which seeks to remove the activities of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation from the spoils system.

Bill after bill has come before this House providing for additional activities by this Government, and in almost every instance the Democratic majority has had the brazenness to provide that appointments of officials and assistants shall be without regard to civil service rules and regulations.

I had thought there would be a limit to where this practice would be carried. I had hoped that in any activity so closely touching the welfare, the health, and happiness of the women and children of this country, the majority would suppress their desire for political patronage, but apparently I was mistaken.

The relief extended under this bill to be effective must be extended in the immediate future. For this reason civil service examinations and regulations would be too cumbersome; they would cause too much delay. Because of this, I do not believe all these employees can be selected in this way. There are, of course, many thousands of idle, qualified men and women holding civil service status in Washington and elsewhere. From their ranks many could be selected, but Mr. Fahey should not be held to abide by such restrictions in every instance, or be handicapped in his selections of efficient assistants by the demands of the spoils system.

He is known as an efficient and honest executive. To accomplish the results he and the country want accomplished, he must be given authority to hire and fire without being subjected to pressure from the politicians; to hire those whom he believes most efficient, and to fire those who prove by their activities to be inefficient. In no other way can this important work be done in a way that will reflect credit upon the Government of the United States. Give him this authority and the responsibility will be his. If he is not given such authority there will be not only a tremendous waste of money, but also a loss of time, which in thousands of instances will result in the loss of homes.

We will have no opportunity to vote to include the Norris amendment in this bill today. However, we will have an opportunity to speak our minds on this question in no uncertain way when the bill comes back to the House from conference, and I hope when it comes that if the House conferees have not yielded to the Senate conferees on this amendment, a majority of this House will demonstrate that there are some things in the Government service which spoilsmen shall not do.

Mr. Speaker, there will be few votes against this measure. Everyone, I think, realizes how important it is to the welfare of many of our good citizens that the measure be adopted without delay. There are many of us who will vote for it hoping that when it comes back from the Senate the conferees will have yielded to the express wish of President Roosevelt that the Norris amendment remain as a part of this measure, and that it may be the measure through which the prayers of distressed home owners everywhere may be answered.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself in the few moments I have to some of the fundamentals of this bill. I want the Members of the House to know that there are at the present time applications for $3,000,000,000 of loans of this type and we have but $2,000,000,000 with which to do this. According to the testimony of Mr. Fahey, the Chairman of the Home Loan Owners' Corporation, approximately 30 percent of the applications will be rejected.

This demonstrates that there is at the present time a greater demand for money and bonds than we have appropriated. There is no question, Mr. Speaker, but that the money and bonds we have now appropriated and provided for will be sufficient to take care of all that can be taken care of in due course between the present time and the opening of the next session of the Congress, but at that time there will undoubtedly be wide-spread demand for further appropriations.

In the present bill we have extended somewhat the powers of the Corporation. We have extended them so that repairs may be made to homes upon which Home Owners' mortgages now exist. We have extended them so that losses of homes which have occurred since 1930 may be included under the bill. We have extended relief to those who are at present in default by reason of unemployment. We have restricted the application of the bill in a very important manner. By subdivision (1) of section 2 of the bill we have provided that hereafter no loans will be made to any person unless that person is in default and unless he is unable to carry or finance his mortgage elsewhere.

An abuse has arisen by which persons who were well able to finance their homes applied to the Corporation and some have obtained loans. This has been done because of the low rate of interest.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Does not the gentleman think that part of the $3,000,000,000 of applications that have been filed come under just that kind of classification, where the application has been made in the hope that the loan may be granted, and where they are able to finance their own loan somewhere else, but because of the fact they would have to pay a higher rate of interest they will not do it.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. The gentleman is absolutely right, and by the provisions of the change to which I have referred, it is now impossible for that abuse to be continued. We have provided that the applicant must be in involuntary default and unable to carry or refund his present mortgage indebtedness.

As to the political controversy in the debate, I have nothing to say but this: I voted for the Norris amendment in the Banking and Currency Committee. With other Democrats, I regretted that I could not go along with my colleagues in the majority, but I think the House should know that there was Democratic support in the committee for the Norris amendment.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BRUNNER].

Mr. BRUNNER. Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that the only point at issue in the consideration of the bill is the question of patronage. I was glad to hear that one Member on the other side of the aisle was willing to admit that to the victor belongs the spoils.

I am also happy that that Member comes from my own State.

New York State has, as its administrator of the Home Loan Act, Vincent Dailey, who is a Democrat and is acting chairman of the State Democratic Committee. I am happy to state that he and his appointees, whom I am also willing to admit are mostly all Democrats, are administering this law in a very efficient manner and with credit to themselves and the new administration.

Mr. Dailey has perfected an organization that is working very smoothly, and I desire to quote some figures to substantiate my statements.

Applications received, up to March 30, 1934, 74,010, of which 53,837 have already been appraised and 31,918 consents to accept bonds have been attained. Seventeen thousand one hundred and sixty-nine loans, aggregating a total of $85,845,000, have been completed.

So I am again happy to remark that we in New York State are glad that a Democrat of the type of Vincent Dailey was appointed as the State director.

I regret that it is impossible, under the procedure, to offer amendments to this bill, because there are many amendments that I would like to offer, some of which are as follows:

Bonds should bear interest at 3½ percent instead of 4 percent.

Mortgages should bear interest at 4½ percent, whether such mortgages be made by bonds or cash.

The cash loans should be increased from 40 to 50 percent.

There should be no limit as to the value of the home upon which mortgages can be placed.

It should be possible for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to loan to the home owner in cash, for repairs, an amount not to exceed 5 percent of the mortgage being placed by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, but in no event should this amount exceed $500.

In cases where a home is owned by a corporation, stock in which is owned exclusively by the occupant, loan should be permissible.

Amount of loan should be increased from $14,000 to $20,000, but in no event over 80 percent of the assessed valuation.

In conclusion, permit me to state that the Home Loan Act has not only relieved the individual home owner and the holder of the mortgages, but it has also in a great measure aided the various cities and municipalities, because when these loans are made it is necessary to pay up the back taxes, and in our city alone over $300,000 have been paid into the treasury of the city of New York for back taxes, and it is estimated that over $5,000,000 will be paid into the same fund for back taxes and assessments before another year passes by.

In my own district, the second of New York, over 15,000 home owners have made applications for these loans and most of those would have lost their homes in which they had their life's savings invested were it not for this act.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the chairman of the committee with reference to delinquent taxes on homesteads, and, knowing the gentleman's familiarity with the legislation and the proposed amendment, I want to pursue my inquiry. The gentleman will recall my reference to tax delinquencies in two cities. That is what I am concerned about. I want to ask his opinion on the administration of the law, particularly with reference to delinquencies and the interpretation of the Home Loan Corporation as to when delinquent taxes become distress within the meaning of the law.

Mr. STEAGALL. That inquiry goes to the extent of my asking the gentleman a question. My own opinion is that it is when a home owner is in danger of losing his home through forced collection of taxes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks by inserting two telegrams in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

RACINE, WIS.

Congressman G. W. BLANCHARD,
Washington, D.C.:

1933, $1,294,699.40; 1932, $940,327.39; 1931, $283,062.13. These amounts are as of December 31, 1933. Estimated percentage of delinquent taxes on homesteads, 60 percent.

MARTIN CHRISTENSEN.

Hon. G. W. BLANCHARD,
Congressman:

Figures relative to delinquent taxes owed on homesteads in city of Racine are as follows, approximately: 1930, $50,000; 1931, $445,000; 1932, $469,000. Exact figures can be obtained by us if you so wish.

WM. PAYNE,
Wisconsin Home Owners Racine Unit.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The figures for the city of Kenosha, Wis., show correspondingly high increases over the same period of years. And this same condition prevails in municipalities throughout the entire country. The situation is appalling. The individual home owners who through unfortunate circumstances are unable to pay their taxes are not the only ones concerned. Every person in these cities and villages is affected. In addition to that, the finances of the governmental unit are vitally affected. The interpretation of the law must be liberal enough to extend relief for these people so that this money may be made available for the ordinary and extraordinary expenses cities and villages are called upon to meet. The relief load is terrific, and the burden is aggravated because of delinquent taxes. Until a method of meeting the delinquent-tax problem is adopted we cannot expect municipalities to continue to carry the load. If the present law and the regulations are insufficient to meet the situation, it is my purpose to introduce a bill to provide definitely for the financing of these tax obligations. Complete and adequate relief to the home owners cannot be extended until this problem is met.

The Home Owners' Loan law has saved thousands of homes. The liberalizing amendments now under consideration will correct some very apparent defects in the law. Despite the fact that this bill is not open to an amendment which I should like to offer to clearly set forth my ideas on financing for delinquent taxes, I do not hesitate to give it my unqualified endorsement.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] such time as he may require.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there exists between the House and the Senate a splendid feeling of friendliness and good will. The Senate never interferes with any privileges or prerogatives of the House, and the House never interferes with any privileges or prerogatives of the Senate. Each body minds its own business. Hence it is natural that the House and Senate get along well together.

If the House were to attempt to take away from the Senate the right of Senators to name district judges, or district attorneys, or collectors of internal revenue, or United States marshals, or any of the other officials in States which for so many years have always been named by Senators, the Senate would resent it, and trouble would arise immediately between the two Houses.

And on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, if the Senate were to attempt to take away from the House the right of Congressmen to name the few county and district officials in their districts that Congressmen now name, the House would resent it, and there would be trouble between the two Houses.

What is known as the Norris amendment relating to the bill now before us, Mr. Speaker, must have been hurriedly proposed, and passed without being seriously considered, because if the Senate had realized that it did not in any way affect any privilege or prerogative of any Senator, but affected only the privilege and prerogative of Congressmen and that nothing was to be taken away from Senators, but everything was to be taken away from Congressmen, neither the author of such amendment nor any other Senator would have stooped in giving affront to the House.

Realizing full well all of the above, Mr. Speaker, our able, courteous, and most efficient Chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. STEAGALL] and his committee properly and promptly struck the said Norris amendment out of this bill, because under no circumstances could such an amendment pass this House. It would have taken away from the 311 Democratic Members of this House the privilege they now enjoy of naming the county appraisers and attorneys in their respective districts for this home-loan organization which Congress created and has caused to function.

Our Republican colleagues in this House are good sports. They realize that appointments are made by members of the dominant party in power. They take their medicine bravely when they are in the minority. They may hope for better times, but they are not envious. They do not covet that which their colleagues won through elections. They would fight to preserve the prerogatives of House Members. While they are out just now, and we Democrats are in, they will be just as jealous in protecting our rights as we Democrats would be in protecting their rights were our positions reversed in the House.

I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that when the full significance of the Norris amendment is brought to the attention of the Senate, both its author and the Senate will unanimously approve the action of the House in striking it from the bill.

The matter arose, Mr. Speaker, in this way: Some of the State managers conceived the idea that they would like to do all of the appointing themselves. Naturally, they have many friends and acquaintances to whom they would like to give jobs. These State managers would much prefer to have all of these jobs held by their own personal friends than by deserving citizens selected by Congressmen. And they raised this camouflaged sham cry of "taking the jobs out of politics."

Their position is, that if we will allow them to appoint their personal friends, there will not be any politics in it. There will be politics in it only when Congressmen do the appointing, according to their notion. This howl of "politics" has come from State managers. They do not seem to realize that politics caused them to have the jobs they hold. They do not seem to realize that just as they received jobs through politics, they can lose such jobs through politics. And if they raise any more howls, I will be in favor of promptly removing every last mother's son of them.

For the 19 appraisers and the 19 attorneys in my 19 counties, I have specially hand picked and carefully selected 38 of the finest men in my district. They are all men of strict honor and integrity. They are all men of business experience and high intelligence. All of them stand high in their home city and county. All of them have the respect, confidence, and esteem of their neighbors. All of them will favorably compare and match up with State Manager James Shaw in education, honor, integrity, ability, business experience and qualifications, dependability, and loyalty to our administration and to this Government. And I would rather see Jim Shaw lose his job a dozen times, than any one of the 38, for they are my close friends, and I will fight for any one of them.

If these State managers will attend to their own business and will remember that they were created by Congress and that if they attempt to double-cross any Congressman it will not be a very hard matter for Congress to uncreate them, they will render better service and be more valuable to the Government.

In providing through this bill for these home loan bonds to be guaranteed by the Government we are now doing what I insisted should be done when the act was first passed. And if we had guaranteed these bonds in the beginning, we would have saved many homes for worthy families which they have lost simply because those holding mortgages against their homes would not accept these bonds in payment. The loss of so many homes has been most distressing. I feel gratified, indeed, to realize that the action we are now taking in passing this bill that will guarantee these bonds will save thousands of homes all over the United States. It is going to accomplish much toward our economic recovery. Every head of a family who is about to lose his home is frantic and desperate. Realization that it is his Government that saves his home for him and stops foreclosure and sheriff's sales and gives him an opportunity to pay it out creates renewed loyalty and love of country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time, and ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to incorporate later some excerpts I want to put in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, as has been stated, this bill, S. 2999, is designed to expedite relief through the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation to that worthy class of our citizens who are financially in distress with respect to the ownership of their homes. It is further designed to aid in a general way home financing by financial encouragement on the part of the Government to local thrift and savings institutions which have against great odds been able to function throughout this depression. It also provides means of improving homes, which in turn calls for the employment of labor. It is, of course, purely an emergency measure and should not be depended upon to solve all home-mortgage problems. Since this legislation involves the utterly sacred responsibility of dealing with the maintenance of home ownership, it is necessary that every possible means of speeding its operations be employed. In my opinion it should also be entirely removed from the field of politics, for one man's home is on the average as sacred and essential as another man's. But for the parliamentary situation I would propose and support the Norris amendment. I am hopeful that it will be agreed to in conference. Under the present management of the Corporation I am convinced that the one grand goal ahead is to carry out as fairly and expeditiously as possible the true purpose of this bill. Those who are familiar with what has taken place under the leadership of Mr. Fahey, the present chairman, are obliged to confirm this judgment.

The present home-financing program of the Federal Government is characterized by two aims: First, that of relief as an immediate emergency measure; and, secondly, a long-time, permanent, stable home-financing system. The permanent features in the long run should and no doubt will be the more important. The relief aims embodied in the Home Owners' Loan Act may be justified from a national paternalistic point of view when one looks into the history and background of the formation of our country. I need not tell you of the great and important part which the family has played in our democratic institutions, nor need I dwell upon the home as one of the basic necessities of the family. Were there no homes, there could be no government, and the first duty of any government is to use every reasonable and practicable means within its power to protect the honest and worthy home owner. Continuous foreclosures and ouster proceedings will certainly continue to breed unrest and discontent and militate more effectively against recovery and reconstruction of our social and economic system than any other single factor.

America's record for home ownership is outstanding. The land hunger which caused many people to migrate to America and build up this country to its present position of dominance has been one of the motivating impulses in our development. The home idea, not alone in its sentimental aspect, but in the family unit, has played a very real part in our whole social program, and it has been particularly associated with the political idea of democracy. With this background it is only natural that when the foundation stone of our country is threatened sentiment should be quickly crystallized in the passage of laws to assist individuals to keep their homes. Such, briefly, was the social background of home ownership prior to 1933.

The economic background which brought the necessity for Government relief was characterized by foreclosures, many of which were due to a lack of social responsibility on the part of creditor institutions, resulting first from what has been known as the depression, and, second, from the unsound, unstable, home-mortgage system built up during the decade from 1920 to 1930, a mortgage system which was designed and conceived for the primary purpose of profit, and which was not as a whole built to ride through a depression. In many instances exorbitant interest rates and unconscionable brokerage fees have made it almost impossible for the wage earner and small-salaried business man to get out from under the yoke of the mortgage. The past 4 years have shown us the glaring injustices and weaknesses of this mortgage system, and both the emergency and permanent programs have embodied in them some of the proper essentials for a sound system based upon this experience. Continued effort on the part of the Government to provide an adequate and sound system through financial encouragement and assistance is desirable and imperative.

May I divert here, by way of emphasis, to state that the home-loan bank system, with a small capitalization of only $125,000,000, has outstanding today in loans an amount in excess of the Federal Reserve System with assets of over seven and one-half billion dollars. Is not that a deplorable commentary to reflect upon?

The Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 provided for emergency relief for home owners in distress. We are not proud of the work the Corporation has done thus far. There have been many abuses of the spirit, and probably of the letter, of this piece of legislation, and it is high time that it be so amended that the people who are entitled to the benefits of relief are not discriminated against by allowing their more economically fortunate brethren to chisel in and take away the relief which Congress in its wisdom provided for the economically unfortunate. The Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board stated to the committee during the hearings on the bill now before us that half the folks who have obtained relief were not entitled to it.

After all, we have at the present time a home-mortgage debt of $21,000,000,000, the largest single block of private or corporate indebtedness in this country. It is folly to think that with the $2,000,000,000 available under the Home Owners' Loan Act all who wish to refinance with a Government agency should be able to do so. In fact, when one considers that during the years 1926 to 1929 building-and-loan associations alone loaned on the average of about $2,000,000,000 per year, and that there were other private home-financing institutions lending enormous sums at the same time, it is obvious that private capital will always be the chief basis for a permanent system of financing home ownership. Certain sections of the present bill, as I will indicate later, will assist in developing sound and economical private sources of funds, thus leading to stability in the long-time aspects of home-ownership credit.

The two major problems in home ownership are: (1) The proper credit and service for existing homes including the protection of savings, and (2) the employment and housing phases embodied in the encouragement of new construction. The present bill is pointed toward the first problem and merely touches on the employment aspect. Probably later legislation will deal more particularly with that phase. Increased employment, wherever such employment can render a constructive service, is of course to be encouraged in every possible way. However, programs designed to relieve employment must be examined somewhat critically to see that they are constructive rather than destructive, especially if they directly affect the interests of our wage-earning class.

It is, therefore, appropriate to point out that practically all of the home financing in the future, as well as in the past, must be made available through the regular savings of a large number of people of small means. These savings are placed in their local cooperative institutions and in turn reloaned to their neighbors.

It is as important that the savings of these people be protected and the earnings on those savings be adequate, as it is for their neighbors to be protected in their home-financing programs. We should do all we can to encourage these people to continue to save so that their neighbors will continue to have the funds through which they can own their homes. In fact, many of our present home owners have had to save a long time before they were able to finance their own home ownership. Many of them are still treading this path of savings at the present time, and their future home ownership will depend to a great extent upon the safety of their savings. These humble wage earners who are laying aside a part of their salaries each week or month must be assured a sufficient return to encourage them to continue saving.

I am not concerned about efforts to limit the return on capital exacted by our big bankers and prominent financial interests. I know that in any event they will manage to take care of themselves. I am, however, convinced that caution should be used in hammering down the possibilities of earnings of the wage-earning saver who intrusts his money to his local home-financing institution, and I maintain that we should resist efforts to place that wage earner's government in competition with him, save in exceptional circumstances such as we have witnessed for the past 3 years, so that the return which he deserves on his savings is not lowered to a discouraging point. It is part of our duty to see that funds are supplied to the home owners of the Nation at equitable rates, yea, the best rates consistent with good social policy and sound business methods; but at the same time we must not lose sight of the justice due to the small saver who must continue to furnish the bulk of the funds for home ownership.

It is implicit, therefore, that in a sound mortgage program coupled with a relief program we must not lose sight of the fact that the present ills arising from mismanagement of the relief aspect may discriminate against the savers.

The employment phase, about which a great deal of comment has been heard in the past, is not developed in this bill.

Before there will be any new construction, it will be necessary for people to feel secure in their ability to build and own their own homes. In a great number of sections of the country there is little or no need for the construction of new homes. All of us know that legislation of a hypodermic or one-shot variety will not greatly assist employment. Unless necessity for such employment arises from a legitimate type of borrowing and a real demand for houses, we are apt to find an oversupply which cannot be absorbed by those who have the ability to pay for them. Such building will then tend toward greater chaos in the home-mortgage financing situation rather than to a betterment.

The original Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 was designed with the assistance of able minds in lengthy conferences with many of our leading home-financing authorities, including Morton Bodfish, former member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and today executive director of the United States Building and Loan League. It was expected that the job of furnishing relief to home owners in distress would be done in 6 months. It has been said, however, that one of the important reasons why this prediction was not fulfilled was the fact that the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation were not guaranteed. This has had its hurtful influence, but in that connection I should like to point out that even before there were any rumors or proposals of the guarantee of the bonds there were 600,000 consents to take the bonds on file. Making those loans would have practically exhausted the lending capacity of the Corporation, except that from performance to date it can safely be said that half of them were not eligible under the intent of the legislation.

Failure of this refinancing program resulted largely from two factors; first, the lack of efficiency in administration, and, second, the inability of those who were intrusted with the relief duties to take care of people in distress. On the contrary, many managers and employees of the Corporation would not consider the applications of those who were unable to pay at the present time and who, therefore, clearly qualified under the distress provisions of the act. They further discouraged the completion of refinancing with the Corporation by basing appraisals on forced markets rather than long-term normal values. It can help little, however, at this hour to parade the way its affairs have been conducted in many branch offices throughout the country. Even so, I have been interested to note that no little of the clamor against the operations of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation has come from those people who merely wanted a mortgage from the Government and who did not qualify under the distress aspect of the relief work.

Taking up the various sections of the bill in order, let us see just how they contribute to both the emergency and the permanent aspects of our home-mortgage problem.

Section 1: The Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended so that all Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds after the passage of this bill would be guaranteed both as to principal and interest, with a maturity of 18 years. For obvious reasons this is proper and wise. Both the corporation and the Secretary of the Treasury may buy and sell these bonds in the open market, or the Secretary of the Treasury may, as a public-debt transaction, purchase the bonds from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The interest rate on these bonds may not exceed 4 percent, and they will probably be sold at or near Government bond interest rates. Additional devices are provided to make the bonds more marketable. The old bonds, or commitments for these bonds, are not guaranteed, but may be exchanged for the new bonds within 12 months after the amendment takes effect. The interest rates on the bonds exchanged will be reduced probably to the same rate as that of the new bonds.

Section 2: Paragraph L, inserted in the original act as an amendment, helps to separate the sheep from the goats. This section is particularly important in preventing borrowers from defaulting on their loans so that they may apply for a Home Owners' Loan Corporation mortgage. It states specifically that the borrower whose default dates from June 13, 1933, must prove that such default is due to unemployment or economic conditions or misfortune beyond his control before he can hope to have his application examined by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Paragraph M has a twofold purpose in that it will assist unemployment and at the same time make the mortgages of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation more secure. It allows the Corporation to advance money to its own mortgagors for purposes of rehabilitation, modernization, rebuilding, and enlargement of the homes financed. Mortgages on ramshackle homes are not the best type of security. By allowing borrowers to thus make their homes more presentable a greater incentive to repay will be developed and at the same time the labor employed will be financed in a sound manner. The materials sold as a result of this financing will also come from an effective and sound demand. The Corporation will be amply secured for these new advances.

Section 3: An amendment to section 4 (d) of the original act eliminates one opportunity for chiseling by the unscrupulous. It still permits the Corporation to extend leniency to those who deserve it, especially during this aftermath of the depression, but it closes one loophole whereby those who were able to pay their debts to their Government as they did to anyone else, are required to do so on the extremely favorable terms which this legislation provides. After this amendment there will be no opportunity for a free ride for those who are perfectly capable of making their payments.

Section 4: Section 4 (g) of the Home Owners' Loan Act of 1933 is amended so that unfortunate home owners who lost their homes as far back as January 1930 through foreclosure and surrender of possession, may be given relief by the Corporation. The original act was well conceived in this connection but did not go back far enough, because the wave of foreclosures and lost homes began in January 1930. After this amendment there will be no discrimination against those home owners who lost their homes early in the depression as compared with those who had the same misfortune later on.

Section 5: Section 5 assists in spreading the idea of the local and cooperative community service institutions which have been of such great importance in home financing for the past hundred years. These institutions organized under the Federal Government's charter are similar to the New England mutual savings banks and our North Carolina building-and-loan associations. At this time there have been already chartered some 300 of the Federal savings-and-loan associations, and this section is intended to help match the money put up by local capital. This will put the Federal-chartered institutions in a better position to take care of home financing and will give local citizens an even greater incentive to invest in home financing. This is not a relief measure but one which will be of great assistance to a permanent, stable, home-financing mortgage system.

At the beginning of the depression there were some $21,000,000,000 in home mortgages. The largest single source of this type of financing was the local cooperative building-and-loan association with its total of around $8,000,000,000. The other billions came from commercial banks, insurance companies, guaranty-mortgage companies, and private investors. Private investors will probably be back in the field, but they were never important factors as compared with institutional sources, and for a long time their operations are going to be of minor importance. In any event, the market for mortgage money here has always been pretty disorganized and costs have been high.

It is safe to say that commercial banks are definitely out of the home-financing picture and cannot be relied upon in the future. Those who went into it excessively are even no longer in the banking business, and the banks that are left, according to evidence accumulating on every side, are not going to make the required type of long-time home mortgages. They are out of the mortgage business.

The least said about guaranty-mortgage companies the better. It will be years before even the debris of this type of financing is cleaned up, and we can safely say that there will be no more home financing available from this source.

Insurance companies may be back in the field again, but evidence seems to point to the fact that they will be slow in entering it, and when they do come back their policies are going to be so extremely conservative that they will be of little assistance to the ordinary citizen who wishes to purchase his home and pay off his mortgage largely from his weekly or monthly salary. We are brought inevitably to the conclusion that the sole source of an important amount of home-mortgage funds which has continued right through the depression is the local cooperative building-and-loan association. We are going to depend on those institutions gathering in the savings of the community and relending them in that same community to the neighbors of the savers for a far greater portion of the home-financing credit hereafter. It behooves us, therefore, to give every encouragement to the further development of this source of funds. An advance of the Government through these associations is a little bit more than priming the pump. It is an acceleration of a stream that has continued to flow, but which must be enlarged, and the unique thing about this proposal is that the money so used is certain to be paid back with adequate return to the Government.

Paragraph (k) will permit any building-and-loan association or member of a Federal home-loan bank to be employed as a fiscal agent of the Government. This is desirable from every point of view, and it may be that it will be found advantageous to permit these institutions to assist in collecting the loans of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Possibly experience will dictate that the liquidating operations of the Corporation can be carried out more economically in this way than any other, especially since they reach into practically every community where the Corporation operates, and it would therefore maintain excellent contact with its borrowers.

Section 6: This section provides for the method of conversion of savings, building-and-loan associations operating under a State charter to a Federal charter. In many localities it has been felt that there would be an advantage in coming under Federal supervision because of the public-confidence features of that type of supervision. This does not change the essential operations of these institutions, and conversion is purely voluntary, the decision to be based on which type can best serve the community.

Section 7 amends the eighteenth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act by including Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds and Federal home-loan bank bonds as eligible security for 15-day loans to member banks according to the terms of this section. This should assist in relieving the greatest unemployment problem in the country by helping to put to work the enormous mass of sterile capital in the commercial banks through tapping it for the above-mentioned bonds.

Section 7 (b) amends section 14 (b) of the Federal Reserve Act to insure further marketability of these bonds by making them eligible for open-market operations of the Federal Reserve.

Section 8 allows the Federal Reserve banks to act as depositaries, custodians, and fiscal agents for the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Section 9 authorizes the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, through the issuance of its bonds, to purchase the bonds or debentures of the Federal home-loan banks. The amount is limited to $50,000,000, but in my opinion it ought to be $150,000,000. The funds will be used by the Federal home-loan bank system in increasing the total amount of credit available on a sound, economical basis to home financing in the United States. The further development of this reserve system for home-ownership credit is an essential part of the long-time program.

Section 10: This section makes eligible as security for advances from the home-loan bank system home mortgages which may be perfectly sound but which, due to a technicality in the original Home Loan Bank Act were interpreted to be ineligible.

Section 11: This increases the amount of money which is available for encouraging local thrift and local home financing and the development of Federal savings-and-loan associations or similar associations organized under local laws. It will assist materially in this phase of the program.

Section 12: This section provides appropriate punishment for racketeers who would defraud would-be borrowers from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation by charging fees to secure advances from this governmental agency. Evidence has accumulated that there has been a substantial amount of this type of racketeering, and the amendment strengthens a similar section in the original act.

Section 13 provides that payments upon principal of loans made by the Corporation be applied to the retirement of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds. It helps to protect the Government in its guaranty of these bonds by reducing the amount outstanding as payments on loans are received.

Section 14: This section amends the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation Act in harmony with the amendments of the Home Owners' Loan Act by specifying that the amount of bonds issued will not be in excess of the assets of the Corporation, including the assets to be obtained from the proceeds of the bonds.

Section 15 is the usual separability provision.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWICK].

Mr. SWICK. Mr. Speaker, and ladies and gentlemen of the House, I am glad the Committee on Banking and Currency has seen fit to bring out this bill, S. 2999, which, among other provisions, guarantees the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. I feel this will go a long way toward the saving of homes.

Mr. Speaker, with the discontinuance of the Civil Works Administration and the inauguration of its successor, the Relief Works Division, it seems advisable to consider the lessons learned from the experience of those who have been in direct contact with the C.W.A., such as the local administrators, foremen, and those who were employed on the projects.

For the purpose of analysis, I am pleased to select Lawrence County, Pa., one of the three counties in my district, having a population of less than 100,000 people. L. B. Round, the C.W.A. administrator and director of the Civil Works program, has made a very enlightening report of the Civil Works program in that county at the conclusion of the same. He also makes some very pointed comments on the policies now effective under the R.W.D. His statement concerning the C.W.A. is as follows:

THE FINALE OF THE C.W.A.

The Civil Works Administration is now definitely ended. It may not have been perfect, but it is the belief of many that, out of all the experiments we have tried, it will prove to have been one of the most lasting in its benefits.

The number of persons on relief rolls or unemployed in this county last fall was approximately 12,000. Of this number a maximum of 3,600 were put to work. This resulted in wage earnings for the period totaling nearly $600,000.

In the city of New Castle alone $300,000 has been paid. This money has been paid for useful work.

The repair, construction, and reconstruction of public buildings and roads, while expedient and of general benefit to the taxpayer, has never, in the judgment of your administrator, been the prime purpose of the C.W.A. Therefore, we have confined the major portion of our effort to the development of public parks, playgrounds, and recreational facilities, the elimination of traffic and life hazards, flood control, soil erosion, and the development of school grounds along esthetic and cultural lines.

While the benefit of this work might not be presently apparent the benefit to all our citizens is, nevertheless, lasting. A few weeks' more work and it will not be necessary for our people to leave town in order to enjoy the esthetic, cultural, and healthful recreation offered in a well-planned park system.

It should never be forgotten that these works were performed during the rigors of one of the most severe winters ever experienced in this locality. As favorable conditions make possible an inspection of these projects we feel sure you will agree with us that the work must ever stand as a monument to the courage and fortitude of the workers who wrought them.

The job of administrator has not only proved to be an opportunity for service but a wonderful experience, too.

We have not only tried but we have applied to the task every faculty at our command, even to the limit of our physical endurance. Mistakes have been made, undoubtedly, but back of every thought and deed has been the ideal of service to our less fortunate brethren.

We have played no favorites; there has been no personal preference; politics has in no way been permitted to interfere. No personal advantage has accrued to us in any way, shape, or form. The salary was stated at $1 per year and we have paid our own expenses. Our critics to the contrary notwithstanding.

We are grateful for the confidence imposed in us; whether we have been faithful to our trust let the record speak for itself.

The records (full and complete) of our office are open to any citizen who desires to prove otherwise. And now—

FINIS LA GUERRE

There is born instead the work division of the S.E.R.B.

An experiment of such illogical extreme as to merit the thoughtful consideration of every citizen.

Are we to develop a nation of paupers? Most emphatically no, and yet carried to its extreme the new plan offers no other conjecture.

After outlining the set-up of the works division, Mr. Round makes the following personal comment:

There, my friends, is the new plan.

It places a premium on the fecundity of the human race and compels the complete destruction of individual morale before a helping hand can be given.

The one who is on relief is at least being fed. That one has gone through all the gamut of human emotions until there are no other depths to be explored.

The individual or family who by personal initiative and resourcefulness and the assistance of family or friends have so far weathered the storm have, under the new program, little or no opportunity to secure paid work except by industrial recovery or the absolute and complete break-down of body and of spirit.

It is this latter class who should be helped by using the work project in the light of a human rehabilitation program, and with the active cooperation of industrial employers through the replacement office men can be fitted through the work program to do and hold industrial jobs.

As the workers are transferred by the placement office into industry, their places can be filled from lower ranks until, by the process of development, study, and training, all our employables are restored to gainful occupations.

Because of our feeling of responsibility to those whom we have worked with during this winter, we shall continue as work director only through this transitory period, and the workers may feel assured that to every problem we will apply the most humane judgment.

We cannot permanently permit our sense of social justice to be so violently outraged by this social travesty.

Fellow citizens, this is your problem and the individual problem of every governmental taxpayer. Think.

It may be interesting to note also that of the 3,150 workers on the rolls at the close of the C.W.A. activities, 1,840 will be retained under the R.W.D.; the others will in most instances be forced back on the local relief rolls.

The workers of the C.W.A. have organized for the purpose of protesting the drastic curtailment of Federal relief under the temporary leadership of a man who served his city as mayor and a member of council, and who is a veteran of the Spanish-American War, who, in addressing the former C.W.A. workers, said that the workers and those unemployed who were on the lists but had not been called had a real grievance:

It is up to you men to band yourselves together and make your protests known in no uncertain manner. This calls for concerted action, for intelligent action, but not for radical action. If we can get the rest of the State to go along with the idea, the politicians in Washington will listen to our cause.

Mr. Speaker, we are confronted with a peculiar situation. The present administration, through the Administrator of Federal Relief, Mr. Hopkins, declares:

We intend to see that every person in the United States who needs relief gets it.

And at the same time we find a very marked curtailment in the number of people receiving work relief, while those who have been charged with the administration of relief work doubt the wisdom of the new system.

Since the Federal Government has, through this administration, adopted the policy of work relief, and men have been led to expect a continuance of that policy, I believe this Congress should insist on the immediate expansion of public works by necessary appropriations in order that such a rehabilitation program as suggested by Mr. Round might be carried out.

Certainly we should not stand idly by until our people become totally pauperized before extending them aid. I realize the immensity of the task, but we are committed to it and should not shirk the responsibility of preventing the complete break-down of public morale. If this is not done, recovery will be seriously hampered. [Applause.]

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Three hundred and forty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

BONDS OF THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN CORPORATION

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN].

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is pleasing to me to see the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] in the chair. The gentleman from New York, like myself, has advocated early consideration of this bill. Yesterday I heard him declare to the leaders that if the bill was not called up today he would petition the House for immediate consideration. Every day this bill was delayed brought sorrow to many homes. When the President signs this bill sleepless nights will end for thousands of fathers and mothers. They know it means they will not be turned out of the place they called "home."

Mr. Speaker, I have long waited for the opportunity to vote for this bill guaranteeing the Home Loan bonds.

When the original bill was pending I advocated guaranteeing the bonds. Last year I again advocated guaranteeing the bonds.

There is no telling how many people have lost their homes because the bonds are not guaranteed.

This bill is going to pass. There is no doubt of that. I rise today to say that the success of this law is going to depend upon its administration. We all know that there is practically no market today for real estate. If the administrators will be liberal in their appraisals, the people of the country will save their homes. If they are not liberal, the people are going to continue to lose their homes, even if the bonds are guaranteed. I hope that those administering the act will take into consideration that it is the intent of Congress to save the homes for the people of the country from foreclosure. That is the reason that we are passing this bill today. I want the members of the Board to do the job as Congress wants it done. Let them not cause some unfortunate to lose his or her home for a few hundred dollars. Congress does not want that. Congress expects the Board to be liberal.

If the Board will take this view into consideration, it will be liberal in their appraisal. Nobody can say that because there is no real-estate market, a house that may be appraised today at $6,000 is not actually worth $9,000 or $10,000. If the Home Loan officials are going to hold down the appraisals to the market as of today, what we are doing here is not going to be beneficial to the people who find themselves in financial distress through no fault of their own; people who are unable to meet their obligations.

I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for allowing me to make this brief statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, some disappointment has been expressed here today and some fear that this bill does not go far enough to provide relief to the dire needs of the country because of the fact that applications for more than $3,000,000,000 in loans have been filed. I call attention to the fact, however, that when an application is filed for a loan it usually gives the balance due under the mortgage plus the accrued interest plus the taxes, or the unpaid balance under a land contract. In most cases that often represents more than the value of the property, and we all know that the Government appraisal would not go far enough to pay that in full, and in many cases it would not be just or sound business if it did.

The present bill will go far toward furnishing deserving relief for the volume of applications now filed and save to many of the American people their homes, the most sacred thing they have. Keep the American citizen in his own home and he will remain true to American principles and the American form of government.

I shall support this bill because it is of vital importance to the people of my district and my State. I shall support it for the further reason that it will permit loans to be made to many people in my district who have been unable to obtain loans under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation bill passed in 1933, for the reason that it did not guarantee the payment of the principal of the bonds issued under that act.

I know of many cases which came to my attention where people were unable to obtain relief under that act for the very reason that the mortgagees holding the mortgages on the homes were unwilling and refused to accept the bonds because the principal was not guaranteed by the Government. I do not say this in criticism of those who refused to take the bonds, because an uncertainty existed as to their value. We all know that at one time they were quoted at less than 85 cents on the dollar, and no one knew or could foretell but that they might go as low as 50 cents on the dollar. That is the situation existing under the act of 1933.

This bill removes that objection, and many people throughout the country will now be able to secure deserving loans and thereby save their homes for themselves and their children.

A man's home is his castle. There he is secure from intrusion, and he has a right to defend it even to the taking of life. Happy that day when every American can be in an American home unencumbered.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield one quarter of a minute to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BEEDY].

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, on the 19th of May 1856 Abraham Lincoln said, "In great emergency moderation is generally safer than radicalism." Many of us who today shoulder the responsibilities of public office view with alarm the radical changes worked in our Government in the last 13 months. I believe that this country would be more prosperous today if greater moderation had marked the recent legislative program.

In the light of this admonition of Lincoln's and in the brief time at my command, I purpose to discuss some facts which, in the interest of the common good, I believe should be more generally understood.

Certain limitations upon Executive power were written into our Constitution for the purpose of safeguarding the rights of the whole people. Under the Constitution, it is not only the right but the duty of the people's representatives to deliberate upon and pass our laws. Yet, in the hysteria of recent days, this solemn right, this obligation, has been ignored. Law after law, drafted by a group of the President's advisers, has been sent to the Capitol with orders that they be passed without amendment and without discussion. This procedure continued for months under the plea of emergency.

Legislation still continues to be rushed through the Congress. No longer, however, are the changes rung upon the emergency for smothering the legislative branch. Measures are drafted at the White House and sent to the Capitol with orders for their immediate passage, but deliberation upon them is now dispensed with under the plea of loyalty to the administration.

During the special session of Congress in 1933 the representatives of the people were anxious to support the administration, hoping that the extraordinary course pursued might bring relief and believing that straightway return to normal Government under the Constitution would ensue. With the assembling of the Seventy-third Congress in regular session, however, the President informed us that he planned to build a new social order upon the ruins of the past. Then it was that we began to understand the far-reaching strides already made with the cooperation of a yielding Congress toward a permanent change in the whole scheme of American Government.

Today the purpose of the administration is well understood in Washington, at least. The will of the legislative branch is to be disregarded. A central government is to be set up with unlimited powers in the executive. To this end, and contrary to the pledge in the last Democratic platform to abolish useless commissions and offices, to consolidate departments and bureaus, and to eliminate extravagance, the Executive Department has been reinforced by 37 additional bureaus. To these bureaus power has been given to control the farm, the shop, the factory, and to order the daily life of nearly every citizen. For the mere overhead expense of these bureaus the American people must pay an additional $60,000,000 each year. All this procedure not only contradicts the American ideal of the broadest rights for each citizen, but it is by no means conducive to economy in government.

We are now frankly told by the administration that a bloodless revolution is being accomplished. In its furtherance, an emergency expenditure of approximately $12,000,000,000 has been authorized. The borrowing capacity of the Treasury is severely taxed; the American dollar no longer has any assured value; the Secretary of the Treasury frankly states that its policy is purely experimental and subject to change at any time. This situation, I submit, is not conducive to general confidence or business stability.

I believe that not one in a thousand of the average run of people understands just what has been done with his Government since March 4, 1933. Bewildered and discouraged, the average citizen has thought his only recourse was to follow the administration. In a spirit of patriotic cooperation, people have urged their Representatives to give unqualified support and to yield at every point. All this was because of the emergency. For 13 long and distressing months this situation has continued. Only recently was it known even in Washington that the aim of the present administration was to make its temporary measures permanent.

It is undoubtedly true that the small group of college professors and lawyers, sometimes referred to as the "brain trust", knew the ultimate purpose of this administration from the outset. At least one member of the President's Cabinet sensed the main objective from the beginning. These advisers of the President, if approached individually, will, I believe, frankly acknowledge that they are not altogether in sympathy with the American system of Government. It is these men who have drawn the laws and mapped the course of the present administration. We believe that responsibility for the creation of and reliance upon this group should be placed where it belongs, namely, upon the President himself.

If our people desire their laws to be drafted by a small group of men in sympathy with alien institutions, it is their right. If, on the other hand, they wish their duly elected representatives to write their laws, the Constitution as it stands gives them that right. In all events, if the Constitution is to be abandoned, if the American system is to be changed, it should be by solemn vote of the people themselves. It is their Constitution. They and they alone may change it or authorize its disregard. As Washington has said—

> The very basis of our political system is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the Constitution which at any time exists till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is scarcely obligatory upon all.

It would seem that the time is at hand when we should resist further encroachments upon common right. The present course, if continued without interruption, can culminate in but one result—absolutism in the White House. This may be what the people want. If they want it, I repeat, it is their right to have it. But, if I understand anything of the spirit of our people, they will have none of it as a permanent policy.

My memory reverts to a time when the colonists issued their Declaration of Independence. It was their protest against usurped power. Some of its phases fit with nicety into the present situation. It asserts that—

> The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated * * * usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these States.

The fathers then enumerated 26 abuses. Among them is a complaint against the king, his ministry, and advisers—

> For suspending our legislatures and declaring themselves vested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

And, finally, it was declared—

> When a long line of * * * usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them (the people) under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government and to provide new guarantees for their future security.

It is the best thought of many who value their liberties under our American system that the time is at hand when we should all face our duty squarely and see to it that constitutional government is again respected and practiced.

Permit me to cite a concrete example of lawmaking in Washington today. There are acknowledged abuses in the sale of securities on the New York Stock Exchange. They should be remedied by Federal law. Seizing upon this situation, three of the advisers in the executive department wrote the so-called "National Securities Exchange Act." Through it they have voiced their point of view that business should be under the strict control of an all-powerful central government. Therefore, in addition to dealing with the sale of securities on the exchange, they have written into the bill provisions compelling the strictest business accounting to the Federal Government.

I am reliably informed that the President himself had no opportunity to read this bill until it had been before the Congress a month. I predict that when it is finally reported to the House there will be no opportunity for the people to amend it through their Representatives. I predict further that very limited, if any, discussion of its provisions will be permitted. The bill will be whipped through the Congress and in this hasty un-American fashion, without deliberation, we shall have made another step towards autocratic control of business by government.

Those of the Democratic Party in accord with the new-deal program are necessarily in disagreement with the great Jefferson. He, of all men, believed in zealously guarding the rights of the people. To this end he insisted that that government is best which governs least.

Last Monday was the anniversary of the birth of Thomas Jefferson. For years his birthday has been widely observed at innumerable banquet tables by unnumbered hosts of loyal Democrats. But on Monday the banquet halls were silent. Democrats had no word of praise for the author of the Declaration and the founder of their party. His fame was unacclaimed; his virtues were unsung. "O Judgment, thou art fled to brutish beasts." Now lies the noble Jefferson upon the shelf and none so poor as do him reverence. Clearly, there has been a radical departure from the tenets of Democratic faith. The administration is leading us into new fields and the great mass of Jeffersonian Democrats follow submissively—yes, blindly.

There are many patriotic and thoughtful persons in this Nation who still believe that the people should have something to say about the laws under which they are to live. There are yet many of us who believe in the least possible interference with business by government. We do not blink at the fact that there is much of dishonesty in the market place, but nevertheless we contend that somewhere along the line you must trust the average citizen. We cannot legislate humankind into honest practices. We cannot regiment society into a perfect state. The more we undertake to hedge business about with Government restrictions, the further removed will be the day of business recovery. And business recovery is the sine qua non of the hour.

It is already clear that we cannot borrow ourselves into business recovery. When the billions already borrowed have been spent, underlying business conditions are the same. Return of confidence must precede business recovery. But those who would invest their savings will not assume the risk of financing business expansion until we end legislative experiment, balance our Budget, and confine the Government to spheres of operation set up under the Constitution.

How are our people to know what the next move of this administration will be? What, if any, of our rights are secure? Observe the fate of men who had expended millions in developing our national airways. They were suddenly accused of fraud in handling the mails. They demanded a hearing before their peers. They asked nothing more. This essentially American right was refused. By one bold stroke of the Executive pen, property values were wiped out to the tune of millions. Yet to this day, no evidence is disclosed which suggests illegality, fraud, or even conspiracy to defraud. If there was fraud or any evidence of wrong, why has no court been called upon to punish the guilty? But the millions of property loss was the smallest item. Twelve brave Army flyers have paid the price.

Again, business shudders to contemplate what may happen when the President shall have power to negotiate trade agreements, and upon consultation with his advisers, declare certain American industries inefficient, sell them out, and trade them for foreign imports. Upon what industry will the first blow fall? The Executive may by error of judgment, sacrifice an efficient industry upon which thousands depend for a livelihood. But no hearing will be had. The marked industry will never be permitted to present its case. The President's judgment will be final.

Meanwhile, the pulp and paper mills of Maine and the great Northwest, the textile mills of New England, the beet-sugar interests of the Middle West, and thousands of concerns scattered over the Nation, representing diversified industry and employing tens of thousands of American citizens, are hesitant and fearful. In the face of such uncertainty, who will be found to put his money into American industry? My friends, business recovery is, I fear, impossible under any such circumstances.

Recently one of my constituents wrote me that a western Senator, speaking in Maine, had said that the Government should make good every dollar lost by depositors in failed banks. This leads me to refer to what I believe is a most interesting fact. In the fall of 1931, President Hoover announced a four-point recovery program. He called upon the Congress for cooperation. The Democrats controlled both Senate and House. The fourth point in President Hoover's program was Government aid to insolvent banks.

In January 1932, as a member of the Banking and Currency Committee and at the request of the Hoover administration, I introduced a bill providing Government machinery for taking over the assets of failed banks and making prompt remittance to depositors. That bill was smothered. I was never able to secure a hearing. The Democrats refused to entertain any such proposal. They said it was a plan to help rich bankers. They now understand that to support the banking structure is to aid every individual who has saved anything as well as those who have not, for this latter class is dependent for wages upon those who have saved. To this day, however, this administration has extended no immediate or effective aid to the men and women who lost their all in failed banks.

Just now we are urged to pass a bill introduced by Representative McLEOD, Republican, of Michigan, providing that the Government make good all losses of depositors in failed banks. If in 1931 we had appropriated one half the $12,000,000,000 whose hit or miss expenditure has now been authorized, the Government could have taken over every failed bank, guaranteed every depositor his money, and saved the Nation the worst blow it received in the depression; namely, the closing of every bank in the country. Had the Democratic Party been willing to accept our Republican proposal for immediate aid to insolvent banks, hundreds of thousands of depositors would have been saved, all banks would have been made liquid, loans could have been made to business, and the country would now be well on its way to prosperity.

I lay squarely at the door of this administration its failure to fulfill that "covenant with the people to be faithfully kept", which was written into its 1932 platform. I refer to the plank pledging the Democratic Party "to the relief of depositors in suspended banks."

To sum up. In the last 13 months the legislative branch of the Government has been swept into the discard. Laws written and forced hurriedly to enactment by the executive branch have changed the very structure of our Government. Property has been taken without due process of law. Our money is of uncertain value. The Treasury has no stable policy. Industry and agriculture are under strict Government control. Our manufacturing interests are to exist by sufferance and at the mere will of the Executive may be struck down in order that the products of foreign labor may enter our market in increased volume. Capital hesitates to finance a program of business expansion. Uncertainty is everywhere present, and no man can say what the morrow may bring forth.

If the Nation is to resume normal balance, five steps are essential. First, we must run the Government within the provisions of the Constitution. Second, we must do away with advisers in the White House who are unfriendly to the American system of government. Third, we must abandon Government control of industry and agriculture. Fourth, we must return to sound money. Fifth, we must stop inordinate borrowing, cut Government expenditures, and give the Nation a balanced budget.

All has not run smoothly with us in the past, nor can we expect unruffled seas in the future. Other depressions will come. But I have faith in the patience, courage, and stamina of the American people to overcome every obstacle. Perhaps it is not for me to offer advice, but I may at least express the hope that when the hour of trial is upon us we shall hold to the philosophy of Lincoln, whom I quote in closing, as I did in beginning:

> In great emergency moderation is generally safer than radicalism.

[Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HART] such time as he may desire.

Mr. HART. Mr. Speaker, there are just two points under discussion in this bill on which I want to touch. First, I will discuss for a moment or two the so-called "Norris amendment." I am a great admirer of Senator NORRIS and have perfect confidence in his disinterestedness in offering this amendment. I have followed the Senator's career for a great many years. I happen to know that his Republican associates were not in sympathy with his attitude toward party politics.

Also being aware of the fact that upon the board of this Home Owners' Loan Corporation is one of the most objectionable Republican politicians, namely, Walter Newton, a former secretary to President Hoover, who misses no opportunity to inject, mostly under cover, party politics into these appointments, I therefore cannot subscribe to the sincerity of the average Republican Member of this House in desiring that this amendment be adopted.

For example, let us take the Civil Works program carried out during the past winter. The President desired to eliminate politics from this welfare agency. However, when the President did eliminate party politics, so far as the Democratic Party was concerned, we found that a Republican in the Department of Labor, namely, W. Frank Persons, who appointed emergency relief committees throughout the States, had set up a very fine Republican political organization; and in my State I am told that for reference a list of the Republican county committees was used. At any rate, the organization was almost 100 percent Republican.

Now, it follows that this administration, being Democratic, no matter who administers the activities of any of these agencies, the Democratic Party must accept the responsibility for inefficiency or dishonesty. Primarily, they are in charge and cannot escape the responsibility. Therefore, being charged with the responsibility, I think they should have something to say with reference to those who are going to carry out the program.

As an illustration of what may happen under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, I use an instance in my own State, in connection with the Civil Works program, which was handled by an almost complete Republican personnel. The only person found guilty of graft in the Civil Works program was a prominent Republican, who had been publicity manager for a Republican ex-Governor. There was no question about this man's guilt, because he pleaded guilty in a Federal court in Grand Rapids, Mich. With this record, nevertheless, a Republican Member of Congress from my own State had the nerve to make the following statement in a Lincoln Day address:

> When the field administration of the Civil Works administration is filled with scandal in 90 short days, that the Department of Justice has to be put upon the trail of graft and exploitation in 45 out of the 48 States, I say that the President of the United States should pray to Heaven for a vigorous and vigilant opposition party to help him in his own eager desire to discipline his own chislers, who would wreck his own great adventure.

With Republicans making statements of this kind, I think it is high time for the administration to assume its own party responsibilities.

I am sorry that this bill does not provide some additional funds for the financing of new home building. However, I am glad to learn from the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. REILLY] that the committee has under consideration and will probably report a bill for new home building.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL].

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD my own remarks with two telegrams and an extract from a letter bearing upon this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, if we permit this bill, S. 2999, to grant mortgage relief to distressed home owners, to be enacted into law without an appropriate amendment safeguarding these home owners against the losses they incurred because of depreciated bonds, we will be, in my opinion, false to our trust as legislators.

The old adage, to the effect that by our fruits we shall be known is quite appropriately applicable to the action of the Banking and Currency Committee in failing to consider the losses which mortgagors were forced to absorb in the manipulation of Home Loan Corporation bonds which were not guaranteed as to principal. In this legislation, we are actually making the bondholder richer at the expense of the distressed home owner. Our platform declaration of "equal rights to all; special privileges to none" will be completely thrown into discard if we permit the bondholders to be enriched at the expense of the mortgage-distressed citizens. We should and must amend this act to protect all those who have incurred additional indebtedness on all bonds heretofore issued which were not guaranteed as to principal.

The Congress is responsible for, and our leadership invites, the utmost criticism for permitting this bill to come on the floor of the House under suspension of rules, through which procedure amendments are out of order. Whether the Banking and Currency Committee is deliberately intending to enrich the bondholders I leave entirely to your own interpretation. The truth is that preclusion of amendment under the gag of suspension of rules certainly permits this inference. The fact that we are not only guaranteeing the principal of these bonds but the further fact that we are making them exempt from all taxation and also making the interest therefrom exempt from taxation is certainly, in my opinion, another evidence that the Congress of the United States, in this act, with almost unanimous support of the Republicans on the committee, is acting in the interest of the Wall Street international coupon clippers rather than in the interest of the distressed citizens in whom I am primarily interested.

Our President is on record as pledged to drive the money changers from the temple, yet in this bill we are more firmly enthroning the Wall Street crowd and giving them a more complete mastery over the American people by permitting them to withdraw their wealth from taxation. Again we are failing to live up to our platform declaration of "equal rights to all, special privileges to none", since we are extending the special privilege of tax exemption, both as to principal and interest on these bonds, and thus adding a double burden on the common man by taxing him on what little accumulation he may possess while, at the same time, we exempt those who are enveloped in great wealth, most of which is unearned.

Under the gold devaluation policy of the administration, there remains sufficient gold in the Treasury to warrant the issuance of gold certificates totaling approximately $8,000,000,000. Inasmuch as an authoritative law exists for the printing of this large amount of gold certificates, it would indeed be a new deal if the administration would issue this money as it is authorized by law to do and lend it to the distressed home owner and farmer at the lowest possible rate of interest. If the Government and our Democratic administration would again follow the plank of our platform of "equal rights to all, special privileges to none", these funds would thus be loaned to the private citizen at the same rate of interest which the Government charges the Federal Reserve banks in its extension of credit to them under existing law. If Federal Reserve banks can receive Federal Reserve notes from the Treasury at approximately one tenth of 1 percent interest on the basis of dubious paper collateral, it seems quite fair and just that the Government could and should extend credit at the same low rate of interest, plus carrying charge, to the honorable and worthy American citizen on the collateral of his own farm or his own home.

Do the bankers control Congress? If we will analyze the legislation enacted in this Congress, it will be readily seen that our legislation has generally been in the interest of the banker and not in the interest of the common man. The Republican Members have been the special exponents of legislation of this type; but many on the Democratic side, especially the leaders of the Banking and Currency Committee, appear to have this same complex. We should and must legislate for all the people and not for one special class—the financial groups. If the minds of Congressmen cannot be changed to react in the interest of the people, Congressmen themselves should be changed as our Government does not exist for special groups but is founded upon the Jeffersonian principle of "equal rights to all, special privileges to none."

When the original home loan bill was before the Congress in the special session, I offered several amendments in the interest of the distressed mortgagor only to have these amendments rejected by the Banking and Currency Committee. Others on the Democratic side suggested that the principal as well as the interest of these bonds be guaranteed, which suggestion was discredited by the Republican Membership on the Banking and Currency Committee. I recognized the many weaknesses in the bill and failing to secure proper amendment, voted against it. My apprehensions were fully justified as evidenced in the administration of the act.

While the bill was originally framed in the interest of the banks, insurance, and loan companies which had a multitude of sour or defaulted mortgages, it was soon found that these institutions repudiated the proffered relief and only in instances where the mortgagee could not foreclose to his pecuniary benefit were the unguaranteed bonds accepted. Innumerable instances were brought to my attention to corroborate this statement, but none was so glaringly evident as in a communication received from a building-and-loan association in my district wherein that association courageously stated the truth, in the following terms, regarding the depreciated Home Loan Corporation bonds:

> At the present time the discount that is necessary in order that this institution realize upon Home Owners' Loan Corporation bonds makes it inadvisable to accept these bonds except in cases wherein the margin of security does not justify foreclosure under the deed of trust but rather permits the discount under the bonds accepted in lieu of the real property.

From the foregoing it is readily understood that the banks would not accept these depreciated bonds at a loss to themselves, unless the indebtedness due them was greater than the amount they would receive through these bonds, less the depreciation.

The manager of the home-loan bank in California told me personally before offices were opened in California that one institution alone in Los Angeles had prepared a list of more than 800 soured, defaulted mortgages which it intended to offer to the Home Loan Bank Board. In other words, this institution, with its soured mortgages, was anxious to unload on the Government these 800 or more mortgages which it would not find profitable to foreclose.

The individual mortgagor has received very little of the hoped-for aid from the Home Loan Corporation while the bonds were not guaranteed as to principal. The following telegram indicates that the interest of the individual distressed mortgagors was secondary to that of the banks, insurance, and loan companies:

> SAN GABRIEL, CALIF., April 4, 1934.
> Hon. JOHN HENRY HOEPPEL, > Congressman Twelfth Congressional District of California, House Office Building:
> Since August of last year local home-loan bank has had my application for a loan on my property. Have repeatedly requested action from the local office here. The Pacific States Savings & Loan Co. lay the blame to Butler's office for noncooperation in assisting in expediting my particular loan. Apparently local help are endeavoring to prolong their positions by holding up loan on applicants. This evil is apparently being experienced by your constituent in this district. To the majority of us the only assistance which Butler seems to aid in is alleviating the distress of banks and mortgage companies, and the rank and file of the people who are endeavoring to regain our homes can twiddle our thumbs until the big boys are taken care of first. Please take the matter up at your convenience with the Washington office and assist in helping the conditions in this district. Primarily, of course, Mr. HOEPPEL, I am very anxious to regain my home.
> ROY W. JACOBS.

From the foregoing telegram it is evident that my apprehensions regarding the merit of the original home-loan bank bill were more than justified. It was enacted to assist the banks, insurance, and building-loan companies which, under the existing liberal R.F.C. law, were unable to obtain cash for their mortgages which were in default. In what appears to be a majority of instances, such relief as was given to individual distressed mortgagors was not relief at all but merely an added burden. Appraisers of the Home Loan Corporation in instances where the assessed valuation was insufficient to obtain relief through the issuance of Home Loan Corporation bonds encouraged the mortgagor to give to his original mortgagee, in addition to the bonds, a further second mortgage in order that the mortgagee might receive dollar for dollar for the face value of his mortgage.

In other instances, because of the depreciated value of the bonds, distressed mortgagors were forced to execute second mortgages, notes, or other forms of indebtedness to the mortgagee to absorb the losses of the depreciated Home Loan Corporation bonds at the time of transfer. The following telegram appears to be conclusive evidence of thousands of cases throughout our country where the burden of the distressed mortgagor was actually increased and where, instead of mortgage relief, he was forced to incur added indebtedness in order to obtain temporary surcease from his mortgage difficulties:

ARCADIA, CALIF., January 7, 1934.

Congressman J. H. HOEPPEL,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Total mortgage indebtedness to date under Home Loan Act, $4,199. Foreclosures and redemption, $374. Amount added to mortgage on depreciation of bonds, $671. Total note signed to satisfy Kasnicka, in addition to $4,199 he received in bonds, including mortgage and depreciation, is $962. Actual amount owed before foreclosure, principal, $3,500; interest to date, $245; total, $3,745.

RUDDICK.

From the foregoing telegram, it will be noted that the mortgagor in question had an additional burden of $671 added to his total indebtedness. In other words, he, himself, was forced to absorb the loss due to the depreciated selling price of the bonds on the date of transaction. Unless we amend this bill to protect the thousands of individuals in similar situations, in my opinion, we must be charged with legislating for the bondholders and not for the people.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, I should like to call attention to a telegram which I have before me, and which proves conclusively that a distressed mortgagor was compelled to pay tribute of $671 to his mortgagee before the mortgagee would accept Home Loan Corporation bonds. Under this bill we are validating these bonds now in the hands of the mortgagee, but we are giving no relief whatever to the mortgagor who has been forced to pay a tribute of $671 in order to obtain mortgage relief.

As soon as this bill is enacted into law the man who took these depreciated bonds, plus this additional note or second mortgage, will receive par value for them, or an additional premium for his bonds, and at the same time he will hold the note of the distressed mortgagor. So instead of granting relief to the distressed mortgagor we are in this bill aiding and paying tribute to the bondholder. I contend that we should have had time to offer amendments to this bill which would invalidate all contracts of the kind executed by a mortgagor forced by necessity to make such a sacrifice. In my own district in California hundreds of mortgagors were forced to sign notes or second mortgages before the mortgagee would accept Home Loan Corporation bonds. Banks also took the same advantage of distressed mortgagors. For that reason I most deeply regret that this bill cannot at this time be amended so as to grant more adequate relief to our distressed and mortgaged home owners.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HOEPPEL] has expired.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. FORD] such time as he may desire.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I am in hearty accord with the provisions of this bill and will support it. I am sorry, however, that the committee could not see its way clear to accept my amendment providing for the broadening of the original act's provisions so that income property, the appraised value of which comes within the present $14,000 limit of the act, was not accepted. That amendment would save the property of thousands of fine, hard-working, thrifty, and self-sacrificing citizens and taxpayers who have invested their meager savings in what they thought was income property. The term income property is now, and has been for a period of 3 years, a misnomer. Every owner of this class of property knows that it has been a burden. Rents have been so low, the percentage of vacancies so high, that the owner who has gotten his taxes out of that class of property is fortunate indeed. As for interest and repairs, these have had to be met out of other income if the owner was fortunate enough to have some other source. If not, he has had the grim pleasure of seeing his life savings swallowed up by the mortgagee or pass into the hands of the State for taxes, there to be subject to penalties and charges that may, before he is able to redeem, wipe out the value of the holdings.

Now, no man in this House was more overjoyed than was I when the Home Loan Act became a law. I saw in it the salvation of the home owner who was struggling to keep a roof over his head. For this I was and am grateful. But I want to call your attention to the income property owner's plight. He, too, needs relief. He has contributed to the tax funds huge sums. He has paid improvement assessments running into the hundreds of millions. He has given employment to labor in the erection of his property. He thought he had an investment that was safe and secure. But the depression came along and he has been forced to see his equity wiped out and his property taken for a fraction of its value because of his inability to refinance his mortgages.

Gentlemen, I submit that this class of property owner, citizen, and taxpayer is worthy of your solicitude, and I urge you most sincerely to pass some measure that will bring him the much deserved relief that is his just due. [Applause.]

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized for 19¾ minutes.

Mr. LUCE. The unusual situation should be explained for the benefit of the many Members who have not been here during the debate. The pending bill was reported as a substitute for the Senate bill. By itself it contains nothing to arouse controversy and every Member may well vote for it. Criticism has been almost wholly because of a paragraph of the Senate bill here omitted. With action proceeding under suspension of the rules, no amendment may be offered, even by way of the motion to recommit. Undoubtedly conferees will be appointed to try to reconcile the views of the two Houses and it is in part for their benefit that the point in issue has been discussed. Possibly before conclusion is reached Members may have the chance to put themselves on record. In any case the public will have been usefully informed of a serious, perhaps even a momentous, difference of opinion between the President and what is evidently a majority of the Democratic Membership of the House. Inasmuch as it would have been easily possible for the Democratic leadership to bring this matter up in the usual way, with opportunity for amendment, it is not unfair to infer that there was unwillingness to have a vote upon the merits. Under these conditions our appeal today must be to the public.

Next fall it will be carried particularly to the electorate. There are Congressional districts where it may decide the fate of Members seeking reelection. Such is the importance of the question involved that if clear-cut decision is yet reached here, it may prove, politically at least, only second in political consequence of all the decisions we shall have made. What, then, is involved?

At the risk of repetition I will read the first sentence of the omitted Senate amendment, the important part:

> In the appointment of agents and the selection of employees for said Corporation, and in the promotion of agents or employees, no partisan political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all agents and employees shall be appointed, employed, or promoted solely upon the basis of merit and efficiency.

On the day that your House committee passed judgment upon the bill, or the day after, the President told newspaper correspondents that he desired this section left in the bill. If memory serves me right, one report said that he had sent a letter to that effect to the chairman of the House committee. Nevertheless, the committee report before you omits compliance with the request of the President; indeed, makes no reference to the matter. So still once again I find myself here on my feet defending the President of the United States, proclaiming adherence to his views, whereas a majority of the House Committee on Banking and Currency saw fit to adhere to the opposite position, and in my judgment a majority of this House would at the moment discard the President's wish.

Therefore, you have the issue clearly put before you, the issue of whether the first consideration in the employment of officials and workers in the public service shall be partisanship or shall be efficiency. Once again this question comes before Congress.

A Senator from my State, Charles Sumner, began with the introduction of a bill the national movement for appointment to office by means of competitive examinations.

It was 51 years ago, as my colleague from Cincinnati [Mr. HOLLISTER] told the House earlier in the day, that a great Democrat, George H. Pendleton, saw his efforts for appointment on the basis of merit crowned by enactment of civil-service reform into law. Every President from that day to this has exercised his power to transfer names to the classified list; and every President from that day to this has thereby stood for efficiency in government, because every one of them has known what it means to corrupt, to debauch the Government of the United States by making partisanship the first consideration for employment to office.

If you choose to read the record of what has been said here today, and particularly the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], you will find specific instances of what has now taken place. There may be in the gallery at the moment one of the best, ablest, most conscientious representatives of the press, Oliver McKee, Jr. For the February number of the North American Review, which I commend for your reading, he wrote an article entitled "The Jobmaster General." Of course, you all know that refers to the Postmaster General of the United States. In this article Mr. McKee stated, deliberately stated, repeating what all the newspaper men will tell you: "The Federal Home Loan Bank Board is known in Washington as the spoilsmen's paradise." I am going to repeat that: "The Federal Home Loan Bank Board is known in Washington as the spoilsmen's paradise."

The spoilsmen's paradise is the perverted condition of an institution in creating which I had some share. I was not the author of the Federal home loan bank system, but I might be accurately called its nurse, because I was intrusted by the Hoover administration with securing the passage through the House of that beneficent measure; and I had hoped that to my dying day I might point with pride to my share in the creation of this wonderfully useful institution, or that might be wonderfully useful. You may imagine my regret, I might even say my shame, at seeing it now held up before the country as the spoilsmen's paradise. Should I, could I, be held responsible as knowingly sharing in the creation of a spoilsmen's paradise? I pray not.

Another institution under the same central control, the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, was created after the Democrats came into power. Although a Republican, I received an honor precious to me by being invited, the only Republican so invited, to sit in with those who passed judgment on the draft of this bill. In this system, too, I take the warmest personal interest. Here, also, I wish I might today take full measure of pride.

For the cause why I cannot, I will not, hold responsible those who have been or are members of the Board in Washington. Three of them have been men with whom some of us associated in this body and whom we know to be upright, honorable, patriotic. My long-time personal acquaintance with the chairman, John H. Fahey, assures me that he is an able man of complete integrity, high-minded, and self-sacrificing, with the public welfare always at heart. He is valiantly attacking a task equal to that of Hercules in cleaning out the Augean stables.

The reason for what has taken place, if my surmise is correct, is that orders came from the Jobmaster General that these organizations created to help men in distress, created to save the most precious of human possessions, the home, should be mastered and manned by men of one political faith, with party loyalty the primary test.

The appointments locally were, it is understood, made upon the advice of members of the National Democratic Committee with the approbation of the gentlemen on my right or Senators of like political faith. In many parts of the country not a man could receive appointment unless he came there with the endorsement of a Democratic leader. The first question asked was not: Are you capable; not: Are you experienced; not: Are you honest; but: Are you a Democrat?

The outcome of that may be seen in some of the things that have been said here today.

I am told of one case where three men designated as Democrats to serve in one of these agencies decided by throwing coins to a line drawn on the floor as to which one should be the manager, as to which one should be the attorney—God save the mark! Choosing an attorney by the power of tossing a coin to a line on the floor! And the third one should be the appraiser. No question whatever of efficiency, qualification, or merit, but only ability to approach with a coin deftly and skillfully a line on the floor. [Laughter.]

In the matter of supporting the President, I have heard that a record is being kept. [Laughter and applause.] I am glad that the Speaker has returned to the chair in order that he may appreciate the embarrassments of the situation. I am reminded of a poem that was recited frequently in school in my day:

Abou Ben Adhem (may his tribe increase).

The poem went on to describe an angel writing in a book of gold. Abou asked him what was being written. The angel answered, "The names of those who love the Lord." The poem ended:

And lo, Ben Adhem's name led all the rest.

I had hoped, sir, that modesty would not keep our presiding officer, our beloved presiding officer, from heading his list of those who love the Lord with his own name. Alas, he cannot now conscientiously so do, for I find in a copy of the Washington Herald of Sunday a statement that conveys his opposition to the so-called "Norris amendment." The reporter says:

Speaker HENRY T. RAINEY took issue with the President on the nonpartisan provision. He said: "When appointments are taken out of politics, that only means we'd have to put Republicans, instead of Democrats, in."

[Laughter and applause.]

This is frank recognition of the fact that if merit and capacity were to determine appointments no Democrat need apply. [Laughter and applause.]

I hope my good friend, the Speaker, will not take my persiflage as indicating any lack of regard for him, although disclosing my complete lack of sympathy with his view in this particular.

In spite of his view I persist in the belief that it was a calamity not only for his party but also for the Nation when the many newly created relief agencies were turned over to the spoilsmen. It is not alone the home-loan systems that have suffered. All along the line the same disastrous results have followed. Everybody here knows that the scandalous conduct of the C.W.A. has been a stench in the nostrils of hundreds of communities. One could fill a book with the ridiculous, the wretched, the disgraceful stories of waste, graft, and corruption that come to us about this and many other of the relief organizations.

Partisan politics has penetrated their veins.

Invariable has been such result of appointment to public office with partisanship the paramount consideration. It began with us just a hundred years ago when Andrew Jackson was President. [Applause.]

This applause is the most welcome thing I have had this afternoon. [Applause.] Monday night the gentlemen who have applauded forgot all about the fact that Thomas Jefferson ever lived. Take Andrew Jackson for your patron saint if you wish, and see what he and Martin Van Buren did for this country by enforcing the spoils system.

It was Marcy of New York who coined the famous phrase "To the victors belong the spoils." This idea came so near wrecking the Government that Abraham Lincoln, pointing out to a friend the eager multitude of officeseekers that thronged the White House, said:

There you see something which in the course of time will become a greater danger to the Republic than the Rebellion itself.

Once to Carl Schurz he observed:

I am afraid that this thing is going to ruin republican government.

Strong, patriotic, thoughtful men undertook from that time, beginning with Charles Sumner, as I have said, to put into force the idea that only by making efficiency the first test can this Government survive.

I am told that Republicans have followed the opposite course at times. I am told that here and there Republican advice prevails on partisan grounds, but I tell you if there is a Republican rascal in office, turn him out; if there is a Republican appointee who proves to be inefficient, turn him out. If there is a Republican who in point of capacity or integrity and honesty falls down, turn him out. Replace them and fill new positions with all the Democrats you want to, provided that first, last, and all the time ahead of partisanship you place the tests of experience, capacity, and character. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Banking and Currency did not desire to embody in this bill the sort of political controversy that has characterized the proceedings of this House this afternoon; so for this reason we left out of the bill the political amendment that was incorporated by the Senate. We did not regard the provision as legislation. With all deference to the great Senator whose name it bears, the members of the Banking and Currency Committee thought that it involved an imputation against the present administration of the Home Owners' Loan organization, a sort of political speech that should be made on the stump or in the press, or, if gentlemen think it in good taste, upon the floor of this House, as has been done this afternoon. [Applause.] That is why the Norris amendment does not appear in this bill. [Applause.]

May I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that I am one of those whose names appear on the roll of honor in this House, the record carrying the names of Members who have been loyal to the administration. I wish to say, in addition, that while I am sure the gentleman from Massachusetts would not consciously make an inaccurate statement, the Committee on Banking and Currency had no information from the White House as to the views entertained by the President with respect to the Norris amendment at the time the committee reported this bill to the House. The President later made known his views frankly, as he always does to the people of the entire Nation, in a statement to the press. This is the history of what took place with respect to the amendment in the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The gentleman from Ohio told you in his speech that members of the Home Loan Bank Board as now constituted and the President of the United States had made it known that they favored the principles of the Norris amendment; so that there is nothing left for these gentlemen to fear, as to a fair, nonpartisan, impartial administration of this emergency relief organization. Why complain, if both the Board and the President are committed to the Norris amendment? What does it matter how much we debate the matter among ourselves this afternoon? What better assurance would our friends desire?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. As I understand it, the purpose of this bill is to guarantee the principal and interest of the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation so that they will be marketable?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman remember that at the last session of the Congress I offered an amendment making them direct obligations of the Government, and that the gentleman from Massachusetts undertook to ridicule this on the floor of the House and asked me to withdraw the amendment?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think the statement of the gentleman is correct.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SIROVICH. Does the distinguished gentleman remember when the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act was passed by Congress several years ago?

Mr. STEAGALL. I am going to call attention to the history of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act. It happens that the gentleman from Massachusetts was a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, which reported the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, and the gentleman was not then vociferous in his demands for a provision similar to the Norris amendment for which he clamors this afternoon. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation Board became a place of refuge for "busted" banks and broken-down Republican politicians—a sort of relief resort for Republicans throughout the country. It was loaded down with appointments of that kind. [Applause.]

Mr. SIROVICH. And will the gentleman admit that the phrase and the philosophy "to the victors belong the spoils" was carried into fruition and realization at that time?

Mr. STEAGALL. Absolutely. Now, let me remind the gentlemen of something else. We enacted the original Home Loan Bank Act in July 1932. It came from the Committee on Banking and Currency, as the gentleman has said. It was administered without any substantial beneficial results to the people of the country during the remaining months of the Republican administration. During this entire time there was only about $15,000,000 of loans made throughout the Nation. It was a political bill passed in contemplation of the last Presidential election, and used for the aid of the Republican Party in that campaign. On that Board President Hoover saw fit to place Mr. Franklin Fort as chief director. He proceeded to put Republicans in charge of that organization and it is a matter of history that it was used for campaign purposes and not much for anything else during 1932. [Laughter and applause.]

The gentleman states this is going to be an issue second only in importance during the next campaign in the United States. If so, the bankruptcy of his party is even more pitiable and hopeless than I had supposed. But I would like to know how the gentleman expects to make progress in the campaign next fall with the President as the real issue, if the gentleman and his party are going to take the same position on this proposition that the President has taken before the people of the United States. I wonder how he expects to secure repudiation of the President by endorsing his position. And I would like to know how the gentleman expects to make a successful political issue out of the Norris amendment, when everybody knows that Senator NORRIS himself has no more thought of ever supporting the old line Republican organization in the United States again than I have—or any other Member on the Democratic side of the aisle this afternoon. [Applause.]

The plain fact is, as many of us remember, the adherents of Senator NORRIS in this House only a few years ago were proscribed, ostracized, branded, and kicked out of the organization and refused all recognition by the Republican organization of this House; and yet we are told that under the leadership of Senator NORRIS, on the question of patronage in one of the minor departments of the Government, the Republican Party is going to wage a successful battle and overthrow the Democratic Party in 1934.

I sympathize with the gentleman, but I will say to him that if this is his reliance for an issue upon which to resurrect the Republican Party, those of us who believe in the party system of government, and who believe in a division of the people of the country into two political parties is conducive to wholesome conditions and good government, have very slight basis for hope of a revival of that system in the United States.

I wish to say that this imaginary issue is much ado about nothing. We shall go forward from now as we have during these months of the past year, hopeful and happy, loyal to the great leader chosen by the American people, upon whom they will continue to rely to point the way to the restoration of prosperity and to redeem the Nation and our institutions from the distress and destruction that have been brought upon us during 12 years of Republican misrule in the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. I would not like the impression to go out to the State of Massachusetts, from which my colleague comes, and to our other Republican and Democratic colleagues that the conditions to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] referred are prevalent in Massachusetts. I have heard no one in the State of Massachusetts complain of the administration of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation under Mr. Charles F. Cotter, the State manager, and I think my Republican colleagues will agree with my Democratic colleagues on this proposition.

Mr. STEAGALL. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. LOZIER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. LOZIER. Was not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency when it reported out the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act?

Mr. STEAGALL. He was.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 340, nays 1, not voting 90, as follows:

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, under the leave granted to Members to extend their remarks in regard to S. 2999, an act to guarantee the bonds of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, I insert the following article written by me, which was published in the Real America magazine, issue of February 1934:

[From the Real America magazine, February 1934]

SAVE AMERICA—BY SAVING THE FARMS AND HOMES OF AMERICA—AN APPEAL TO PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT

By Congressman MARTIN F. SMITH

President Franklin D. Roosevelt has displayed rare courage since he entered the White House on the 4th of last March. He has on at least two occasions invoked the extraordinary powers of proclamation by which it is possible for the Chief Executive of the Nation to act in regard to matters of supreme importance, without awaiting the legislative enactment of the Congress or the decree of the judicial branch of the Federal Government.

I refer, of course, to President Roosevelt's proclamation declaring the bank holiday and closing the banking institutions of the country and his subsequent proclamation declaring an embargo on gold shipments. Both of these proclamations were courageously issued and of vast benefit to the American people.

As one of the Representatives in Congress of the American people, I desire to urge President Roosevelt to resort again to the exercise of his proclamationary power and authority in behalf of the millions of owners of homes and farms in this country upon which mortgages are still being foreclosed at an alarming rate. It will be many months before the farm- and home-mortgage bills become widely effective. Also, their provisions are not mandatory as applied to the mortgagee or holder of the mortgage, who may or may not care to come in under the provisions of the law and accept bonds as he sees fit.

It is estimated that there are $35,000,000,000 worth of mortgages on city property—over $20,000,000,000 on homes—and that nearly two thirds of these mortgages are in default and subject to foreclosure. It is further estimated that there are $8,500,000,000 of mortgages outstanding on the farms of America, of which nearly 70 percent are delinquent and subject to foreclosure.

There remains but one avenue of hope and relief for our unfortunate fellow citizens who, through no fault of their own, are losing their homes and their farms and whose wives and children are being evicted into the streets and the countryside in rich, free America, and that is to ask our President to proclaim a moratorium on mortgage foreclosures on homes and farms in America. Our neighbors are asking and pleading for this consideration from one end of the land to another.

Mr. President, when you save the homes and farms of America, you save America.

UNITED STATES v. JAMES CANNON, JR., ET AL.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

House Resolution 322

Whereas in the case of the The United States against James Cannon, Jr., and Ada L. Burroughs (no. 51159, criminal docket), pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, subpena duces tecum was issued by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and addressed to South Trimble, Clerk of the House of Representatives, directing him to appear as a witness before criminal court, division no. 1, on the 10th day of April 1934 and to bring with him certain and sundry original papers in the possession and under the control of the House of Representatives; and

Whereas the United States Attorney for the District of Columbia advises that for certain peculiar reasons it is essential that the original papers and documents be produced in court, and not merely certified or photostatic copies thereof; and

Whereas by the provisions of section 247 (c) of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of February 28, 1925, the Clerk is required to preserve such documents and papers for a period of 2 years from the date of filing; and

Whereas said documents and papers were filed with the Clerk during the period from September 1928 to February 1929, which is over 2 years ago, and are now therefore subject to destruction: Therefore be it

Resolved, That by the privileges of this House no evidence of a documentary character under the control and in the possession of the House of Representatives can, by the mandate of process of the ordinary courts of justice, be taken from such control or possession but by its permission; be it further

Resolved, That when it appears by the order of the court or of the judge thereof, or of any legal officer charged with the administration of the orders of such court or judge, that documentary evidence in the possession and under the control of the House is needful for use in any court of justice or before any judge or such legal officer, for the promotion of justice, this House will take such order thereon as will promote the ends of justice consistently with the privileges and rights of this House; be it further

Resolved, That South Trimble, Clerk of the House, be authorized to appear at the piace and before the officer named in the subpena duces tecum before mentioned, with the originals as well as certified photostatic copies of the documents and papers mentioned in the said subpena and submit the said papers and documents to the examination of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from time to time according to its convenience, retaining, however, the custody of the original papers and documents; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the said court as a respectful answer to the subpena aforementioned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement in explanation of the resolution.

Recently the House passed a resolution dealing with this matter. After the resolution was passed we were apprised that because of certain conditions copies of the documents would not meet the requirements of the court. When we looked into the matter we found that the documents subpenaed are not the ordinary records of the House. They are records which under the law are to be preserved for 2 years, and after that time are subject to destruction. In other words, the Clerk could now take them out and burn them under the law. I was not able to get in contact with all of the members of the Committee on the Judiciary, but such as I was able to contact agreed, as everybody must agree, that the House could not justify itself in disregarding a subpena of the court to permit the presentation in the court at the request of the court of documents which the Clerk of the House under law may now burn. This resolution simply amends the resolution which we passed the other day, which permits the Clerk of the House to attend under subpena duces tecum with copies of these documents so as to permit him now to attend with the original documents as the court has requested. I am sure that no one can have any objection to this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to vacate House Resolution 320, passed the other day, and lay that on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SALE OF ALCOHOLIC LIQUORS IN ALASKA

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 12, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 12

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the action of the Vice President and of the Speaker of the House of Representatives in signing the enrolled bill (S. 2729) entitled "An act to repeal an act of Congress entitled 'An act to prohibit the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes', approved February 14, 1917, and for other purposes", be rescinded, and that in the reenrollment of such bill the last proviso of section 1 reading as follows: "Provided, That the Governor of the Territory of Alaska, from and after the passage and approval of this act, shall have the power and authority to grant pardons to persons theretofore convicted of violations of the aforesaid act of February 14, 1917", be stricken out.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ELECTION OF A MEMBER TO A COMMITTEE

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 323

Resolved, That WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, of the State of Alabama, be, and he is hereby, elected Chairman of the standing committee of the House Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS OF THE AIR-MAIL CANCELATIONS

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered over the radio last night by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following:

The original blunder in the cancelation of the air-mail contracts has been the cause of a continuous series of blunders under the administration of Postmaster General James A. Farley. These blunders have reached a stage where they are both tragic and ridiculous.

The newest scheme proposed by Commissar Farley is the most colossal blunder of all that have so far been attempted in the air-mail fiasco in "blunderland." It is solemnly proposed by the Postmaster General to call for new bids, shutting out the old air-mail companies unless they reorganize by eliminating their own officials and permitting the use of flivver planes. Competing companies claim this is a device to extend favoritism to the American Airways, headed by E. L. Cord, a friend of the administration, which has a monopoly of this type of planes. It is inconceivable that the Postmaster General could find any more ways to commit additional blunders, but apparently he has. Whether Fourth Assistant Postmaster General Evans or Director of Aeronautics Eugene Vidal, of the Commerce Department, the former of whom was connected with Mr. Cord in his aviation companies, had a hand in drawing up these proposed contracts is a matter for future determination.

However, the fact remains that the Postmaster General actually contemplates scrapping great commercial air lines with millions of investments in airplanes, equipment, and airports to make a political holiday and thereby ruin many people by wrecking established aviation companies and crippling the Air Mail Service.

At the outset of my remarks I wish to point out that there are a few facts that are evidently misunderstood or overlooked altogether which are essential before reaching a just conclusion as to the merits or demerits of the air-mail controversy. First, that in spite of all the charges of profiteering and graft hurled at the air-mail companies by administration supporters, few, if any, ever paid dividends or made any profits or paid big salaries to their officials. Out of the $14,000,000 paid in subsidies last year, approximately seven million went to the Government in air-mail postage. Some of the larger air-mail lines, like the Transcontinental and Western, returned a substantial profit in air-mail postage to the Government over and above the subsidy received.

The futility of the efforts of the Democrats who have been in power in Congress for 3 years in attempting now to charge the previous Republican administration with not providing adequate funds for the Army Air Corps must be apparent to every fair-thinking American. However, the charge is completely repudiated by the undisputed fact that President Roosevelt and his Director of the Budget cut in the most dictatorial and unwarranted manner the congressional appropriations for the maintenance and operation of the Army Air Corps from $15,193,614 to $7,293,416 during the last year. This drastic reduction by the President cut the flying time of the Army pilots to 25 minutes per day. Is it any wonder that they are not efficient and highly trained as night flyers and in cross-country flights? If anyone is to blame for the inefficiency of the Army Air Corps, it is the President of the United States and the Director of the Budget.

A few weeks ago the greatest aviator since the war, Colonel Lindbergh, testifying before a congressional committee, called the cancelation of the air-mail contracts without a hearing "unjust and un-American." He was followed by Captain Rickenbacker, who shot down 27 German planes and has every kind of American decoration for valor. Apparently he still has the fighting spirit and the courage of his convictions, because he called on the President to purge his official family of traitorous members who advised him to cancel these contracts.

Who are the traitors who have been responsible for the legalized, if not political, murder of 12 Army Air Corps pilots? There is something very rotten in Denmark in connection with the cancelation of the 23 air-mail contracts almost overnight on February 9 by Executive order. Who advised the President to issue the Executive order? Who advised Mr. Harllee Branch, the Second Assistant Postmaster General, to send for Major General Foulois, Chief of the Army Air Corps, on that fatal February 9 and ask him if the Army pilots could fly the air mail?

Postmaster General Farley stated before the Senate committee that the letter he signed to Chairman BLACK, notifying him of the cancelation of the air-mail contracts, was written by Solicitor Crowley of the Post Office Department and Attorney General Cummings. Who asked them to write the letter and on what date? The cancelation of the air-mail contracts is still shrouded in considerable mystery, and it will take time to unravel all the facts that are concealed in this recently discovered labyrinth of partisanship and greed. From the beginning I have been convinced that politics and selfish interests have been the main causes for the cancelation of the air-mail contracts without a hearing. I join with Captain Rickenbacker in demanding that the guilty parties be exposed and that the traitorous element responsible for the rotton mess be dismissed from office.

The answer of the administration is that there was fraud and collusion in making the contracts 4 years ago under a Republican administration, but in spite of Postmaster General Farley's telegram to Colonel Lindbergh, that "you do not know all the facts" or in other words "you do not know what you are talking about", Mr. Farley does not produce an iota of evidence of fraud, beyond glittering generalities, to substantiate his charges. If there is fraud the public are entitled to all the facts and the guilty should be punished. If the air-mail contracts had been filled with fraud that would have been all the more reason to have provided a hearing and held the guilty accountable for defrauding the Government. However, not being able to prove fraud against all the companies and desiring to smear the previous Republican administration the air-mail contracts were canceled, as Colonel Lindbergh said, unjustly and in an un-American manner. I go farther and say that the administration, drunk and arrogant with its autocratic powers, canceled these contracts on the basis that might makes right, and for political and selfish reasons.

The high-handed, arbitrary, and dictatorial cancelation of the air-mail contracts is a typical example of the extent to which this administration has copied some of the autocratic tactics of fascism, Hitlerism, and communism at their worst.

Another recent example is the attempt to single out Andrew W. Mellon, former Secretary of the Treasury, and combine him with former Mayor Walker, a political enemy of the President, for a special investigation of their income taxes. It is just a part of the extraordinary partisan practices of this administration to attempt to punish its critics or political enemies. Hardly had Colonel Lindbergh wired his protest against the unjust cancelation of air-mail contracts without a hearing to the President but he was called by the President's Secretary a publicity hound and his income tax investigated. It behooves Al Smith and John W. Davis to be careful with their income taxes, as they may be the next in line to be called before the inquisition.

In spite of the charges of fraud repeated like parrots by adherents of the administration's policy of canceling the air-mail contracts, I believe that the real fraud, it will develop, came from the efforts of the private air-line companies that held no Government contracts but wanted to have their share of the pie or subsidies.

The newspapers have already printed articles indicatmg that selfish interests and greed of the worst kind were instrumental in causing the cancelation of the existing contracts. Captain Rickenbacker is right: Who misled the President, and what were the motives behind such traitorous actions?

Postmaster General Farley has played a most pathetic part in the whole air-mail controversy. During that tragic period when 12 Army pilots lost their lives the Postmaster General was roaming around the country in his double capacity as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, making speeches and dispensing patronage, and in his capacity as Democratic State chairman trying to take over control of the Tammany organization in New York City. What a travesty on efficient government that a Cabinet officer largely responsible for the air-mail fiasco can serenely travel about in partisan politics at a time when air-mail pilots were either giving their lives or risking them daily and nightly to deliver the Government mail. It just does not seem right that such things can be. The immediate resignation of the Postmaster General is in order, either in both of his political positions or as a member of the Cabinet responsible for the efficient handling of the mail.

The question is asked on every hand what should be done? The answer is very simple. Revoke the order to the Army Air Corps to carry the mail and return it immediately to the air-mail companies that were carrying it prior to February 9. Then, provide for a nonpartisan hearing and thorough investigation and enact legislation based upon the facts developed by such investigation.

There has been an attempt by General Foulois, Chief of the Army Air Corps, to offer alibi after alibi in defense of his assertion that the Army pilots could fly the mail routes efficiently. The fact is that General Foulois has been so wrong from the beginning of the tragic episode and his statements so prejudiced that they are not entitled to any consideration. He has to share the responsibility for the debacle, of the Army Air Corps' attempt to fly the mail, with President Roosevelt and Postmaster General Farley, and a number of subordinates who misled the President.

Major General Foulois made a partisan political radio speech several weeks ago, denouncing the critics of the administration's air policy, and saying that they did not know what they were talking about; that the Army Air Corps was highly efficient and splendidly equipped. In time of war, Army officers who commit blunders of such magnitude are relieved of their command. In time of peace they should be retired so they can do no further harm. The latest alibi of General Foulois is that the percentage of deaths of Army pilots in the last month has not been excessive. This is the last straw of misinformation. The fact is that the ratio of deaths in the Army Air Corps in the first month of operation in connection with flying the air mail, based on miles flown, as compared to miles flown by commercial air pilots for the past year is 50 to 1. If the private air-mail flyers had the same proportion of casualties it would have meant the death of 500 commercial mail pilots during the last year.

The private air-mail companies maintained a schedule of 109,000 miles per day and only eight pilots were killed throughout the year. The Army Air Corps had a schedule of 40,000 miles per day, which, however, they did not maintain. The average maintained was approximately 25,000 miles, or less than one fourth of that kept up by the private air-mail companies.

The colossal blunder of the administration's cancelation of the air-mail contracts without a hearing has shocked fair-minded Americans irrespective of party affiliations. It has caused a loss of confidence and a lightning-like change in the American public opinion. People are beginning to wonder and to ask themselves if the charges that we have an autocratic, dictatorial administration at Washington are true. That is something they had not voted for nor bargained for.

The Roosevelt honeymoon has cracked up on the cancelation of the air-mail contracts. The American people have not been accustomed in the past to a policy of repudiation of contracts or even a repudiation of party promises and pledges, nor of vindictive partisan reprisals. All of this is something new, and constitutes a radical departure from American political practices. They do not like it and openly denounce such unfair and un-American experiments. In all fairness, however, the hands of the "brain trust" are not evident in this, the first blunder of the administration. There are abundant reasons to blame the "brain trust" for many of the unworkable and socialistic experiments of the administration, where contracts have been ignored and disregarded, but in this case it is probable that the various radical experiments taken under their leadership to destroy contractual rights and constitutional liberties has become an irresistible and outrageous example which was likewise followed in the hasty and un-American cancelation of the air-mail contracts without a hearing of any kind.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and I shall object. I do not think we ought to have any speaking at this time. We have come here to act on the Consent Calendar, and we ought to proceed with our business. I object.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I reserve the right to object. On what subject?

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I have not taken any time of the House. I wish to address the House on some matters which I think concern people of the Nation. Also with reference to the activities of certain organizations and with reference to certain assertions that have been made in this House about the American Federation of Labor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, although I shall not object.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. What is the gentleman's reason?

Mr. BLANTON. I just want to find out something about the program. We have an appropriation bill that comes up next week under general debate, and there will be plenty of time allotted to Members under general debate. Cannot the gentleman get his 30 minutes' time on that?

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. I have not taken any time of the House. The gentleman has taken plenty of time.

Mr. BLANTON. Whenever I take up any time it is in the interest of and to benefit the people of the country.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. I want 30 minutes to clear up some matters and the misapprehension that has been left about the labor movement.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly, the gentleman should have time. I suggest to the gentleman that there will be general debate under the appropriation bill, where he can then get the time, if that suits him.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. I know. I asked unanimous consent to speak on Wednesday and on Thursday, and objection was made. I am not going to interfere with the business of the House.

Mr. BLANTON. I am trying to help the gentleman.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. I am as anxious to pass on the appropriations as the gentleman is.

Mr. BLANTON. Cannot the gentleman wait and get time under the appropriation bill? If that does not suit him, I have no objection to his request.

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. I have been waiting, but the gentleman never waits.

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I object.

CAMP MERRITT—WORLD WAR SHRINE

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker—

Camp Merritt, in my opinion, should be a national shrine, as troops from every State in the Union passed through it, either going over or returning from overseas. It was the greatest of our embarkation camps during the war and the busiest debarkation center following the armistice. The majority of the A.E.F. at one time or another were guests of Camp Merritt, some for days, others for weeks, according to the availability of transports.

And to the permanent garrison of Camp Merritt I should like to pay a tribute. Many of them lost their lives while performing necessary tasks on this side, not being permitted to go overseas, as their work here was considered of vast importance. They wanted to "shove off" with the thousands who left daily for "over there", but had to be contented with duty here.

These are not my words; they were written eloquently in the early part of 1932 by a great American who has endeared himself to the Nation.

A decade ago I stood in a vast throng about the monumental shaft that marks its historic site. General Pershing was there. The great embarkation camp had gone. In its place had arisen the simple granite spire which was that unveiled. Pointing heavenward, it stood as a simple reminder of the gallant and vibrant youth that passed through the camp to fight our battles overseas, of those who died that we might live, of our disabled and afflicted veterans—our living dead—of the boys who returned to us, but who, nevertheless, were ready and willing to lay down their lives for our country and for us.

This monument is the last vestige of the camp which bore the name of that distinguished soldier, Gen. Wesley Merritt, whose widow did so much to make camp life comfortable for our youthful warriors. The veteran cherishes this familiar ground. It is enshrined in the hearts of veterans. My people look upon it sacredly, grateful as we are to the legions of brave young men who remained with us a little while and then embarked overseas to defend and preserve the liberties of the world.

Is this spire, this granite shaft to be the memorial for those who consecrated this hallowed place? Or shall Camp Merritt become, as it deserves, a national shrine? Located in my district, I have felt it my duty to introduce a bill (H.R. 8139) to provide for the establishment of a national monument on the site of the great camp which has been aptly styled "The aristocrat of America's military cantonments." I urge today your support for the preservation of the situs of the foremost American encampment during the World War.

Many of you in the next few days will be passing it at no great distance when you visit many and notable points of interest in its vicinity. I wonder how many of you will pause for a moment during the trip to West Point to picture the hundreds of thousands of patriotic youth of the Nation who gathered there to take final leave of the country and their nearest and dearest to invade foreign lands making war against war; Members of this House were soldiers there. They know all that Camp Merritt meant and still means.

The camp site is situated in a region endowed with beauties of nature unsurpassed in America and abounding with legend, romantic and historic.

The camp covered a part of the ancient hunting grounds of the Lenni-Lenape, one of the Indian tribes of the Six Nations. Over it traversed the boys and men of older days in the great Revolutionary War which gave us our country.

Fort Lee, overlooking the Hudson, is not far away. Here Washington came from New York, and it is one of the earliest battlegrounds of the Revolution. Just below Fort Lee is Edgewater on the Hudson, where thousands after thousands of boys from Camp Merritt took the One hundred and thirtieth Street Ferry across the Hudson to visit New York.

Weehawken, where Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr fought their duel, is but a few miles below Fort Lee, which adjoins Cliffside Park where I live in close proximity to Palisade Amusement Park where the service men often went for recreation.

Alpine Landing is about 2 miles northeast of the camp and was one of the principal outlets of the camp when the movement of troops overseas was at its peak. During the Revolution Cornwallis crossed the Hudson from New York to the Jersey side, making his headquarters in an old Dutch house in Alpine Landing, which is still standing.

Tappan, N.Y., just across the New Jersey-New York State line, is approximately 15 miles north of the camp. It was near this place that Major Andre, the British spy, was executed for his part in Benedict Arnold's treasonable plan to surrender West Point. Andre's prison house still stands. West Point is not greatly distant to the north on the same bank of the Hudson River.

Tappan Zee, of Ichabod Crane fame, is close by Tappan, and further to the north are the Catskill Mountains that lured Rip Van Winkle. Irving immortalized the west bank of the Hudson just as he did Sleepy Hollow on the east side of the river.

A trip up or along the Hudson impresses one with the grandeur of the Palisades behind which is sheltered the great camp of the World War, a very short distance from the George Washington Bridge, which lately spanned the river to connect New Jersey and New York. The Palisades commence a little above Hoboken, the chief embarkation port during the late war, extending northward along the New Jersey bank of the Hudson, a distance of about 20 miles. In places they rise 500 to 600 feet above the river and constitute a solid wall of dark rock known the world over as one of the most picturesque objects of natural scenery. No other camp in the country was located in such a beautiful and historic locality.

It was named in honor of a great general, Wesley Merritt, a young cavalry leader developed by the Civil War. He was a product of West Point and led the charge at Beverly Ford. He rendered notable service at Gettysburg and later commanded the Cavalry operating in Virginia. He was in the Richmond campaign and commanded the first division of Sheridan's Army in the Shenandoah Valley. He was present at the surrender of Lee at Appomattox and was one of the three commissioners appointed by General Grant to carry out its terms. He was afterwards Superintendent at West Point, and General Pershing was a student for his 4 years under him. He took part in the Spanish-American War and was appointed Military Governor of the Philippines. With Admiral Dewey he received the surrender of Manila and subsequently attended the conference in Paris which arranged the treaty of peace with Spain.

The Camp Merritt Memorial Association, Inc., is keeping alive the spirit of the hallowed ground of the camp, which merits all reverence, respect, and honor. Each Memorial Day it joins with the veterans of all wars to rededicate the site and pay homage. The only memory of the camp is the lonely monument. Upon it is inscribed:

In memory of those soldiers who gave their lives for their country while on duty in Camp Merritt.

This monument marks the center of the camp and faces the highway over which more than a million American soldiers passed on their way to and from the World War, 1917–19.

Erected by the State of New Jersey, the county of Bergen, the Bergen County Historical Society, officers and men of Camp Merritt, many patriotic citizens and the Camp Merritt Memorial Association.

It stands in the middle of crossroads with no other setting. The camp lands were leased, the Government never acquired title to any of them. Surrounded by a portion of the 350 acres that constituted the camp, even though a small part, the simple shaft would have the setting it deserves and the camp itself would be preserved for posterity. There will be no more appropriate time for Congress to constitute this camp a national monument and shrine—a true permanent garrison. Shall we not pay this tribute?

Mr. FOULKES. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection to the request made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday morning after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk I be allowed to address the House for 30 minutes.

There was no objection.

CONSENT CALENDAR

SETTLEMENT OF CLAIMS OF OFFICERS AND ENLISTED MEN

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1724, providing for settlement of claims of officers and enlisted men for extra pay provided by act of January 12, 1899.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, when was this bill put on the calendar?

Mr. TARVER. I do not recall the exact date. February 2 is what is shown by the calendar.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. This is the first time this bill has appeared upon the Consent Calendar, is it not?

Mr. TARVER. May I say that when the bill was first reported to the House it was erroneously placed upon the Private Calendar, and was thereafter transferred to the Consent Calendar by direction of the Speaker.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Has the gentleman any objection to passing it over without prejudice?

Mr. TARVER. There is no possible objection that I can see that any Member could have to the passage of this bill.

May I explain to the gentleman just what the bill provides? The act of January 12, 1899, provided for the payment of 1 month's and 2 months' extra pay to men who enlisted for the period of the emergency. Thereafter, on March 2, 1899, the Congress passed an act providing for the enlistment of additional personnel, and when those men who enlisted March 2, 1899, were discharged they filed their claims for this 1 month's and 2 months' extra pay, determined by whether or not they had served at home or abroad, and their claims were denied by the Acting Comptroller of the Treasury, who construed the act of January 12, 1899, to be retroactive in operation. Thereafter, in 1904, in a case brought in the Court of Claims, that court decided that the act did not have retroactive operation alone, but that those who enlisted under the act of March 2, 1899, were entitled to this extra pay. Subsequent to that time every claim filed by any of these men has been allowed. The only claimants that have not been paid have been those whose claims had been filed first and were erroneously denied, and the Comptroller General points out in his report, which appears in the RECORD, that the only reason they could not receive their money now is the fact that they acquiesced in an erroneous decision. There is no question but that the Government of the United States owes this money to those veterans of the Philippine Insurrection and the Boxer Rebellion.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. How many men are affected under this provision?

Mr. TARVER. According to the estimate made by the Comptroller General, there are approximately 7,000. May I say to the gentleman that I have no more interest in this bill than any other Member of this House. These men are scattered throughout the United States. The bill passed the House during the last session without objection, and in view of the fact that it is admitted by everyone familiar with the facts that the Government owes this amount of money involved, I cannot conceive of any reason why anyone should object to the passage of this bill now.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection. I simply wanted to find out what the bill provided, because I had not had an opportunity to read it.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office is authorized and directed to receive and settle claims of officers and enlisted men who were appointed or enlisted in the Army under the act of March 2, 1899 (30 Stat.L. 979), for 1 or 2 months' extra pay provided by the act of January 12, 1899 (30 Stat.L. 784), notwithstanding the disallowance of their claims for such extra pay by the former accounting officers of the Treasury.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the figures, insert " as amended."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MEDICAL SERVICES AFTER RETIREMENT OF FORMER EMPLOYEES OF UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1766, to provide medical services after retirement on annuity to former employees of the United States disabled by injuries sustained in the performance of their duties.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended (U.S.C., supp. V, title 5, sec. 759), is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new paragraph to read as follows:

"All of the benefits authorized to be extended by the first paragraph of this section to employees suffering personal injuries shall be made available to any person who receives or may hereafter receive an annuity under the provisions of the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930 (U.S.C., supp. V, title 5, ch. 14), and who continues to be or becomes disabled as the result of a personal injury sustained while in the performance of his duty as an employee. This paragraph shall apply only to persons who would have been entitled to the benefits provided by such first paragraph if they had continued in the employment of the United States or the District of Columbia."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EAST BAY MUNICIPAL UTILITY DISTRICT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 6530, granting and confirming to the East Bay Municipal Utility District, a municipal utility district of the State of California and a body corporate and politic of said State and a political subdivision thereof, certain lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL TECHNICAL COMMITTEE OF AERIAL LEGAL EXPERTS

The Clerk called the resolution (H.J.Res. 271) providing for an annual appropriation to meet the quota of the United States toward the expenses of the International Technical Committee of Aerial Legal Experts.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill makes permanent an annual appropriation. Unless it is amended so that it is an authorization of an appropriation, I shall have to object.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the bill just authorizes an appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a bad bill anyway. I object.

CLAIMS OF OMAHA TRIBE OF INDIANS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5881, to investigate the claims of and to enroll certain persons, if entitled, with the Omaha Tribe of Indians.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Reserving the right to object, this is the famous Count Barada bill. I should like to ask the author of the bill some questions about it. Why have not these Indians long since been recognized? They are claiming recognition.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The gentleman is inquiring about the Omaha Tribe of Indians?

Mr. ELTSE of California. That is right.

Mr. CHAVEZ. These Indians are in the district of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HOWARD]. It appears that for some reason or other Indians—not necessarily Indians, no, because they are not Indians——

Mr. ELTSE of California. They are not Indians?

Mr. MOREHEAD. They are half-bloods.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MOREHEAD] will be able to explain it, for he knows the conditions.

Mr. TABER. Is not this the bill that was beaten on a suspension of the rules awhile ago?

Mr. MOREHEAD. It was on the calendar 10 days or more ago.

Mr. CHAVEZ. It was passed over without prejudice, I think.

Mr. MOREHEAD. There was one objector in order to secure further information. If the gentleman will permit, I will give a little of the history of this case.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall object unless I am furnished some better reason than we had the other day.

Mr. MOREHEAD. I have known the claimants for 48 years. There were certain customs practiced on these reservations at that time and they did certain things for the Indians, and it was necessary for the agent to be favorable to the claimants if they secure their rights.

I am not the author of the bill, but I have an acquaintance with these people and am familiar with the history of the case. I have an explanatory statement here which I will read, if I have sufficient time:

Antoine Barada was an Omaha Indian of the half blood, and he had two full sisters, Margaret Sloan and Mary Jane Paul. They were enrolled, recognized members of the Omaha Tribe, and paid annuities in common with other members, there being no distinction in membership as to whole- or mixed-blood Indians.

Antoine Cabney, oldest child and son of Mary Jane Paul, was sent to school at St. Louis, where he developed into a steamboat engineer. His employment kept him away from the Indian reservation. His children were born and lived away from the Indian country, and not any of them were living on the Omaha Reservation in 1865 or 1882 or during the allotment period. He was an allottee on the Half-breed Indian Reservation, was allotted on the Omaha Reservation, and all his descendants who were born in time to have allotments, which included grandchildren. His wife, a white woman, Anna Cabney, was allotted as an Indian, although she was not a resident on the reservation in the year 1882 or the following year. His grandchildren were one sixteenth Indian.

The family of Amelia Campbell were situated the same as the Cabney family, and all were allotted.

The same is true of the large family of Theresa Fuller; not one of them ever lived upon the Omaha Reservation or had a home there, still they were all allotted.

Joseph LaFlesche, who was one of the chiefs who signed the treaty of 1865, was a half-blood Ponca and French; he was married to an Omaha Indian woman. He caused the insertion of the clause "including their half- or mixed-blood relatives now residing with them", for the purpose of extending the benefits of that treaty to himself and children, some of whom were not of Omaha Indian blood. This clause was intended to be inclusive, but was construed the other way.

Antoine Barada kept up his contact with the Omaha Tribe of Indians, and the older chiefs all knew him, and his family was enrolled and received annuities. In the earlier days of payments under the treaties the money was turned over to the chiefs, and the chief of the band to which Antoine Barada belonged always paid him the shares that belonged to his family. As such payments were occasions for visiting and feasting, scattered Omaha Indians came to the payments at their own agencies if it was possible. But often the chief used to send the money to the Barada family.

Later a rule was made, without authority of law, that payments were not made to any who did not come to the reservation. This was done to force roving bands, some of whom were hunting or trapping, to return to the reservation. It was a means of settlers getting Indians out of the way and securing their camping and hunting grounds. As mixed bloods were usually farmers, and if located at a distance they could not readily return to the reservation, and the white officials did not know them nor about them and made up the rolls excluding all who were not on the reservation. In that way many names were lost and contact broken. But that rule was not applied to the Cabneys, nor the Fullers, nor to the Campbells, and many others. There was an entire lack of consistency in applying the rules, and as rules they should have been consistently applied. They were not. The result that Thomas Barada was born and raised an Indian in the Indian country was denied, while relatives with only one fourth as much Indian blood as he, and never a resident in the Indian country, were accepted and allotted and paid all shares of moneys paid to the tribe.

The same blooded relations were allotted lands, and the children received the same recognition. The intent and purpose of this bill is to have these people enrolled just as members or relatives of their own family have been enrolled, although I cannot say that it would not be an expense in course of time.

It is not a matter of history but it was a practice that when any of the tribal relatives came there to settle on the land, they always furnished a feast for the Indians. The agent at that time on the reservation made an unfavorable report as the heads of these families refused to comply with the customs previously established. I knew these heads of families personally and they had ideas of their own; and they were kept off the rolls for not complying with this established custom.

Mr. ELTSE of California. But it is a fact, is it not, they are not permitted to have any claim on tribal lands or to share in any of the money?

Mr. MOREHEAD. None whatever.

Mr. ELTSE of California. And is it not a fact also that these very Indians named here by name have interbred with the whites and are now pretty well removed so far as their Indian blood is concerned? Is it not a fact they are pretty well removed from Indian blood at the present time?

Mr. MOREHEAD. Like most Indians, they have married and intermarried. I live in southeast Nebraska. Back in the early days the Indians in that part of the country intermarried with the whites.

Mr. ELTSE of California. But is it not true that they have so intermarried with the whites that they have practically pulled away from the Indians; that they felt that the Indians were not good enough for them?

Mr. MOREHEAD. No; they are living among them. The lady who is here looking after this claim is a woman 60 years of age.

Mr. TABER. Does this bill give them some claim against the Government?

Mr. MOREHEAD. No; I understand not.

Mr. HOWARD. It is for an investigation only. They can have no claim whatever against the Government unless the Secretary of the Interior shall discover as a result of his investigations that they are entitled to it.

Now, I shall thank the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from California if they will permit me to supplement what my colleague has said in this regard by just calling attention to one paragraph in the Secretary's report which is not friendly to the legislation. That paragraph calls our attention to the case of Sloan v. United States (118 Fed. 283), which goes fully into the facts, and so forth. In that case Thomas Sloan, a man of half Indian blood and a learned man among the Indians, bore exactly the same relation to the roll as do the people whose names are mentioned in this bill. Sloan was admitted to the roll and enjoys all the benefits of that enrollment at the present time.

I may say to the gentleman from New York that I am personally acquainted with the fact and I may say to the gentleman that I know of my own personal knowledge that Mrs. Mitchell, her children, and her grandchildren are recognized as members of the tribe and have always participated in every tribal function which went to the benefit of any member of the tribe.

Mr. TABER. Why were they not enrolled before?

Mr. HOWARD. For the reasons we tried to state, but have not had an opportunity to explain all of them.

In the early days enrollment commissioners did not at all understand the Indians. There were men and women commissioners who were not competent to understand, and somehow or other they became inflamed against a certain branch of this family or that family. One certain enrollment commissioner did that. For this reason these people, who had lived on their allotment for 8 or 10 years, were absolutely dispossessed of their possessions after they had held them through all these years. If we had time we could explain, but we cannot in a legislative program of this kind go into minute detail; but I beg of you gentlemen to accept the word of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MOREHEAD] and myself for the fact that these people are in fact members of the Omaha Tribe and recognized as such by the Omaha tribal council, and have been for years.

Mr. TABER. How big an appropriation will be required under this bill?

Mr. HOWARD. Indeed, I have never figured on it at all.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. TABER, Mr. WOLCOTT, and Mr. ELTSE of California objected.

EXAMINATION OF OGEECHEE RIVER, STATE OF GEORGIA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7793, authorizing a preliminary examination of the Ogeechee River in the State of Georgia, with a view to controlling of floods.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this seems to be a departure from the procedure which has been formerly followed with reference to these bills. I have been told by older Members of the House that this is about the first time a bill of this nature has been reported out of the Flood Control Committee. It seems to me that we should protect the integrity and jurisdiction of our several legislative committees, and if this is within the province of the Rivers and Harbors Committee they should take and maintain jurisdiction over this class of legislation. Of course, I know that the Rivers and Harbors Committee do not think it advisable, or the leaders, or someone at least, does not think it is advisable to report out a rivers and harbors bill. I am constrained to object for the reason that the Rivers and Harbors Committee should have jurisdiction of this bill.

Mr. PARKER. I may say to the gentleman that the Rivers and Harbors Committee, on which I hold membership the same as the Flood Control Committee, has reported a bill at this session of Congress, and it does not include this kind of measure.

Mr. WILSON. May I give the gentleman some information?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Just a moment. I am under the impression that no river and harbor bill, as we generally consider it, has been reported out of the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Mr. PARKER. It has already been reported.

Mr. WOLCOTT. May I ask the gentleman to give me the number, and the calendar number if it is on the calendar? I should like to refer to it, because I have been told we could not expect a river and harbor bill at this session of Congress.

Mr. WILSON. It is here.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I should like to give the gentleman some information.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I will have to object, Mr. Speaker, if the regular order is demanded.

I have asked unanimous consent that this be passed over without prejudice in order to give us a little time to study the matter.

Mr. WILSON. I should be glad to give the gentleman some information now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to passing the bill over without prejudice?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I give the gentleman some information? There have been many surveys made for flood control and we have passed many bills too where preliminary examinations have been made. Where flood control is the chief object we have passed bills authorizing a complete survey through the engineers of the Army as especially provided in the Flood Control Act. The Rivers and Harbors Committee does not ask for jurisdiction of matters of this kind. The Flood Control Act especially authorizes these preliminary examinations in order to find out the feasibility of adopting certain flood-control projects.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I renew my unanimous-consent request that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Speaker, I object. Let them kill the bill if they want to.

Mr. TABER, Mr. ELTSE of California, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected.

DONATION OF LAND TO THE TOWN OF BOURNE, MASS.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 503, to authorize the donation of certain land to the town of Bourne, Mass.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to convey without charge to the town of Bourne, Mass., for school playground purposes, two small parcels of land aggregating about six tenths of an acre located in the vicinity of the Bourne Grammar School in said town, which land was acquired by the United States in connection with the acquisition of the Cape Cod Canal: Provided, That such conveyance shall be made with the express condition that the land shall be used for school playground purposes and no other, and that in case it is not so used it shall revert to the United States.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WELFARE OF THE INDIANS

The Clerk called the next resolution, H.J.Res. 257, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to arrange with the several States or Territories for the education, medical attention, relief of distress, and social welfare of the Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand from the author of the bill that it is agreeable to accept an amendment to the bill, to be known as section 5, to the effect that the provisions of the bill shall not apply to the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, the Senate has passed an identical bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the Senate bill be substituted for the House measure. The Senate bill is on the Speaker's desk.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the substitution of the Senate bill, S. 2571?

There was no objection.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to enter into a contract or contracts with any State or Territory having legal authority so to do, for the education, medical attention, agricultural assistance, and social welfare, including relief of distress, of Indians in such State or Territory, through the qualified agencies of such State or Territory, and to expend under such contract or contracts moneys appropriated by Congress for the education, medical attention, agricultural assistance, and social welfare, including relief of distress, of Indians in such State.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior, in making any contract herein authorized with any State or Territory, may permit such State to utilize for the purpose of this act, existing school buildings, hospitals, and other facilities, and all equipment therein or appertaining thereto, including livestock and other personal property owned by the Government, under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon for their use and maintenance.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to perform any and all acts and to make such rules and regulations, including minimum standards of service, as may be necessary and proper for the purpose of carrying the provisions of this act into effect: Provided, That such minimum standards of service are not less than the highest maintained by the States or Territories with which said contract or contracts, as herein provided, are executed.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior shall report annually to the Congress any contract or contracts made under the provisions of this act, and the moneys expended thereunder.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I shall continue to reserve the right to object for the purpose of asking the author of the bill if it is agreeable to accept this amendment.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, the amendment proposes to exempt the State of Oklahoma from the application of this bill. If the amendment does only that, I am willing to accept it rather than have the gentleman from Oklahoma object to the consideration of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HASTINGS: On page 2, at the end of the bill, add a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to the State of Oklahoma."

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma what is the reason for exempting Oklahoma and not every other State that has a number of Indians?

Mr. HASTINGS. I did not want to take up the time of the House for the purpose of discussing the bill——

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman please, I do not wish to have him discuss it, if he will just answer my question.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the objection stage has been passed and the gentleman from Oklahoma is now offering an amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. No; I reserved the right to object.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman's amendment is before the House and the bill has passed the objection stage.

Mr. HASTINGS. There is no objection to the amendment, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 5 minutes on the amendment.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] was on his feet trying to get recognition.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will take a moment of his 5 minutes, that will be enough for me.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is what I intended to do.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a reservation of objection is not in order at this time. It is a question of the consideration of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HASTINGS]. The bill has passed the objection stage.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have already withdrawn the reservation of objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is nothing to withdraw.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is correct. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 5 minutes on his amendment.

Mr. HASTINGS. The amendment was accepted by the author of the bill, and I did not care to discuss it except to answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Oregon. If the gentleman from Oregon does not want any further explanation, and if no one else wants any further explanation, and if I am assured the amendment is acceptable, I do not care to take up the time of the House.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, I am willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman from Oregon does want information on the point I asked the gentleman about.

Mr. HASTINGS. I may state, briefly, we have five or six Indian agencies in the State of Oklahoma. They have representatives scattered throughout every county and every subdivision of the State, and I think the Indian Service is better equipped to render this service to the Indians than my State. I know that my State is not equipped to render this service as efficiently or as adequately or as sympathetically as the Indian Service, and for this reason I have asked that the State of Oklahoma be excepted.

Mr. MOTT. If the gentleman will yield for another question, does the gentleman think the enactment of this bill would in anywise interfere with the nonreservation Indian boarding schools and the appropriations made from time to time for these schools?

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not believe it would. I do not believe it was intended to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman does not want to take any chances on it.

Mr. HASTINGS. I do not want to take any chances so far as my State of Oklahoma is concerned, and I am willing that the rest of you shall accept the responsibility so far as your States are concerned.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIMOND: On page 2, line 3, after the word "State", insert "or Territory."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House joint resolution (H.R.Res. 257) was laid on the table.

REVISION OF THE BOUNDARIES OF THE FREMONT NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 4934, to authorize the revision of the boundaries of the Fremont National Forest in the State of Oregon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Reserving the right to object, I should like to have the gentleman from Oregon explain whether it is contemplated to take any private lands?

Mr. PIERCE. This is the national forest southeast of Oregon. The object is to take up forest reserves that are very jagged, which were laid out in an early day. Much land was left out and is in the public domain. The object is to take in many of these tracts. It will cut down the boundary line from 1,200 miles to 600 miles. It will take in something like 200,000 acres of land that is now in the public domain.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The report says "not to exceed 250,000 acres of public lands." The bill provides for taking such lands without specifying the amount. My point was whether it is necessary for park services to acquire private lands.

Mr. PIERCE. No; it is public land, and there will be no expense to it, and it would be administered much cheaper than it is now.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I notice on the first page of the report it says "subject to valid existing claims." What does that mean?

Mr. PIERCE. If a person has land that they do not want included, it will not be.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I thought the gentleman said it was all public domain.

Mr. PIERCE. Some people might want to trade it in.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then it is possible we are acquiring some private lands.

Mr. PIERCE. No; not in the least.

There being no objection, the Clerk read a similar Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1983

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized to revise the boundaries of the Fremont National Forest in the State of Oregon so as to include within that national forest, subject to valid existing claims, such lands within the State of Oregon as he considers desirable for the production of timber, the protection of stream flow, and/or the regulation and improvement of the grazing resources: Provided, That the boundaries of said national forest shall not be extended more than 6 miles from the present boundaries thereof or from the north boundary of the Modoc National Forest: And provided further, That the lands of the United States which may be given a national-forest status under the provisions of this act shall not exceed 250,000 acres. All lands included within the boundaries of the Fremont National Forest under authority of this act shall thereupon become subject to all laws relating to the national forests.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill was laid on the table.

BOUNDARY LINES OF THE CHIPPEWA INDIAN TERRITORY, STATE OF MINNESOTA

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 7549, to establish the boundary lines of the Chippewa Indian territory in the State of Minnesota.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the passage of this act the territory in Minnesota to be considered as Indian-treaty territory under provisions of article 7 of the treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat.L. 1109), between the United States and the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior, and article 7 of the treaty of February 22, 1855 (10 Stat.L. 1165–1169), between the United States and the Mississippi Bands of Chippewa Indians shall be reduced to the territory within the boundaries described as follows:

Beginning at the northwest corner of township 154 north, range 38 west, fifth principal meridian, in Minnesota; thence east along the township line between townships 154 and 155 to its intersection with the north shore of Upper Red Lake; thence easterly along the north shore of Upper Red Lake to a point due north of the northeast corner of lot 4, section 23, township 153 north, range 32 west; thence due south to the northeast corner of lot 4, section 23, township 153 north, range 32 west; thence continuing due south to the southeast corner of lot 7, section 22, township 152 north, range 32 west; thence southwest to the southern point of lot 2, section 34, township 152 north, range 32 west; thence south to the southeast corner of section 21, township 151 north, range 32 west; thence west to the northeast corner of lot 1, section 30, township 151 north, range 32 west; thence south to the southeast corner of lot 7, section 18, township 150 north, range 32 west; thence due west to the Clearwater River; thence northwesterly along the Clearwater River to the range line between township 151 north, ranges 38 and 39 west; thence north along said range line to the point of beginning.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That on and after the passage of this act lands in Minnesota ceded to the United States by the treaty of September 30, 1854 (10 Stat.L. 1109), between the United States and the Chippewa Indians of Lake Superior and the Mississippi, and by the treaty of February 22, 1855 (10 Stat.L. 1165), between the United States and the Mississippi Bands of Chippewa Indians, shall no longer be considered as 'Indian country' for the purposes of articles 7 of said treaties: Provided, That the Indian liquor laws shall continue to be in force on all Indian reservations or other lands owned or hereafter acquired by Indian tribes, or by the United States Government for the use or benefit of Indians or for the administration of Indian affairs; on individual Indian allotments or other individual Indian-owned lands while the title to same is held in trust by the United States, or while the same shall remain inalienable by the Indian without the consent of some governmental officer; and on all other lands within the exterior borders of Indian reservations: Provided further, That the Indian liquor laws shall continue to apply to the sale, gift, barter, exchange, etc., of liquors to ward Indians of the classes set forth in the act of January 30, 1897 (29 Stat.L. 506)."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The title was amended.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALASKAN FISHERIES LEGISLATION

The Clerk read the title of the next bill on the calendar, H.R. 6175, to amend an act entitled "An act to amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska', approved June 26, 1906, as amended by the act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask that a similar Senate bill on the calendar be substituted, S. 3022.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska", approved June 26, 1906, as amended by the act of Congress entitled "An act for the protection of the fisheries of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved June 6, 1924, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. For the purposes of this section, the mouth of such creek, stream, or river shall be taken to be the point determined as such mouth by the Secretary of Commerce and marked in accordance with this determination. It shall be unlawful to lay or set any seine or net of any kind within 100 yards of any other seine, net, or other fishing appliance which is being or which has been laid or set in any of the waters of Alaska, or to drive or to construct any trap or other fixed fishing appliance within 600 yards laterally or within 100 yards endwise of any other trap or fixed fishing appliance."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLAND. Now I move to amend the title so as to read: "To amend sections 3 and 4 of an act of Congress entitled 'An act for the protection and regulation of the fisheries of Alaska', approved June 26, 1906, as amended by act of Congress approved June 6, 1924, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

TRANSFERRING CERTAIN LANDS FROM UNITED STATES TO WILMINGTON, DEL., ETC.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7423, providing for the transfer of certain lands from the United States to the city of Wilmington, Del., and from the city of Wilmington, Del., to the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to convey to the mayor and council of Wilmington, a municipal corporation of the State of Delaware, for street purposes only, all the right, title, and interest of the United States to the following-described parcels of land which form a part of the new post-office site at Wilmington, Del.:

Tract 1. Beginning at the intersection of the southeasterly side of Market Street at 65 feet 6 inches wide and the northeasterly side of Eleventh Street at 69 feet wide; thence northeasterly along the said side of Market Street 265 feet 3 inches to the southwesterly side of Twelfth Street at 85 feet wide; thence southeasterly along the said side of Twelfth Street 10 feet 6 inches to a point; thence southwesterly parallel to Market Street 265 feet 3 inches to the first-mentioned northeasterly side of Eleventh Street; thence thereby northwesterly 10 feet 6 inches to the place of beginning, containing therein approximately 2,782 square feet.

Tract 2. Beginning at a point on the northeasterly side of Eleventh Street at 69 feet wide distant 10 feet 6 inches southeasterly from the southeasterly side of Market Street at 65 feet 6 inches wide; thence southeasterly along the said side of Eleventh Street 200 feet to the northwesterly side of King Street at 65 feet 6 inches wide; thence northeasterly along the last-mentioned side of King Street 18 feet to a point; thence northwesterly parallel to Eleventh Street 200 feet to a point distant 10 feet 6 inches southeasterly from the southeasterly side of Market Street at 65 feet 6 inches wide; thence southwesterly parallel to Market Street 18 feet to the place of beginning, containing therein approximately 3,600 square feet, in consideration of the conveyance by the mayor and council of Wilmington, a municipal corporation of the State of Delaware, to the United States of a valid title in and to the following-described parcel of land as an addition to the aforesaid post-office site:

Beginning at intersection of the northwesterly side of King Street (at 65 feet 6 inches wide) and the southwesterly side of Twelfth Street (as the same is at present established at 85 feet in width); thence northwesterly along the last-mentioned side of Twelfth Street 200 feet to a point distant 10 feet 6 inches southeasterly from the southeasterly side of Market Street as the same is at present established at 65 feet 6 inches in width; thence northeasterly parallel to Market Street 32 feet to a point; thence southeasterly parallel to the first-mentioned side of Twelfth Street 200 feet to the northwesterly side of King Street extended; thence thereby southwesterly 32 feet to the place of beginning.

Provided, however, That there shall be reserved to the United States an easement in perpetuity to construct and maintain a coal pit approximately 12 feet wide extending under the sidewalk in the 18-foot strip of land under Eleventh Street to be conveyed to the mayor and council of Wilmington, a municipal corporation of the State of Delaware, from a point approximately 16½ feet southeasterly from the southeasterly side of Market Street in a southeasterly direction a distance of approximately 50 feet.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS COLUMBIA RIVER, ASTORIA, OREG.

The Clerk again called the bill S. 2545, to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT] has agreed to offer an amendment to this bill placing authority to construct the bridge in the county or State, and with that assurance I have no objection.

Mr. MOTT. That is correct. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment which I think will satisfy the objection of the gentleman from Missouri and which I am sure will clarify the intent of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Acting Secretary, in his report, reported unfavorably, and I think some explanation should be made by the committee why it reported the bill out favorably in the face of an unfavorable report from Mr. Tugwell. Mr. Tugwell, in his report, sets forth:

> When the original bill was pending to authorize Mr. Tenbrook to construct this bridge, this Department advised your committee that it was the view of the Department that a private toll bridge should not be constructed at the point proposed, for which reason recommendation against favorable action on the bill was made. However, the authority was granted, and almost 4 years have elapsed, and apparently Mr. Tenbrook has been unable to arrange for the construction of the bridge. It is not believed that he is entitled to the further time extensions which the pending bill proposes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes.

Mr. MOTT. The reason for the unfavorable report of the Acting Secretary of Agriculture is because that report was made on the original bill, and there was nothing in the wording of the bill to indicate that the bridge was ultimately to become public property. This is in reality entirely a public project and is to be built under the authority of a public body, as the clarifying amendment I have offered states. The people interested are the people of the county of Clatsop, in Oregon; the city of Astoria, Oreg.; and the county of Pacific, in Washington. In a technical sense the bridge will actually be built by a private corporation consisting of a number of citizens of my State, who in the public interest have associated themselves together for the purpose of accomplishing the building of the bridge and operating it without profit to themselves until it is paid for. They are merely a holding company and hold the title to the bridge virtually as trustees for the counties of Clatsop and Wahkiakum and the city of Astoria; and the trust agreement provides that the title to the bridge shall be transferred to those public bodies when, through the tolls charged, the cost of the bridge shall have been liquidated, and that no profit whatever shall be made by the holding company.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In view of the gentleman's statement, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. MOTT. I thank the gentleman, and I now wish to state that I intend to withdraw objection to all the bridge bills to which I objected on yesterday's calendar following the exchange of views between the gentleman from Missouri and myself on the floor yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the Columbia River at or near Astoria, Oreg., authorized to be built by J. C. Tenbrook, as mayor of Astoria, Oreg., his successors in office and assigns, by an act of Congress approved June 10, 1930, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from February 9, 1934.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the figures "1934", strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "and said act is hereby amended by striking out the words 'J. C. Tenbrook, as mayor of Astoria, Oreg.', wherever they appear in act and by inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"'The county court of Clatsop County, Oreg.: Provided, That the Rivers Improvement Corporation (an Oregon corporation), assignee of the right to build such bridge under such act, and organized solely to construct such bridge for the public, shall contract to transfer such bridge upon the liquidation of all costs or obligations with respect to the construction thereof to the county of Clatsop, Oreg., city of Astoria, Oreg., and/or Pacific County, Wash., as may be agreed among them, without profit to said Rivers Improvement Corporation, and without cost to such public bodies, in such manner as will not involve such public bodies as the holder or owner of any stock in any association, joint-stock company, or corporation.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

THE ASTORIA BRIDGE BILL IS PASSED

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS OHIO RIVER AT CAIRO, ILL.

The Clerk read the next bill, S. 2675, creating the Cairo Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Ohio River at or near Cairo, Ill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Reserving the right to object, what has happened with the authority that was given to the Kentucky Highway Commission to build this bridge?

Mr. KELLER. The Kentucky Highway Commission has announced that they will not build the bridge, and they are perfectly willing for us to do it.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman a question. Yesterday this bill came up and it was proposed that the bill be amended to withdraw these bonds from the tax-exemption privilege.

Mr. KELLER. I have talked that over with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], and I call attention to this fact, that this is simply a rewriting, word for word, with the exception of one word, and that applying to the difference in time, 40 years instead of 30 years, of a bill passed for the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], at the last session, covering a bridge at Ogdensburg, N.Y. The bills are word for word. As I understand it, there are three bills of this kind only. They go out and get the money themselves and build the bridge and turn it back to the people when the tolls have paid for it.

Mr. ELTSE of California. The Department points out that there has not been any renouncement by the Kentucky Highway Commission, and that there should be a renouncement of the right to build under the other permit.

Mr. KELLER. The Kentucky Highway Commission has stated time after time that they were not in a position to build it and were not going to build it.

The Kentucky Highway Commission expects to come in under a part of this by preparing the approaches for the bridge.

They are heartily and enthusiastically in favor of this bill.

Mr. ELTSE of California. This provides for 6-percent interest, and the bonds are redeemed at 105. Does the gentleman not think that is rather a heavy rate of interest?

Mr. KELLER. That is something that came up when the Snell bill came before this House, and that was thrashed out, and the view expressed was this, that where you are undertaking this new thing you have to allow a great deal of liberality along those lines. So that was granted.

Mr. ELTSE of California. What is the necessity of setting up a commission to build this bridge?

Mr. KELLER. What was the necessity under the Snell bill? The same as under this. As I understand, it is the regular policy.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, our friend from Washington should let the gentleman from Illinois explain the philosophic and the economic phases of this bill before he demands the regular order.

Mr. ELTSE of California. What is the necessity of setting up a commission? It provides for salaries, and so on.

Mr. KELLER. There is no other way of doing it, that I know of, because in this place where we are undertaking to go out and raise the capital and do the work, no man is going to devote his entire time to that for nothing. That is not the custom under this sort of a bill.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Cairo Bridge Commission (hereinafter created, and hereinafter referred to as the "commission") and its successors and assigns, be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Ohio River at or near the city of Cairo, Ill., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act. For like purposes said commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to purchase, maintain, and operate all or any ferries across the Ohio and/or Mississippi Rivers within 10 miles of the location which shall be selected for said bridge, subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the commission and its successors and assigns the right and power to enter upon such lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use such real estate and other property in the State of Illinois and the Commonwealth of Kentucky as may be needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of the State in which such real estate or other property is situated, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation of private property for public purposes in said States, respectively.

SEC. 3. The commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to fix and charge tolls for transit over such bridge and such ferry or ferries in accordanc with the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. The commission and its successors and assigns are hereby authorized to provide for the payment of the cost of the bridge and its approaches and the ferry or ferries and the necessary lands, easements, and appurtenances thereto by an issue or issues of negotiable bonds of the commission, bearing interest at not more than 6 percent per annum, the principal and interest of which bonds and any premium to be paid for retirement thereof before maturity shall be payable solely from the sinking fund provided in accordance with this act. Such bonds may be registrable as to principal alone or both principal and interest, shall be in such form not inconsistent with this act, shall mature at such time or times not exceeding 40 years from their respective dates, shall be in such denominations, shall be executed in such manner, and shall be payable in such medium and at such place or places as the commission may determine. The commission may repurchase and may reserve the right to redeem all or any of said bonds before maturity in such manner and at such price or prices, not exceeding 105 and accrued interest, as may be fixed by the commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. The commission may enter into an agreement with any bank or trust company in the United States as trustee having the power to make such agreement, setting forth the duties of the commission in respect of the construction, maintenance, operation, repair, and insurance of the bridge and/or the ferry or ferries, the conservation and application of all funds, the safeguarding of moneys on hand or on deposit, and the rights and remedies of said trustee and the holders of the bonds, restricting the individual right of action of the bondholders as is customary in trust agreements respecting bonds of corporations. Such trust agreement may contain such provisions for protecting and enforcing the rights and remedies of the trustee and the bondholders as may be reasonable and proper and not inconsistent with the law and also provisions for approval by the original purchasers of the bonds of the employment of consulting engineers and of the security given by the bridge contractors and by any bank or trust company in which the proceeds of bonds or of bridge or ferry tolls or other moneys of the commission shall be deposited, and may provide that no contract for construction shall be made without the approval of the consulting engineers. The bridge constructed under the authority of this act shall be deemed to be an instrumentality for interstate commerce, the Postal Service, and military and other purposes authorized by the Government of the United States, and said bridge and ferry or ferries and the bonds issued in connection therewith and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from all Federal, State, municipal, and local taxation. Said bonds shall be sold in such manner and at such time or times and at such price as the commission may determine, but no such sale shall be made at a price so low as to require the payment of more than 6-percent interest on the money received therefor, computed with relation to the absolute maturity of the bonds in accordance with standard tables of bond values and the face amount thereof shall be so calculated as to produce, at the price of their sale, the cost of the bridge and its approaches, and the land, easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith and, in the event the ferry or ferries are to be acquired, also the cost of such ferry or ferries and the lands, easements, and appurtenances used in connection therewith. The cost of the bridge and ferry or ferries shall be deemed to include interest during construction of the bridge, and for 12 months thereafter, and all engineering, legal, architectural, traffic-surveying, and other expenses incident to the construction of the bridge or the acquisition of the ferry or ferries, and the acquisition of the necessary property, and incident to the financing thereof, including the cost of acquiring existing franchises, rights, plans, and works of and relating to the bridge, now owned by any person, firm, or corporation, and the cost of purchasing all or any part of the shares of stock of any such corporate owner if, in the judgment of the commission, such purchases should be found expedient. If the proceeds of the bonds issued shall exceed the cost as finally determined, the excess shall be placed in the sinking fund hereinafter provided. Prior to the preparation of definitive bonds the commission may, under like restrictions, issue temporary bonds or interim certificates with or without coupons of any denomination whatsoever, exchangeable for definitive bonds when such bonds have been executed and are available for delivery.

SEC. 5. In fixing the rates of toll to be charged for the use of such bridge, the same shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund sufficient to pay for the reasonable cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the bridge and its approaches under economical management, and to provide a sinking fund sufficient to pay the principal and interest of such bonds as the same shall fall due and the redemption or repurchase price of all or any thereof redeemed or repurchased before maturity as herein provided. All tolls and other revenues from said bridge are hereby pledged to such uses and to the application thereof as hereinafter in this section required. After payment or provision for payment therefrom of all such cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating and the reservation of an amount of money estimated to be sufficient for the same purpose during an ensuing period of not more than 6 months, the remainder of tolls collected shall be placed in the sinking fund, at intervals to be determined by the commission prior to the issuance of the bonds. An accurate record of the cost of the bridge and its approaches, the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and of the daily tolls collected, shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested. The commission shall classify in a reasonable way all traffic over the bridge, so that the tolls shall be so fixed and adjusted by it as to be uniform in the application thereof to all traffic falling within any such reasonable class, regardless of the status or character of any person, firm, or corporation participating in such traffic, and shall prevent all use of such bridge for traffic except upon payment of the tolls so fixed and adjusted. No toll shall be charged officials or employees of the commission or of the Government of the United States or any State, county, or municipality in the United States while in the discharge of their duties or municipal police or fire departments when engaged in the proper work of any such department.

SEC. 6. Nothing herein contained shall require the commission or its successors to maintain or operate any ferry or ferries purchased hereunder, but in the discretion of the commission or its successors any ferry or ferries so purchased, with the appurtenances and property thereto connected and belonging, may be sold or otherwise disposed of or may be abandoned and/or dismantled whenever in the judgment of the commission or its successors it may seem expedient so to do. The commission and its successors may fix such rates of toll for the use of such ferry or ferries as it may deem proper, subject to the same conditions as are hereinabove required as to tolls for traffic over the bridge. All tolls collected for the use of the ferry or ferries and the proceeds of any sale or disposition of any ferry or ferries shall be used, so far as may be necessary, to pay the cost of maintaining, repairing, and operating the same, and any residue thereof shall be paid into the sinking fund hereinabove provided for bonds. An accurate record of the cost of purchasing the ferry or ferries; the expenditures for maintaining, repairing, and operating the same; and of the daily tolls collected shall be kept and shall be available for the information of all persons interested.

SEC. 7. After payment of the bonds and interest, or after a sinking fund sufficient for such payment shall have been provided and shall be held for that purpose, the commission shall deliver deeds or other suitable instruments of conveyance of the interest of the commission in and to the bridge, that part within Illinois to the State of Illinois or any municipality or agency thereof as may be authorized by or pursuant to law to accept the same (hereinafter referred to as the "Illinois" interests) and that part within Kentucky to the Commonwealth of Kentucky or any municipality or agency thereof as may be authorized by or pursuant to law to accept the same (hereinafter referred to as the "Kentucky" interests), under the condition that the bridge shall thereafter be free of tolls and be properly maintained, operated, and repaired by the Illinois interests and the Kentucky interests, as may be agreed upon; but if either the Illinois interests or the Kentucky interests shall not be authorized to accept or shall not accept the same under such conditions, then the bridge shall continue to be owned, maintained, operated, and repaired by the commission, and the rates of tolls shall be so adjusted as to provide a fund of not to exceed the amount necessary for the proper maintenance, repair, and operation of the bridge and its approaches under economical management, until such time as both the Illinois interests and the Kentucky interests shall be authorized to accept and shall accept such conveyance under such conditions. If at the time of such conveyance the commission or its successors shall not have disposed of such ferry or ferries, the same shall be disposed of by sale as soon as practicable, at such price and upon such terms as the commission or its successors may determine.

SEC. 8. For the purpose of carrying into effect the objects stated in this act, there is hereby created the Cairo Bridge Commission, and by that name, style, and title said body shall have perpetual succession; may contract and be contracted with, sue and be sued, implead and be impleaded, complain, and defend in all courts of law and equity; may make and have a common seal; may purchase or otherwise acquire and hold or dispose of real estate and other property; may accept and receive donations or gifts of money or other property and apply same to the purposes of this act; and shall have and possess all powers necessary, convenient, or proper for carrying into effect the objects stated in this act.

The commission shall consist of James S. Johnson, John C. Fisher, Reed Green, and Ray Williams, of the city of Cairo, Ill., and M. C. Anderson, of Ballard County, Ky. Such commission shall be a body corporate and politic. Each member of the commission shall qualify within 30 days after the approval of this act by filing in the office of the Secretary of Agriculture an oath that he will faithfully perform the duties imposed upon him by this act, and each person appointed to fill a vacancy shall qualify in like manner within 30 days after his appointment. Any vacancy occurring in said commission by reason of failure to qualify as above provided, or by reason of death or resignation, shall be filled by the Secretary of Agriculture. Before the issuance of bonds as hereinabove provided, each member of the commission shall give such bond as may be fixed by the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads of the Department of Agriculture, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all duties required by this act. The commission shall elect a chairman and a vice chairman from its members, and may establish rules and regulations for the government of its own business. A majority of the members shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 9. The commission shall have no capital stock or shares of interest or participation, and all revenues and receipts thereof shall be applied to the purposes specified in this act. The members of the commission shall be entitled to a per diem compensation for their services of $10 for each day actually spent in the business of the commission, but the maximum compensation of the chairman in any year shall not exceed $2,500 and of each other member shall not exceed $500. The members of the commission shall also be entitled to receive traveling-expense allowance of 10 cents a mile for each mile actually traveled on the business of the commission. The commission may employ a secretary, treasurer, engineers, attorneys, and such other experts, assistants, and employees as they may deem necessary, who shall be entitled to receive such compensation as the commission may determine. All salaries and expenses shall be paid solely from the funds provided under the authority of this act. After all bonds and interest thereon shall have been paid and all other obligations of the commission paid or discharged, or provision for all such payment shall have been made as hereinbefore provided, and after the bridge shall have been conveyed to the Illinois interests and the Kentucky interests as herein provided, and any ferry or ferries shall have been sold, the commission shall be dissolved and shall cease to have further existence by an order of the Chief of the Bureau of Public Roads made upon his own initiative or upon application of the commission or any member or members thereof, but only after a public hearing in the city of Cairo, notice of the time and place of which hearing and the purpose thereof shall have been published once, at least 30 days before the date thereof, in a newspaper published in the city of Cairo, and a newspaper published in Ballard County, Ky. At the time of such dissolution all moneys in the hands of or to the credit of the commission shall be divided into two equal parts, one of which shall be paid to said Illinois interests and the other to said Kentucky interests.

SEC. 10. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize or permit the commission or any member thereof to create any obligation or incur any liability other than such obligations and liabilities as are dischargeable solely from funds provided by this act. No obligation created or liability incurred pursuant to this act shall be an obligation or liability of any member or members of the commission but shall be chargeable solely to the funds herein provided, nor shall any indebtedness created pursuant to this act be an indebtedness of the United States.

SEC. 11. All provisions of this act may be enforced, or the violation thereof prevented, by mandamus, injunction, or other appropriate remedy brought by the attorney general for the State of Illinois, the attorney general for the Commonwealth of Kentucky, or the United States district attorney for any district in which the bridge may be located in part, in any court having competent jurisdiction on the subject matter and of the parties.

SEC. 12. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

On page 9, line 24, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"(a) Notwithstanding any restriction or limitation imposed by the act entitled 'An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes', approved July 11, 1916, or by the Federal Highway Act, or by any act amendatory of or supplemental to either thereof, the Secretary of Agriculture may extend Federal aid under such acts, for the construction of said bridge, out of any moneys allocated to the State of Illinois with the consent of the department of public works and buildings of said State, and out of any moneys allocated to the State of Kentucky with the consent of the State highway commission of said State."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING MINING LAWS, TERRITORY OF ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3843, to repeal an act of Congress entitled "An act to modify and amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved August 1, 1912.

There being no objection the Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act to modify and amend the mining laws in their application to the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes" (37 Stat.L. 242–243), approved August 1, 1912, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

SEC. 2. That the general mining laws of the United States, so far as they are applicable to placer-mining claims, are hereby extended to and declared to be in full force and effect in said Territory of Alaska: Provided, That nothing herein shall be held to change or affect the rights acquired by locators or owners of placer-mining claims heretofore located in said Territory under the act herein repealed.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 7, insert a new section, to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. This act shall take effect 30 days subsequent to the date of convening of the first regular session of the Alaska Territorial Legislature which is held after the passage of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DIMOND, under authority from the Committee on the Territories, offered the following amendments: Page 1, line 6, after the comma following the figures "1912", strike all of the remainder of the section and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the amendatory act of March 3, 1925 (43 Stat.L., 1118), be and the same are hereby repealed."

Page 1, line 8, strike all of section 2 down to and including the word "Alaska" on page 2, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the general mining laws of the United States so far as they are applicable to placer mining claims, as heretofore extended to the Territory of Alaska, and amendments thereto, except those repealed by this act, are declared to be in full force and effect in said Territory."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COLUMBUS DAY

The Clerk called the next resolution, H.J.Res. 10, requesting the President to proclaim October 12 as Columbus Day for the observance of the anniversary of the discovery of America.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this to be another national holiday? If it is, I am against it. We have entirely too many already.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No; this is just to order the flag to be placed on all public buildings.

Mr. BLANTON. It is distinctly understood that in the passage of this resolution it in no way even attempts to establish a new national holiday?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. No.

Mr. BLANTON. That is understood?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is understood.

Mr. BLANTON. We do not want any more national holidays. I have been stopping them for years.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon officials of the Government to display the flag of the United States on all Government buildings on October 12 of each year and inviting the people of the United States to observe the day in schools and churches, or other suitable places, with appropriate ceremonies expressive of the public sentiment befitting the anniversary of the discovery of America.

With the following committee amendments:

Line 7, page 2, strike out "October 12 of each year" and insert in lieu thereof "said date".

Page 2, line 4, after "proclamation" insert "designating October 12 of each year as "Columbus Day and"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DECLARATIONS OF INTENTION

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 8317, to extend the validity of declarations of intention beyond 7 years.

Mr. CARTER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point on the bill H.R. 8317.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, House bill 8317 amends the naturalization law with respect to the validity of declarations of intention after 7 years. Under the present law a declaration of intention, or what is commonly known as the "first paper" in an alien's application for citizenship, is valid for 7 years only.

If an alien, for some reason or other, after filing his declaration of intention, fails to file a petition for naturalization, or fails to qualify for citizenship within 7 years, he must file a new declaration of intention and wait 2 years before he can file a petition for naturalization. The petition for naturalization under no circumstances can be filed before 2 years have expired from the date of the declaration of intention, irrespective of whether the declaration of intention be the alien's first, second, or third.

The 7-year limitation on a declaration of intention accomplishes no good purpose, because compelling an alien to file a new one and wait 2 years does not improve him in any manner, shape, or form, nor does it make him better fitted to become a citizen of the United States. It is a useless gesture and smacks of a penalty for something which an alien probably could not avoid or control.

During the present economic depression the declarations of intention of a large number of aliens have expired, because lack of funds made it impossible for them to proceed with their second and last step in their naturalization proceedings.

These aliens should not be penalized to the extent of having to file another declaration of intention and waiting 2 years before they can file the petition for naturalization.

Many other aliens who are anxious and willing to become American citizens as soon as they possibly can and who apply themselves diligently, fail to qualify within the 7-year limit, because, notwithstanding their efforts, they do not acquire within that time the required knowledge of our language and our laws. This class of aliens should not be put through the inconvenience of filing a second declaration of intention and of waiting 2 years.

Inasmuch as the 7-year limitation of a declaration of intention accomplishes no known good purpose, and since it is an empty gesture and imposes an unnecessary hardship on a large number of aliens, the law should be amended so as to validate all declarations of intention that have already expired, and to remove the limitation as to future declarations of intention.

HOMESTEAD LAWS AND RIGHT-OF-WAY FOR RAILROADS IN ALASKA

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7306, to amend section 10 of the act entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right-of-way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved May 14, 1898, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the first paragraph of section 10 of the act entitled "An act extending the homstead laws and providing for right-of-way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes", approved May 14, 1898, as amended (U.S.C., title 48, secs. 461, 462, 463, 464, and 465; U.S.C., Supp. VI, title 48, sec. 461), is amended by inserting after the first proviso in such paragraph as amended, the following:

"Provided further, That any citizen of the United States, after residing on land of the character described for 3 years, as a home, may purchase such tract, not exceeding 5 acres, in a reasonably compact form as a home site, without any showing as to his occupation, upon payment of $2.50 per acre, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided further, That the minimum payment for any tract sold under this act shall be $10, and no person shall be permitted to purchase more than one tract: And provided further, That surveys of said home sites shall be made under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 13, 1926 (44 Stat. 243), and without expense to the applicant, where the applicant has a habitable house on the land which he has occupied as a homestead or headquarters for 3 years, while engaged in trade, manufacture, or other productive industry in Alaska, or where during a period of 3 years the applicant has maintained his residence in a habitable house on the land in the manner and to the extent required by the 3-year homestead law of June 6, 1912 (37 Stat. 123)."

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 9, after the word "Interior" strike "and provided" and insert "Provided further"

Page 2, line 12, after the word "tract" insert the following: And provided further, That surveys of said home sites shall be made under the provisions of the act of Congress approved April 13, 1926 (44 Stat. 243), and without expense to the applicant, where the applicant has a habitable house on the land which he has occupied as a homestead or headquarters for 3 years, while engaged in trade, manufacture, or other productive industry in Alaska, or where during a period of 3 years the applicant has maintained his residence in a habitable house on the land in the manner and to the extent required by the 3-year homestead law of June 6, 1912 (37 Stat. 123).

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SALE OF REAL ESTATE UNDER DECREE OF UNITED STATES COURT

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 1567, amending section 1 of the act of March 3, 1893 (27 Stat.L. 751), providing for the method of selling real estate under an order or decree of any United States court.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice this bill provides that real estate may be sold at private sale, whereas at the present time it must be a public sale.

Mr. COCHRAN of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. ELTSE of California. I also notice that the sale may be made for two thirds of the appraised value. Does not the gentleman think that is too great a differential? That is 33⅓ percent of the appraised value.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. But the gentleman will notice that the court of its own motion cannot order the private sale.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I object to this bill.

PURSERS AND LICENSED DECK OFFICERS OF VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5038, authorizing pursers or licensed deck officers of vessels to perform the duties of the masters of such vessels in relation to entrance and clearance of same.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever, under any provision or provisions of any statute of the United States, it is made the duty of the masters of vessels to make entry and clearance of same, it shall be lawful for such duties to be performed by any licensed deck officer or purser of such vessel; and when such duties are performed by a licensed deck officer or purser of such vessel, such acts shall have the same force and effect as if performed by masters of such vessels: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall relieve the master of any penalty provided by any statute for failure to enter or clear.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment suggested by the Treasury Department.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLAND: Page 2, line 3, beginning with the word "penalty", insert the words "or liability", and, after the word "statute", strike out the rest of the sentence and insert the words "relating to the entry or clearance of vessels", so that the proviso beginning in line 2 of page 2 will read: "That nothing herein contained shall relieve the master of any penalty or liability provided by any statute relating to the entry or clearance of vessels."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COCHETOPA NATIONAL FOREST

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2862, to add certain lands to the Cochetopa National Forest in the State of Colorado.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill if this does not withdraw from entry 177,000 acres of land.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. It does. I wish to say to the gentleman that this bill and the next bill are bills of my colleague the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], who is ill at his hotel. He asked me to look after them.

I am not familiar with the details of the bills, except that I know these lands are a natural part of the forests to which they are adjacent. They are valuable only for timber purposes, and might just as well have been originally included in the forest. Any rights that have been initiated in them are reserved.

It is reported by the Forest Service that they can be administered without any additional cost; that, as a matter of fact, they can be better cared for and protected as part of the forest than if not included in the forest.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PIKE NATIONAL FOREST, COLO.

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 2858, to add certain lands to the Pike National Forest, Colo.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

DISABILITY OF SENIOR CIRCUIT JUDGES

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7356, to provide, in case of the disability of senior circuit judges, for the exercise of their powers and the performance of their duties by the other circuit judges.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in case the senior circuit judge of any circuit is unable because of illness to exercise any power given or to perform any duty imposed by law, such power or duty shall be exercised or performed by the other judges of that circuit in the order of the seniority of their respective commissions.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CHICKAMAUGA AND CHATTANOOGA NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7200, to provide for the addition of certain lands to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park in the States of Tennessee and Georgia.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask for an explanation of this bill? Will the gentleman state its general purpose and what it accomplishes with reference to the extension of the national park?

Mr. McREYNOLDS. In answer to the gentleman's question I desire to be just as brief as possible, because I know that other Members are very anxious to have this calendar called, and we have very little time left.

This bill proposes to give the Secretary of the Interior the right to accept the Chattanooga-Lookout Mountain Park as a part of the Chickamauga-Chattanooga National Military Park. The Chattanooga-Lookout Mountain Park contains some 3,000 acres and is situated around the point of Lookout Mountain, which was the battle ground during the Civil War, and also it was on this point that the historic Battle Above the Clouds was fought. Some few years ago the Chattanooga-Lookout Mountain Park, a corporation, was organized by Mr. Adolph Ochs, of New York and Chattanooga. Mr. Ochs conceived the idea of buying up this land around the point of Lookout Mountain and making a hanging garden. Quite a number of other people in Chattanooga were also founders of this organization, but to Mr. Ochs goes the credit of suggesting the idea and putting up to a great extent the money used. Several hundred thousand dollars have been spent on this park in beautifying it, in planting shrubbery, and in building pathways, and so forth, through it. Mr. Milton Ochs has been in charge of this property.

Mr. Adolph Ochs, with his associates, now are offering to give this to the United States Government free and unencumbered, to be made a part of the Chickamauga-Chattanooga National Military Park. There is a spirit of patriotism shown by those who wish to make this donation to our Federal Government so these grounds can be preserved as part of our park system and as a part of the history of this country.

I feel proud of the fact that I have had an opportunity to draw this bill and present this matter to the Congress, and I know that it will meet with your unanimous approval. I am sure no one would object to its passage.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to accept on behalf of the United States lands, easements, and buildings as may be donated for an addition to the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park lying within what is known as the "Chattanooga-Lookout Mountain Park (a corporation, Adolph S. Ochs, president) and/or any lands within 1 mile of said Chattanooga-Lookout Mountain Park in the States of Tennessee and Georgia.

SEC. 2. That all laws affecting the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park shall be extended and apply to any addition or additions which may be added to said park under the authority of this act.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS ADJACENT TO NATIONAL FORESTS IN COLORADO

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 3206, for the exchange of lands adjacent to national forests in Colorado.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the operation of this bill, lands outside of the exterior boundaries of national parks may be exchanged for lands within?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Yes; lands lying within 6 miles of the present existing boundaries.

Mr. ELTSE of California. In other words, by this bill you can create a leopard-spot park?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. No; the real effect of this will be to consolidate existing parks. This bill was introduced in the last Congress by my predecessor. It was reported favorably by the Committee on Public Lands and approved by the Department of the Interior and by the Agricultural Department. Upon investigation, I found that a similar bill had been passed in 1929 for the State of Montana, and that since then similar bills have been passed for the forests in Oregon, South Dakota, and New Mexico. I have received many endorsements from county commissioners, chambers of commerce, and other civic bodies.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Is it not a fact that one of the difficulties we have had in our national parks has been private holdings within the parks, and we have been trying to get rid of this situation for years? In this bill it is proposed to reverse the situation and exchange lands within the park for lands outside of the park.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I am afraid the gentleman is confusing national forests and national parks. May I state to the gentleman how this bill will operate. There is a lot of cut-over stumpage bordering these forests. A lot of this land was in private ownership, and there is a lot of stumpage along the borders of the forests. The Government can take this land in exchange for grazing lands inside the forests or for timber or timberlands and foster new growths on the cut-over lands.

I should like to call the gentleman's attention to this statement from the Forest Service about the operation of similar laws we already have in effect:

Since the enactment of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922, up to December 31, 1932, 923 of these exchanges have been effected, and through them the Government has acquired 1,395,359 acres in exchange of 432,268 acres, and national-forest stumpage valued at $2,775,357. On the lands acquired there has been stumpage which has exceeded in volume that given in exchange by the Government.

Also the Forest Service, referring to the operation of the acts passed for Montana, Oregon, South Dakota, and New Mexico, says:

These laws have uniformly been found to operate to the mutual advantage of both the Government and the landowner, and no case has ever arisen giving the slightest cause for criticism. I know of no reason why such a law should not operate with equal success in Colorado.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I may say that this is not an innovation. It has been approved by the Department of Agriculture and by the Interior Department, both of which have to O.K. these transfers.

Mr. ELTSE of California. In the next bill the gentleman is asking the same thing with reference to other material parks.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I want this bill for my own State. If the other gentlemen do not want the general bill for their States they may object when we come to it. I found they were doing this piecemeal in other States all over the country, so I conceived the idea of having a general bill, and later I introduced the bill, H.R. 5368.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

CONSOLIDATION OF NATIONAL FOREST LANDS

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5363, to extend the provisions of the Forest Exchange Act of March 20, 1922, (42 Stat. 465).

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

OFFICERS OF UNITED STATES NAVAL AND MARINE CORPS RESERVE

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 7357, to amend section 109 of the United States Criminal Code so as to except officers of the United States Naval and Marine Corps Reserves not on active duty from certain of its provisions.

Mr. ELTSE of California. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman why it was that Naval and Marine Corps Reserve officers were not covered in the original act? How does it happen they were excluded from the operation of that act?

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

INLAND WATERWAYS CORPORATION ACT

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 2347, to amend the Inland Waterways Corporation Act, approved June 3, 1924, as amended.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know whether the chairman of the committee that reported this bill is here or not, but apparently this is an attempt to extend to the Inland Waterways Corporation an additional franchise to operate on the Snake River and Columbia River. Back where I come from we have had some experience with the Inland Waterways Corporation. It operates a few scows out of Chicago, because political influence has reversed the flow of the Chicago River, draining needed water from the Great Lakes. I think that we have given them a lot more than they are entitled to, including water. I am going to object to this bill, because it is an extension of a grant which should never have been given any public or private corporation.

Mr. WHITE. May I ask the gentleman to withhold his objection. I am the author of this bill, and it is simply to amend the act to include the Snake and Columbia Rivers and put them in the same status as the Mississippi and the Warrior Rivers. This does not make any change in the act except it includes these two rivers and gives them the right to navigate on the Columbia and Snake Rivers. This grants them the same privileges on the Snake and Columbia Rivers that they have now on the Mississippi and the Warrior Rivers, and will afford the farmers of the tertory tributary to these rivers a means of moving their products, particularly wheat, to tidewater by river transportation.

Mr. O'MALLEY. If the gentleman had had any experience with how they operate in our section of the country, I do not think he would feel they could do his country much good by operating on the rivers out there through a congressional franchise.

Mr. WHITE. This has nothing to do with drainage.

Mr. O'MALLEY. They will get around to doing some drainage in some way. In fact, although Lake Michigan water is really being pilfered to operate power plants, the excuse for the pilfering is that it is needed to make navigation possible.

Mr. WHITE. This is just to supply the farmers who raise wheat out there a means for transporting their wheat to market, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. I should like to accommodate the gentleman, but our experience with rivers used by the Waterways Corporation shows that they are the excuse to bring about drainage of the lakes. I am impelled to believe that whenever they get the right to a franchise on a river, they will manage to get enough water to navigate through trick legislation or on some other basis. A navigation plea is a good front for water thievery, anyway it is used.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. O'MALLEY, Mr. ZIONCHECK, and Mr. TRUAX objected.

CALIFORNIA STATE PARK SYSTEM

The Clerk called the next bill, H.R. 5927, to provide for the selection of certain lands in the State of California for the use of the California State park system.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That subject to valid rights existing on the date of this act, the State of California may within 5 years select for State park purposes by legal subdivisions all or any portion of the public land not reserved for public purposes in the following townships:

Upon the submission of satisfactory proof that the land selected contains characteristic Joshua growth and scenic or other natural features which it is desirable to preserve as a part of the California State park system, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause patents to issue therefor: Provided, That there shall be reserved to the United States all coal, oil, gas, or other mineral contained in such lands, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same at such times and under such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That any patent so issued shall contain a provision for reversion of title to the United States upon a finding by the Secretary of the Interior that for a period of more than 1 year the land has not been used by the State for park purposes: And provided further, That in order to consolidate park areas or to eliminate private holdings therefrom, lands patented hereunder may be exchanged with the approval of and under rules prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior for privately owned lands in the area hereinbefore described of approximately equal value containing the natural features sought to be preserved hereby.
